Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not understand the nature of the request made by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate gave unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill; the clerk reported the bill. Then the Senator from Nebraska offered an amendment proposing to strike out all after the enacting clause, which was the amendment read by the clerk. That is the status of the bill at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator from Nebraska asking for immediate consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft] has been advised of the measure?

Mr. BURKE. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. McNARY. I will say frankly that there was some disturbance in the Chamber, and I did not hear the request. Probably I would not have consented to it if I had known of it, because I do not think we should legislate in this fashion so early in the session; but, inasmuch as that has been accomplished, I am inquiring about the matter.

This measure appertains, does it not, to the situation in Ohio?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Has the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft] been advised of this measure?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; fully, and the matter is brought up with his entire approval. In fact, it was the junior Senator from Ohio who introduced a similar bill in the Senate. He has been entirely apprised of these proceedings and hopes action may be taken at this time, as the matter has been long delayed.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BURKE. I do.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Donahey] has been advised of this matter.

Mr. BURKE. I myself have not talked to him; but Representative JENKINS, who handled the bill in the other House, told me he had conferred with the senior Senator from Ohio, and that the bill now meets also with his full and hearty approval.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the request was made and granted. I do not want that statement to be interpreted as meaning that if I had been here I would have objected; but I desire to ask the Senator a question, because this subject has been one of controversy within the social security organization, and between certain persons in that organization and the Senators from Ohio and others. May I ask whether all that controversy has been ironed out?

Mr. BURKE. It has been completely and entirely ironed out, and the amendment now proposes to refer the matter to the Social Security Board, so that they may go over it and determine the amount. Every one in the Board, the general counsel, the Administrator, both Senators from Ohio, and all, are in complete accord and agreement on the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to congratulate the Senators who have brought about that agreement. I am delighted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW JACKSON, THOMAS JEFFERSON, AND THE SPOILS SYSTEM

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on Monday I introduced two measures which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Those bills extend the provisions of the law recently passed by Congress, placing restrictions and limitations upon the right of Federal employees to participate actively in elections.

The bills introduced on Monday extend that legislation to those employees in the States whose employment is made possible by payments from the Federal Treasury. It is not my purpose today to discuss those measures, but it has been pointed out to me that it was quite a coincidence to introduce on Jackson Day measures prohibiting political activity of employees. Monday was Jackson Day. While it was merely a coincidence that the bills were introduced at that time, I would not have hesitated to introduce such legislation on the day our party sets apart to pay honor and tribute to the memory of Andrew Jackson.

Presently, I hope I can make it clear that Andrew Jackson was not the spoilsman people generally credit him with being. There is a side to the public life and character of Andrew Jackson which is not stressed as I should like to see it stressed.

In the speeches made throughout the country last Monday I have failed to find much discussion of the real achievements of President Andrew Jackson. I myself attended the Jackson Day dinner here in Washington. As always, I greatly enjoyed the occasion, and greatly enjoyed the speech of President Roosevelt. While the President's remarks did not center around President Jackson or his administration, nevertheless the President used in that speech a striking phrase which sticks to my memory. That observation was made with reference to Andrew Jackson. The President said:

By their motives shall ye know them.

I should like to make some contribution to the real understanding of President Andrew Jackson and the motives which actuated him throughout his entire public life. For that reason I take the floor of the Senate today to make these brief observations concerning President Jackson and his motives.

Recently I have been reading a very interesting book by Mr. Hugh Russell Fraser, entitled "Democracy in the Making." This book deals with the Jackson-Tyler era, and gives quite a different picture of Andrew Jackson than is usually portrayed in the histories of the country. In addition to using Mr. Fraser's work quite extensively in the preparation of these remarks, I asked him to give me additional memoranda and data such as he might have. He has very kindly furnished me with that information, and much that I say today shall be the direct result of Mr. Fraser's work and research.

With the author of Democracy in the Making I entirely agree that we think of the dollar sign too much in estimating the achievements of Andrew Jackson. No President of the United States ever fought the organized money power as did Andrew Jackson. It was no slight contest which was waged by President Jackson against the money power of his day. It was grim, determined warfare, carried on by both sides with little thought of quarter; it was a battle to the finish.

I quite agree with the President that "by their motives shall ye know them"; and no person can understand the real Andrew Jackson without knowing something about the motives which actuated him.

In the book by Mr. Fraser to which I referred in the beginning and, incidentally, which has won high endorsement by men like Charles A. Beard, Claude G. Bowers, William E. Dodd, William E. Woodward, and others, many new facts are assembled.

On May 10, 1837, there broke one of the greatest depressions this country has ever known. On that day the New York banks closed. The great Bank of the United States of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia shut down on the following day, and in a very short time all its branches all over the country shut down, as did all other banks. Business was at a complete standstill. Rioting broke out in New York and other cities; prices tumbled, and men and women here in rich America were crying for bread. The remarks made at that time remind us strangely of the present day and time, and of only a few short years ago.

The great American philosopher, Ralph Waldo Emerson, said:

Society has played out its last stake. It is checkmated. Young men have no hope. Adults stand like day laborers idle in the streets. None calleth us to labor.

And Daniel Webster said:

It is inconceivable that conditions can ever right themselves. Trade and industry are disorganized. Securities have fallen to one-half and even one-fourth of their value. Unemployment has become general. Wheat is selling in the West for less than 50 cents a bushel.

When this happened, Mr. President, Andrew Jackson had been only a month and a few days out of the White House, and many of our historians have blamed Jackson and his supposedly reckless financial policies for this, our first great depression.

Yet what is the actual truth? What caused that depression? I will tell the Senate what caused it. It was speculation—speculation in the public lands. Andrew Jackson had tried to stop that speculation. Three times he had recommended to the Congress that the public lands cease to be a football of speculation and that they be limited to actual settlers. But three times, Mr. President, Andrew Jackson was virtually ignored. Congress refused to act, and speculation in the public lands rose to a dizzy height. Everybody was speculating in the public lands—merchants, laborers, farmers, mechanics, bootblacks. Paper towns in Wisconsin were bought and sold in New York. Did the settlers get the public lands? No; they got what the speculators let them have. Millions of acres were held off the market, and Andrew Jackson's advice was ignored. A crash was inevitable.

The other day the distinguished and able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]—and when I say "the distinguished and able Senator from Michigan" I mean that not as a courtesy but exactly as I feel—brought forth a newspaper clipping from the old Washington Globe saying that the first Jackson Day celebration was held in honor of paying off the national debt. That is true, Mr. President; but he did not tell all the story. He did not tell us that it was the wild and reckless speculation in the public lands—the very thing that brought on the depression of 1837, and which Andrew Jackson tried to stop—which made it possible for the Federal Government to pay off the national debt on January 1, 1835.

Make no mistake about it. The speculators bought vast tracts of land from the Government at $1.25 an acre and sold and resold them; but they bought so much that the Treasury was able to pay off all its obligations, and a surplus was piling up—a tremendous surplus—mostly in paper money of no value at all; and when the crash of 1837 came it was proved of no value.

But the point I am getting at here, and the point I want to call to the attention of the Senate, is that Jackson's motives were invariably sound and patriotic. He wanted to aid the settlers, not the speculators; and if he had had his way and the sale of the public lands had been limited to actual settlers in 1832, when he made his first recommendation, or in 1834, when he made his second recommendation, it might not have been possible to pay off the national debt on January 1, 1835. Perhaps the Budget might not have been balanced. Andrew Jackson knew that, and yet he continued to recommend that the sale of the public lands be limited to actual settlers. That is a story not told in our history books.

Just as Jackson's motives were patriotic with respect to the public lands, so they were with respect to the Bank of the United States. I do not have to go into that story. In that matter, as is well known, he fought and won for the common people against a gigantic banking monopoly operating on the credit of the Government.

"By their motives shall ye know them!" said the President of the United States. How about some others of Jackson's motives?

The distinguished Senator from Michigan quoted from the Washington Globe as to the extinguishing of the national debt. Let me also quote from the same newspaper an editorial by Frank Blair, Jackson's "brain truster":

The Whigs—

They were the antecedents of our present Republicans—have been forced to vote for the gold bill, which is a measure hostile to the interests of the bank, will supersede its notes and is the harbinger of a real, sound currency.

What was the gold bill? It was a bill put over by Jackson's floor leader in the Senate, reducing the gold content of the dollar. Think of it; here was the Democratic Party supporting and Andrew Jackson signing a bill providing for a reduction in the gold content of the dollar from 247.5 grains to 232 grains, and thus establishing for the first time in our history the ratio of 16 to 1. The distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is very familiar with that fact and knows of the vision with which Jackson sought to serve the people, not the bankers; and he will bear me out in my statement in this connection.

I could, Mr. President, cite a score of other significant acts of Andrew Jackson, especially his effort, ignored by Congress, to set up a central Government bank, again, all with the purpose of preventing the exploitation of the people; but I must discuss briefly the most amazing and most persistent myth that was ever connected with Andrew Jackson's name. I refer to the myth that he was a spoilsman or that he ever subscribed to the dogma that "to the victors belong the spoils."

Andrew Jackson, of course, never uttered that phrase. Nor did he subscribe to it, and presently I will show why I make this assertion.

But turn for a moment from this sordid phrase to Andrew Jackson's real record. The most reliable figures as to the number of removals made by Jackson were given in the Washington Telegraph for September 27, 1830. These figures are cited in "Democracy in the Making," page 111, as follows:

This break-down of removals by departments has never been overthrown by dependable evidence. It covers the period to September 1830, it being conceded that Jackson made few removals after that date. By this estimate Jackson replaced 543 postmasters out of 8,356. Increase this number by more than half again and the result is 843 postmasters out of 8,356. Compare this with Jefferson's 109 out of 433.

In the War Department Jackson removed 3, in the Navy 5, State 6, Treasury 22 (and here let me state that most of these were for corruption and defalcations uncovered by Amos Kendall), marshals and district attorneys combined 30, surveyors 7, registrars 16, consular and diplomatic 7, appraisers 8.

In fact, Mr. President, out of some 11,000 officeholders, the best available evidence shows that Andrew Jackson removed a total of 919.

This is well below the ratio for Jefferson, and far below that of Van Buren and William Henry Harrison, and nothing like the clean sweep that followed the election of Lincoln.

Why, then, has Jackson been slurred with the tag of "spoilsman"? Let me quote again for a moment from Democracy in the Making, page 112:

The origin of the special identification of Jackson with the spoils system is not hard to understand. In April 1830 John Holmes, of Maine, took the floor of the Senate to charge that Jackson had removed 1,981 persons within a year of taking office. He produced a set of figures which, he said, proved it. Subsequent investigation showed that his figures were false. Meanwhile, however, the opposition press took up Holmes' charges, widely publicized his bogus estimates, and from these sensational charges and false figures grew one of the greatest myths in American history—namely, that the spoils system in the United States originated with Jackson.

In point of fact, the spoils system was a gradual development, and no man can be singled out for special blame. Indeed, Prof. Erik Eriksson, author of the only complete and exhaustive study made of patronage under Jackson thus far available, arose from his painstaking and carefully documented analysis with this conclusion:

"The small number of Jackson's removals proves that he was not a true spoilsman. It is admitted now that President Jefferson removed about the same proportion of officeholders as did Jackson, and, further, the principles governing the removals were essentially the same. Therefore it is evident that no more blame should attach to Jackson than to Jefferson. If one would be just in his estimate, he must admit that the development of the spoils system was a gradual process for which no one man or administration should be blamed."

Incidentally, many of Jackson's removals were for fraud. Tobias Watkins, Auditor of the Treasury, was found to have stolen $7,000. He was a close personal friend of ex-President Adams; yet he was arrested, convicted, and imprisoned. The collector at Perth Amboy was discovered to have misappropriated $68,000; the collector at Elizabeth City, N. C., $32,791; the collector at Buffalo gave false receipts for money never paid and was credited with it at the Treasury; the collector at Bath, Maine, stole $56,315; the collector at Portsmouth engaged in smuggling; the collector at Petersburg stole $24,857; indeed, shortages of more than $280,000 were discovered in the Treasury Department alone. Had the law of 1820 been enforced, many of these defalcations would have been brought to light.

Much of the fraud during the Adams administration, however, may be traced to the mental attitude of hundreds of clerks who, believing they had lifetime jobs, lived extravagantly and, getting deeper and deeper in debt, finally misappropriated Government funds. When these unfortunates were removed they found themselves in desperate straits, and some, when facing prosecution, committed suicide.

Jackson, in writing to his friend Gen. John Coffee, said:

The most disagreeable duty I have to perform is the removals and appointments to office. There is great distress here, and it appears that all who possess office depend on the emolument for their support, and thousands who are pressing for office [ask] it upon the ground that they are starving. These hungry expectants, as well as those who enjoy office, are dangerous contestants over the public purse unless possessed of the purest principles of honesty; and when any man can get recommendations of the strongest kind, it requires great circumspection to avoid imposition and select honest men.

Mr. President, I know there are many people, perhaps some in this Chamber, who frankly and avowedly believe in the spoils system, and like and admire Andrew Jackson because they think he, too, believed in it. I, of course, dissent from that view.

In connection with this subject of Andrew Jackson's being a spoilsman, I quote from a very interesting work by William E. Woodward, entitled "A New American History," in which Mr. Woodward says:

Jackson was not the spoilsman that he is reputed to have been. He never said "To the victors belong the spoils." That was said by Marcy of New York, and it must be asserted here in fairness to Jackson that he never believed in the philosophy it expressed. Bowers says that more than two-thirds of all Government employees during Jackson's 8 years of administration were members of the opposite party.

Channing points out that only 252 Presidential appointees of the preceding administration out of a total of 612 were removed; and that of the 8,600 postmasters in the country, Jackson removed no more than 600. Many of the conspicuous removals were for fraud.

It must be remembered, however, that in Jackson's day, even as perhaps in our own time, the pressure on the President for appointments to office was exceedingly heavy. Something of the pressure placed on Jackson is revealed in The Rise of American Civilization, by Charles A. Beard and Mary R. Beard, where they say:

As soon as the chiefs were installed, a survey of the gentlemen in Federal berths commenced. "No damn rascal who made use of an office or its profits for the purpose of keeping Mr. Adams in or General Jackson out of power is entitled to the least leniency save that of hanging," wrote one of the President's applicants. "You may say to all our anxious Adamsites that the barnacles will be scraped clean off the ship of state," declared a member of the kitchen sanhedrin, "most of them have grown so large and stick so tight that the scraping process will doubtless be fatal to them."

Following the recitation of these threats, the authors continue with their summary of the spoils system under Jackson:

Though the threats were terrifying, in fact the slaughter of the innocents was not as great as the opposition alleged. Indeed, many got only their just desserts; some of the tenants were found to be scoundrels, prosecuted, and convicted for fraudulent transactions while public servants, one of the "martyrs," a personal friend of Adams, being sent to prison for stealing from the Treasury. No doubt hundreds of old and faithful officers were ousted; but on the other hand hundreds were allowed to retain their places in spite of the severe pressure from the Jackson followers, begging for jobs.

It is therefore to the memory of the President to say that like Clive in India, he had reason to be proud of his moderation.

Here the authors continue with their statement to the effect that the custom of wholesale removals from office for party purposes began under Jackson. Yet, even if such removals did begin under Jackson, there is abundant evidence to show that Jackson himself never subscribed to the principle of awarding jobs for party service. Probably the innermost thoughts of Jackson on the subject of removals are expressed in a letter written to his friend, Gen. John Coffee, and which was contained in the quotation previously mentioned. Do the words of that letter sound like the words of a spoilsman? To me the words, "The most disagreeable duty I have to perform is the removals and appointments to office," can hardly be called the words of a machine politician.

There is great distress here, and it appears that all who possess office depend on the emolument for their support, and thousands who are pressing for office [ask] it upon the grounds that they are starving.

The deep concern revealed by these words is not usually associated with one who ruthlessly discharges and fires employees here and there to build his own or his party's political welfare.

These hungry expectants, as well as those who enjoy office, are dangerous contestants over the public purse unless possessed of the purest principles of honesty; and when any man can get recommendations of the strongest kind it requires great circumspection to avoid imposition and select honest men.

Concern for the public purse, moving with great caution to avoid imposition and to select only honest men, are principles befitting the greatest, wisest, and best of statesmen. Such were the principles and motives of Andrew Jackson. I cannot help believing that this letter written to his friend, and without doubt from the depths of his heart, portrays Andrew Jackson as he was—honest, sincere, devoted to country and to duty. The letter is not the letter of the spoilsman. I am grateful to the author for having included this letter in the work he has prepared so painstakingly.

Such research as I have been able to make on the subject of patronage and the spoils system generally compels me to agree with the writers I have quoted. The spoils system cannot be blamed upon any one man or any one administration. Certainly it cannot be laid on the doorstep of President Andrew Jackson.

I make these remarks merely for the purpose of paying some measure of tribute to a great American whose patriotism and statesmanship, in my opinion, are not fully understood and appreciated by the great mass of American people. I hope that the motives which inspired Andrew Jackson may be the motives of every American citizen.

Mr. President, in speaking as I have concerning Andrew Jackson and in the brief reference I made to another great Democrat, Thomas Jefferson, I would not want to be understood as indicating at all that I consider Thomas Jefferson as a spoilsman, for I do not. Thomas Jefferson definitely declared his opposition to Federal employees participating in elections. Jefferson attempted to stop electioneering by governmental employees and had the following order proclaimed by the department heads:

The President of the United States has seen with dissatisfaction officers of the General Government taking, on various occasions, active part in elections of the public functionaries, whether of the General or the State Governments. Freedom of election being essential to the mutual independence of governments * * * so vitally cherished by most of our constitutions, it is deemed improper—

I remind Senators that I am still quoting from Thomas Jefferson—

it is deemed improper for officers depending on the Executive of the Union to attempt to control or influence the free exercise of the elective right. * * * The right of any officer to give his vote at elections as a qualified citizen is not meant to be restrained, nor however given, shall it have any effect to his prejudice; but it is expected that he will not attempt to influence the vote of others nor take any part in the business of electioneering, that being deemed inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution and his duties to it.

On February 2, 1801, Thomas Jefferson, writing to Governor McKean, said:

Interference with elections, whether of the State or General Government by officers of the latter, should be deemed cause of removal because the constitutional remedy by the elective principle becomes nothing if it may be smothered by the enormous patronage of the Federal Government.

Thus wrote Thomas Jefferson in 1801.

Andrew Jackson himself, in an inaugural statement, declared it was the duty of the President to prevent the patronage of the Government from interfering in the freedom of elections.

In the beginning, Mr. President, I referred to the bills I introduced on Jackson day—measures intended to prevent the elective principle being smothered by the enormous patronage of the Federal Government; measures intended to prevent the patronage of the Government from interfering in the freedom of elections. These principles were the inspiration of the legislation enacted at the last session of the Congress. Those of us who believe in such legislation advocate it with a strong and vigorous belief that in so doing we are but carrying out the principles of these great and distinguished American patriots, the patron saints of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson.

It is my strong hope that the start made at the last session of the Congress will be continued for the ultimate welfare and good of our country.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM RECOMMENDED BY AMERICAN LEGION, DEPARTMENT OF KANSAS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD the recommendation for a legislative program made by the American Legion, Department of Kansas, as set forth in a letter to me from Errett P. Scrivner, department commander. The program follows:

- (1) Provide for continuance of the Dies committee.
- (2) Improve our national defense by increase in naval and air forces and in modern equipment for all military forces.
- (3) Curb subversive activities.
- (4) Stop all immigration, at least until our own unemployment problem is solved.
- (5) Universal finger-printing of all citizens, and the finger-printing and registration of all aliens.
- (6) Reasonable compensation for widows and orphans of veterans.

In addition to this program, Commander Scrivner writes me as follows:

We believe that this Nation can keep out of the present European conflict, and that all honorable concessions should be made to avoid our being involved.

Incidentally, as part of our national-defense program, we can see no valid objection to voluntary military training in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. President, I think that program, on the whole, is a good one for Congress to follow during the present session.

The Dies committee has justified its existence, and I have no doubt that its work will be continued. Our national defense program must be adequate to meet whatever emergencies we may face, but at the same time I think the appropriations proposed should be carefully scrutinized. In fact, I believe it would be desirable to have a complete study made of national defense expenditures and policies for several years back. I want adequate defense, but I do not believe it is either necessary or desirable to indulge in or permit wanton extravagance, or the initiation of undesirable policies in the name of national defense.

This is no time to encourage immigration, when millions of our own people are unemployed and on relief rolls. I will support a program of reasonable compensation for widows and orphans of veterans; to do less would be unworthy of a great Nation.

I certainly believe we can keep out of the European war. It is not our war, and we should exert all our energies to keep out of it.

I am glad to place before the Senate these worthwhile recommendations from Department Commander Scrivner of the Kansas Department of the American Legion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the Chair). Does the Senator from Kansas request that the memorandum be referred to any particular committee?

Mr. CAPPER. No, Mr. President. I read into the RECORD the recommendation for a legislative program made by the American Legion, Department of Kansas.

EMERGENCY POWERS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Charles Edison to be Secretary of the Navy is on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. Edison has sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a letter urging certain legislation of a most extraordinary nature.

For myself, I am not willing to have the nomination acted upon without calling attention to the proposed measure. I would not want, even by implication, to be placed in a position in which it might be thought that I had endorsed any such legislation.

The measure, if enacted, would confer power, or seek to confer power, to seize and confiscate property, such as factories, ships, and other materials, to cancel or modify contracts and agreements, and to interfere with the personal rights of the citizen and his personal liberty—all this to be done in time of peace before a declaration of war upon the part of this Government.

The theory seems to be that in a so-called emergency these arbitrary powers are to be called into existence and exercised. I am unable to ascertain that any explanation, or reason, or arguments accompanied the request or the proposed measure. The bill also provides that in case a factory refuses or fails to comply with its terms, the President may fix a reasonable price, all of which in contemplation of law would be an act of confiscation.

It seems to me that under all the circumstances and the fact that it is based purely upon a question of emergency and not of war, the act would be arbitrary and clearly unconstitutional. It would be in violation of the most fundamental principles of constitutional government and of democratic processes.

It is fair to Mr. Edison to say that, in 1917, the Congress included in its Naval Appropriation bill provisions granting power similar to the powers urged by Mr. Edison. In that instance, however, the law provided that "in time of war" or "of national emergency." Now, however, the provision "time of war" is to be stricken out, and the law is to depend solely upon the question of "an emergency." I am not going to discuss, because it has no relevancy at this time, the question of what could be done "in time of war." I think there are a great many things that cannot be done "in time of war," but there is no need of going into that question. I am dealing now with the question of a mere claim of emergency. May these powers be granted, some of which are in plain violation of the Constitution, on a claim of emergency? We are proceeding to enact such legislation, not in an emergency connected with war, but in an emergency isolated and alone. I venture to say that no justification for any such authority can be found in constitutional law or in constitutional principles.

If we can do what is provided in this bill because of an emergency, unless that emergency is one which brings the Congress within the war powers of the Government or the terms of the Constitution, then we could also provide, in case of an emergency, for the suspension of the Bill of Rights. We could prohibit free speech, free press, and the right of trial by jury. Under the terms of this measure, as it is urged, there would be no limitation of the powers of Congress if we could only head the bill with the declaration of "an emergency." To me it is a startling proposition. It tends to show how far we have traveled, or are traveling, in the exercise of purely arbitrary powers.

If it should be declared that an emergency exists and that this emergency was of such a nature as to make trial by jury unsafe and unwise, or to make public discussion and free debate contrary to the public interests, we should be quite within the principles of this proposed law.

It should never be forgotten that an emergency does not create power. It does not increase power. Such power as may be found in the Constitution may be exercised because of an emergency, but the emergency itself does not add to or create power. In fact, as we all know, the Constitution was adopted in a period of great emergency. Its grant to the Federal Government and its limitation of power were determined in the light of emergency, and they are not to be altered in any way, shape, or form by emergencies.

Mr. President, democracy is having a pretty tough fight with arbitrary power and with arbitrary governments. The distinguished South African statesman, General Smuts, recently declared that there is less of personal liberty in the world today than there was 150 years ago. That the fight is going against democracy at the present time seems to be believed by practically all, and there are those who believe that democracy will ultimately lose. Nowhere is this more evident than in democracies themselves. Such legislation as now proposed and the seizure of every opportunity to discredit democracy and democratic processes, hastening at all times to advertise the efficiency and the necessity of arbitrary powers, are telling most against democratic principles and democratic processes. Arbitrary governments the world over boast of their superior capacity in meeting the world's problems and point to the admitted practices and methods of democracy to prove their claim. Faith in democracy is dying. Its principles and its methods are not breaking down. Under the cry of emergency we strike down the rights of the citizen and thus advertise to the world again and again that democracy cannot cope with modern exigencies as against the competition of centralized power. With marvelous magnificence the little democracy of Finland has demonstrated to the world the falsity of this cowardly lie.

This bill is only a sample. Many bills have been introduced based upon the same principles as the proposed measure. The Congress could render no greater service to the world for free government and bring to it no greater distinction than by denouncing and striking down these measures one after another.

It is important, vitally important, that we expose and punish, as we are now engaged in doing, the activities of those whose "isms" run counter to the principles of our Government. Whenever and wherever we can reach them through legal methods, let us reach them; and once having laid hands upon them under the law, neither apology nor flimsy excuse nor misguided mercy should interfere with their punishment. The most vicious enemies of human liberty, the most dangerous to free institutions, are the treacherous foes who seek shelter under the laws and institutions which assure free speech, free press, and personal liberty, and then make use of this shelter to destroy the Government which protects them.

It is living up to our own teachings and principles which really counts in this great struggle for the preservation of free institutions. Introducing bills and passing laws which strike at the letter—and if not the letter, the spirit—of democratic principles—these are the things which undermine and break down faith in democracy. Measures introduced and urged which are in themselves impeachments of the whole scheme of democracy do infinitely more harm than a thousand Communists chattering on the street corners. Such attempts at legislation, or such legislation, soon teaches the people that nothing stands between them and their liberty, the rights of property, except the construction which political exigency or the technical views of courts may give to the word "emergency." The jealousy which we should at all times feel and exercise toward every encroachment upon the great principles which protect the rights and the liberty of the people gives way to a search for methods of escaping the force of these principles.

Mr. President, in this period of almost universal assault throughout the world upon the rights, the privileges, and the liberties of the average person, we in America may not sufficiently realize that we have in our Bill of Rights found in our Constitution a complete guaranty against the destruction of the principles in which we believe. So long as the Bill of Rights stands and is preserved in its integrity, so long as we live up to its terms and conditions, there can be no denial of free speech, of free press, no religious persecution, no arbitrary government, no concentration camps, no breaking into homes, no unlawful arrests, no denial of personal liberty.

When so-called emergency legislation strikes at this sacred document in any particular it should be stricken down without hesitancy. If doubts are to be indulged in, they should be resolved against all possible encroachments. The glory of the Bill of Rights is that it is a restraint upon government as well as upon individuals; that it protects the rights of the people against those who have been entrusted with power and who have betrayed their trust. And not only are our interests involved, not only is this Bill of Rights a sacred document of the American people, but when the time comes—as, please God, I am sure it will come—that the oppressed people of the world begin to fight their way back to civilization and away from the frightful "isms" which engulf them in misery and slavery, they will look to this Bill of Rights as embodying their hopes and ideals and will judge it according to the worth and the efficiency which we have by our acts and words given it. Not long ago a traveler from a totalitarian state, after spending months in America, said to his people, "Before any progress can be made in breaking down American institutions, a way must be found to discredit the American Bill of Rights." I have said it is a sacred document. If human liberty is sacred, this document is sacred.

Mr. President, I am interested only in this bill. I do not desire to object to the nominee personally. I know nothing against him. I have understood that he said the measure went up as a matter of routine, basing his proceeding largely upon what had happened during the war. I am also informed by the press that the able chairman of the House committee dealing with this subject has intimated strongly his opposition to the bill. I am speaking therefore to the question of the measure only; I want to record my views against the measure and to give notice that those views will later, if necessary, be urged. But I was not willing to have the confirmation acted upon without a record as to views which are held here with reference to the bill itself.

PROGRESS REPORT OF NATIONAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

To the Congress of the United States:

The provision for the wise use and conservation of our national resources must necessarily be one of the primary responsibilities of the Federal Government at all times. Through research leading to the development of programs and recommendations the National Resources Planning Board and its predecessors have been at work for the past 6 years in the interest of planning for resources conservation and use. This is democratic planning. It is decentralized; it is based on the wishes of the people who, through their elected representatives, decide what plans we will develop and follow; it is planning "from the ground up."

The accomplishments of the National Resources Committee in a large measure have been the results of cooperation with Federal and non-Federal planning groups. Today there are planning organizations by various names in many Federal agencies; there are also 43 State planning boards and hundreds of county and city planning groups. The continuance in operation of these democratic planning activities demonstrates the desire of our people for the utilization of long-range planning to conserve and develop our resources.

The functions and duties of the National Resources Committee, as you know, were transferred under Reorganization Plan No. 1 to the National Resources Planning Board in the Executive Office. The story of the committee's work and a picture of the responsibilities that lie ahead of the National Resources Planning Board are presented in the progress report of the National Resources Committee, which I now transmit for the information of the Congress.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1940.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several judicial nominations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service now before the Senate be confirmed en bloc; they are all promotions in the Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations referred to are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Public Health Service appearing on the calendar may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT OF CERTAIN CONFIRMATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the vacancy in the office of our representative in Canada has existed for some time, and inasmuch as it is planned that the Senate shall adjourn over until Monday next, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Canada, and of the other diplomatic nominations which have been confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 15, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Immortal God, O Love Divine, Thou who hast borne our sins upon the tree and tasted the sharpness of death for every man, hear our prayer. We praise Thee that Thou hast opened the kingdom of heaven for all mankind. Forbid, dear Lord, that we should by neglect, indifference, or shameless greed crucify Thee afresh. O Lamp of God, that shines from the heights of yonder sacred hill, the Light which comes from the breast of eternity, shine upon the nations. Let the voice of God, full of wisdom and affection, fall upon all peoples and shake the earth. By the blessed thought of Him who for earth's freedom died and lives again, let us choose the righteous side and thus hope and pray to turn the trembling scales of the sad world's sorrow. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is distinctly not a partisan matter about which I address the House at this time. It is a matter which concerns every Representative of the American people.

I have long noticed countless evidences of insolence and arrogance on the part of two-bit nitwits in the Federal service in the District of Columbia, but this morning there came the crowning evidence of that action on the part of any one of these Federal taxeaters. I called Mr. Paul Edwards, who has the privilege of being the head of the W. P. A. for the District of Columbia and asked for an appointment with him for one of my former constituents. I was told by his secretary that Mr. Edwards was "too big and too busy" a man to be annoyed by such matters. I told her I wanted an appointment with him. She said if Mr. Edwards could find a vacant place on his calendar he might grant me an audience.

I wish to say to the Members of this House that the time has come to curb the insolence, the arrogance, and the impudence of such persons in the Federal employ, who seem to think that they are the masters of the people who are paying their salaries, instead of their servants. [Applause.]

I wish to say to the House that we are the Representatives in Congress of all of the people of the United States, who pay the taxes and carry the load of government. I wish to say that impudence to us is impudence to those whom we have the honor to represent. I for one have had more than enough of it, and I am willing to join with other Members of Congress to do anything and everything possible to curb this bureaucracy at the first possible moment. [Applause.]

During the time that I have been a Representative in the Congress, which, I believe, is more important than the position occupied by Mr. Edwards, I have never considered myself "too big or too busy" to receive into my office any person who comes there asking for an interview. The taxpayers of the United States pay my salary and pay that of Mr. Paul Edwards, of New Jersey, and I believe that the time has come when the Congress of the United States, representing, as it does, the voters and taxpayers of this great country, should recognize the fact that the situation in Washington has grown well-nigh intolerable and something should and must be done about it at this session of Congress. There are any number of persons on the Federal pay roll in the District who have grown fat in their own conceit and consequently insolent, impudent, arrogant, and insulting to those who seek to interview them on matters of public importance on which they, these insolent bureaucrats, are employed. The time has come, in my opinion, for the Congress of the United States to take back into their hands the government of this great people and to restore it to the sources from which it originally sprang, to the citizens and the taxpayers, rather than to the tyrannical, despotic, insolent, and impudent control of such bureaucrats as Mr. Paul Edwards, his office staff, and those who conduct themselves in like style. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to pay a tribute to the late Representative Sirovich on behalf of the Democratic steering committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the legislative business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of the 1941 Budget.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement entitled "The American Forum of the Air," containing brief statements by Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor; Gov. Paul McNutt, Federal Security Administrator; and others. I am informed by the Government Printing Office that the cost of printing this material will be $202.50.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Henry Monsky, president of B'nai B'rith, in honor of Hon. Irving Lehman, Chief Justice of the New York State Court of Appeals, and his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a timely and inspiring statement on Americanism by the Right Reverend James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., bishop of Washington, and also an address by the Honorable Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, delivered at the inaugural meeting of the Inter-American Financial and Economic Advisory Committee at the Pan American Union, November 15, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, when the roll was called yesterday afternoon on the passage of the bill H. R. 801, the antilynching bill, I was attending an agricultural meeting. Had I been present I would have voted "yea."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue through the day, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7805, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House for consideration is H. R. 7805, containing emergency supplemental appropriations made necessary by the President's Executive order of September 8, 1939, declaring the existence of a "limited national emergency," and providing for certain increases in personnel and equipment for the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. The original Budget estimates called for an expenditure of $271,999,523. This amount has been reduced by the committee to $267,197,908, or a net reduction made by the committee of $4,801,615. This net reduction will be further increased during the consideration of the bill, and it is anticipated that the final reduction under Budget estimates will total $7,387,656.

This being the first appropriation bill taken up for consideration, I should like to make a few general observations on the budgetary situation.

PEACE AND SECURITY OF AMERICA

The mind of every thinking American is today gravely concerned with two matters that vitally and intimately affect his peace and security as a citizen and the freedom of our country as a Nation. In the first place he is concerned, if he is a thinking American, about our security from the standpoint of national defense, and our ability to protect our right to peace, should that right be challenged in any form, by any foe.

In the second place, if he is a thinking citizen, he is concerned over the situation of our national economy, and is anxious to see it so coordinated that it will provide economic security and protection for all of our people.

NATIONAL FINANCES

On the economic front, in my judgment, our country faces a critical situation, a condition that challenges the individual and the collective courage, patriotism, and determination of not only the Congress and the Chief Executive but the people of our country.

We are going into the eleventh year when, as a Nation, we have run our Government by deficit financing. The national deficit or the unbalanced Budget is not just the product of the present regime. The disjointed economic condition of our country, the paradoxical situation—that in the richest country on the face of the earth, where, apparently we seem to have too much of everything—too much of wheat, too much of corn, too much of cotton, too much of hunger, too much of nakedness, too much of unemployment, together with deficit financing—is not just an innovation of the New Deal. We inherited it. It came to us from the "good old days." It started way back down the line. It came on to us immediately from the regime of our predecessor, Mr. Hoover. He and his party started the ball rolling with a deficit in 1931 of $500,000,000. Followed then a deficit in 1932 of two billion and a half, and so on. I do not believe it is fair to charge any one person, any one party, or any one individual with the economic situation that exists today. It has been a cumulative affair, and produced by a variety of causes.

But the fact remains that the genius and the purpose of both great political parties in our country, if you please, have not been able to so coordinate our national economy as to meet this challenge. I shall not pause here to recall again the condition of our country when the present administration came into power. That is a vivid picture none will forget. There was a grave and a threatening situation. It has been met. Charge us with our failures and credit us with our accomplishments, and I think the result is one which reflects credit and a sincere desire to serve the country at a time of great national crisis.

Now, it does not take an economist or a Philadelphia lawyer to understand the simple, fundamental fact that no individual and no nation—because the same fundamental truths apply to each—can continue to go ahead spending more than it takes in. [Applause.] Some day, somewhere, somehow, he will run head-on into what we are just about to run into now—pay day! We are up against the ceiling of our national-debt limit; and, my friends, if you think you have had hard problems to tackle, if you think you have had hard nuts to crack, then I would like for you to envision the day when we have sat here, as a Congress, deliberately, and appropriated funds that were not in the Treasury and that we could not borrow and when you have to go to work and increase the national-debt limit of this country.

This is the problem and this is the challenge that we must meet in this session.

MY RECORD

I would like to record here again in the RECORD the fact that year after year, session after session, I have stood in the Well of this House making the appeal that I am making today, admonishing and pleading with my colleagues that we individually and collectively try to take stock of this situation and try to bring about a condition where our expenditures would be more nearly in accordance with the revenues which are collected by the Treasury.

I have persistently advocated a reduction in Federal expenditures and a serious and determined effort to balance the Budget of the Federal Government. I recognized the necessity, during the period of the so-called depression, for the expenditure of large outlays of Federal funds for the purpose of meeting relief needs and stimulating recovery and have consistently supported the President's program in that regard. But I have never subscribed to that school of thought that lavish public spending was sound business judgment or the way to economic stability.

Before the inauguration of President Roosevelt I took a stand on this matter which I have never abandoned, and to clarify the record I want to quote briefly from an address I made in this body on the 29th of December 1932, which is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the second session of the Seventy-second Congress, part 1, page 1067:

In my judgment, there is only one logical way to balance the Federal Budget, and that is in the way we are doing it now, and not in the way we did it in the last session of Congress. At the last session of Congress we worked on a revenue bill first, and my complaint was that we were putting the cart before the horse; that the first duty of the legislative body was to try to cut Federal expenditures as low as they could possibly be reduced without impairing necessary functions of government, and then to raise enough revenue to run the Government. The Government has got to operate. We cannot cease functioning. We have got to have enough revenue to pay the bill; but the first duty of Congress is to see how low it can get the bill, and raise additional revenue as a last resort. That is the program of Governor Roosevelt, as I understand it. The press reports him as saying that he believes the way to balance the Budget is to reduce public expenditures to the lowest possible level and then raise sufficient revenue to pay the bill, meet the expenses of the Government, and that is what Congress is doing now.

On March 30, 1937, I addressed the House at length upon the subject, and take the liberty of quoting a few brief paragraphs from that address:

We have come now to another cycle in this campaign of progress. If we would perpetuate these splendid victories, if we would preserve this equality that we have approximated for our agricultural population, if we would perpetuate this new opportunity that we have given to the laboring people of the country, if we would make steadfast the new security that we have brought to the aged and infirm, if we would try to carry on the opportunities for education and advancement that we have afforded to the youth of our country, then we must with steadfast determination, from now on, speed to the task of achieving another objective which has been delayed of necessity—and that the one which calls for a more even balance between our income and our public expenditures.

In sounding this note I would not wish to suggest for a moment that we retreat from these splendid undertakings or abandon this splendid new service which this Government, under its enlightened leadership, is bringing to our people. Many of these emergency functions properly belong to the States and municipalities; but the Federal Government of sheer necessity had to take them up.

With a return to approximately normal conditions then unquestionably again States and municipalities should move prominently and aggressively into the center of this picture, and the Federal Government, in many instances, should move out.

But here again we could not stand on form and ceremony. The job had to be done, and it had to be done quickly. But we are a foolish people if we seek to blind our eyes to the fact that we cannot go on for an indefinite period without regard to the mounting cost of government. We cannot continue to borrow and spend and spend and borrow unless we are reconciled to meet head-on some day the fiddler when he comes to collect his pay, and come he surely will.

Again, as late as January 24, 1938, I called upon Congress to set our financial house in order, and expressed in that address the very earnest hope that Congress would reassume its legislative prerogative in the matter of appropriations.

One thing I think has been fairly well demonstrated, and that is that you cannot balance the Budget by talking. If eloquent speeches, front-page bombastic statements, and great rabble-rousing orations, or, indeed, very serious and conscientious promises would straighten this thing out and meet the challenge, then it would long ago have been met, because I fancy each and every one of us in the legislative branch, as well as those in the executive branch of the Government, has been long on promises but just a little short on execution. We cannot do it by talk. I remember once some years ago when I had a notion that I wanted to play golf. In fact, I might have been under the illusion that I could play golf, and I persuaded a young friend of mine to go out with me. I went out with him the first day he went around the links. It was a harrowing experience, not only for him and myself but for the rest of the people who were within seeing or hearing distance. When we got back I said, "Well, how do you feel about it?" He said, "I have learned something today." I said, "That is fine; you have made progress if the first time you go around the golf links you have learned one thing, for you have accomplished something. What did you learn?" He replied, "I have learned that you cannot put that ball in the hole by cussing it." Mr. Chairman, you cannot balance the Budget by cussing it and by railing at it. It takes deliberate, firm, and courageous action, and that is what I hope to see during this present session of Congress. [Applause.]

THE PRESENT BUDGET

A few days ago we heard our great President address the Congress on the state of the Union, and then the next day we heard his Budget message read. I was delighted, and, in fact, I was inspired and moved somewhat in the phrase of that good, old Methodist hymn:

This is the day I long have sought
And mourned because I found it not.

Here was a Budget that held out the hope of reducing the national deficit nearly $2,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year. Here was an objective, if you please, a challenge to the Congress to stop the rising curve of the cost of government which threatens the economic security of our country, to stop it on its upward rush and turn it down again. I was delighted. I accept it at its face value in good faith, and for one, I expect to go down the line 100 percent with the President in this attempt to set our economic house in order. What does it promise? It does not promise to balance the Federal Budget in 1 year. Those gentlemen who make speeches of that kind are just trying to "cuss the ball into the hole." Such a thing cannot be done. You could not balance the Federal Budget in 1 year or in 2 years for that matter without almost causing a revolution in this country. You could not so drastically cut governmental expenses in any 1 year without taking all relief away from people in need of it, without drastically cutting the pensions of our soldiers, without drastically cutting the benefits which we have been giving agriculture, and without practically dismantling many of the necessary governmental functions, which it is just as much our duty to maintain as it is our duty to dispense with those not necessary. The Budget cannot be balanced in 1 year unless we want to levy intolerable and burdensome taxes on the people. No one wishes to do this. What we can do, however, is to set an objective, to try to make these two lines meet, reduce our expenditures, discontinue unnecessary functions of government, and at the same time try to increase the revenues of this country. That is the program which the President has outlined in his Budget. That is the objective which he has set. Of course, it does not please some. A friend of mine once speaking about political controversy—and I was trying to get him to make peace with some of his political enemies—said, "I am always for peace, providing I can lead the procession." We, as Congressmen, are always for balancing the Budget and we are for economy if it does not cut something in which we are particularly interested. It will never be done unless we are willing to make some sacrifices.

What is this program which the President has outlined, and what is the objective that he has set before Congress in this session? The Budget for 1941 as transmitted by the President shows an excess of expenditure over receipts, exclusive of debt retirement, to be replaced by borrowing, of $2,876,000,000. The Budget anticipates a reduction of this deficit in the following manner: A return of surplus funds from Government corporations of $700,000,000. I do not know how that is to be done. I have not figured that out, but that is the headache of the executive branch of the Government. I am going to assume they will figure it out and that they will get that $700,000,000.

It contemplates raising $460,000,000 new taxes. That could be done, and it should be done. The people of this country can raise a reasonable amount of additional taxes to help set our economic house in order, and for one I am ready to vote for it whenever the Ways and Means Committee brings us such a program.

On this basis it would leave us a net deficit for fiscal year 1941 of $1,716,000,000 as against nearly $4,000,000,000 in this current fiscal year. If that objective could be accomplished, it would be one of the brightest days that has been attained in the economic history of this country in the present decade. And mark you this: If we attain that objective set by the President, we will then be within $61,000,000 of the total authorized national debt. Everything has to go according to this program or we have reached the ceiling of the national debt limit or gone beyond it. Now, to attain that objective we have a very distinct part, and that is not to, in the aggregate, exceed the amount of budgeted expenditures which the Chief Executive has sent here. I do hope and I do trust that the House of Representatives, under the leadership of the Appropriations Committee, will see to it that if we do go beyond the national-debt limit that it will not be because we have failed to do our part. I do not believe we as Congressmen could perform any greater duty to our constituents in this Congress than to achieve the objective set out by the President in this Budget message. That is, to get back to safe and logical control of our finances.

HOUSE BUILT ON SAND

The Book of Books tells us of a foolish man who built his house on a foundation of shifting sand. The storms came and swept it away. There can be no economic recovery that will last, no real and lasting prosperity that will be secure, so long as our Government runs its fiscal affairs in the red. Such a continued course of procedure is a distinct menace to the economic security of our country. Let me quote to you something the President said on that subject in 1933. Speaking of the unbalanced Budget and deficit financing, he said:

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order, and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rest the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It therefore becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

It is too late for a leisurely approach to this problem. We must not wait to act several months hence. The emergency is accentuated by the necessity of meeting great refunding operations this spring.

We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of the Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy.

That is what our President said in 1933. I believe that that is his philosophy of government today. It certainly is mine. It has been mine from that day to this, as my record in this House will show.

LABOR

May I say to those of you who represent many working people in this country, people who are now working and people who want to work, I do not believe anything would so help that great body of people as to give some encouragement to business and industry that the finances of our Government had been set in order; that it had been brought to a sensible and logical basis; and that business and industry may with assurance go forward and open up with expansion and development in order to give people jobs. I do not believe that those who now work and those who wish to work want gratuities from the Federal Treasury. I do not believe there is anything that would help them more than to try to achieve the objectives set out in the Budget message.

AGRICULTURE

My colleagues who represent the great agricultural population of this country, it is not a complimentary thing to say to the two great political parties—and, my friends, the honors are evenly divided—that the only thing up to this good hour that we have been able to offer agriculture as a solution is bigger and better hand-outs. Oh, on this—the Democratic—side of the aisle we have given them plenty, and on that—the Republican—side of the aisle you gentlemen promise to give them more in the way of subsidies and hand-outs. That is not what agriculture wants in this country. It seems to me there should be a logical solution of this problem. I do not know what it is, but it does seem to me that the purpose and determination of the people of America should be able to find a program, a formula, a solution whereby the man on the farm would be able to get an honest day's living out of an honest day's work. It seems to me the people in America who use the products of his land and the fruit of the sweat of his brow are willing to pay him for an honest day's work. If we are not paying that, then I believe every honest American citizen is willing to pay enough so that he will get it. But I do deplore this idea of at every session of Congress having more and bigger and better subsidies and gratuities. I know that is not necessary, and I know that is not the answer. Any doctor who undertakes to carry his patient on and on and on by giving him a shot of dope every little while is not a very good physician. That is what we are doing with agriculture.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Many years ago I attended a camp meeting and when the minister would give voice to some particularly impressive truth the brethren and sisters over in the "amen" corner would give him a loud "amen." I want to take the opportunity now to say "amen" to what the gentleman has said, that neither party up to this time, notwithstanding the fact that both of them have promised the farmer equality, has carried out its commitments. As the gentleman from Virginia well says, giving them bigger and better handouts does not solve this problem. I trust those who have that phase of the question in charge here in the House will take the gentleman's remarks to heart.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Now, I would like to proceed for a moment or two, if I may, on the other matter that I mentioned, the question of the security of our country from the standpoint of national defense.

As I have said, the present bill, which has in it only the items for the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard made necessary because of the President's Executive order of September 8, 1939, carries a total of $267,197,908.

As reported by the committee, it is $4,801,615 less than the Budget estimates. It provides, in my judgment, a very reasonable and a very conservative, but a very necessary, strengthening of our defense forces. In my judgment, the President of the United States was not only justified but he discharged his duty to the American people as Chief Executive and as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy when he called upon us to give these necessary additional men and implements to our defense forces.

Following is a brief summary of the items:

	Previously appropriated, 1940	Additional amount now requested	Committee recommendation
War Department.....	$742,143,291	$119,999,842	$116,218,345
Navy Department.....	778,188,011	146,049,256	145,082,238
Federal Bureau of Investigation.....	7,300,000	1,475,000	1,475,000
Coast Guard, including Lighthouse Service.....	37,325,087	4,475,425	4,422,325
Total.....		271,999,523	267,197,908

THE INCREASES

The authorized strength of the United States Army, as carried in the regular 1940 bill, was 280,000. We had previously appropriated for 210,000 enlisted strength of the Army. The Executive order raised this 210,000 to 227,000, an increase of 17,000 in the United States Army, and still 53,000 under the authorized strength which Congress had set for the Army. I cite this in answer to the statement that has so often been made that the Chief Executive had seized upon this authority that he had in an emergency to build up unnecessarily our defense forces. The Army, even with this appropriation given in the emergency, is still 53,000 under what the President could have provided for had he wished to exercise to the fullest extent the Executive authority which he had in the emergency.

The Navy: The authorized strength of the Navy, as set by Congress, is 131,485. The authorized strength in an emergency is 191,000. The regular 1940 appropriations which we have passed provided for 116,000. The Executive order raised them to 145,000, or an increase of 29,000, which leaves it still 46,000 under the authorized emergency strength of the Navy.

The Marine Corps: The authorized strength of the Marine Corps is 38,200. The regular 1940 appropriation bill provided for 19,000. The Executive order increased this to 25,000, or an increase of 6,000, which leaves it still 13,200 under what might have been provided for had the President sought to avail himself of his full authority in the circumstances.

The National Guard: The authorized strength of the National Guard is 424,800. We had previously provided for 196,000. The Executive order increased this number to 235,000, or an increase of 40,000, which leaves it still 189,800 below what might have been provided had the President wished to do so.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. This Executive order requires the expenditure of one-quarter of a billion dollars for the increase of the Army and Navy. Can the gentleman tell us to what extent the President, by Executive order, might have increased the functions of the personnel of the armed forces and what the peak expenditure would be if he chose to do so?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The figures I just quoted show, from the standpoint of personnel, what was provided for. They are substantially under what might have been provided for within the discretionary authority of the President. I have no way of translating this into dollar cost, which includes equipment, housing, and the other facilities that go with increased personnel; but, in my judgment, and in the judgment of others who have given a great deal of thought to it, it would probably have been between three-quarters of a billion and a billion dollars instead of the $271,000,000 now before Congress.

Mr. RICH. That is in addition to this $271,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. I think altogether it would have been three-quarters of a billion or a billion rather than one-quarter of a billion.

Mr. RICH. One further question, if the gentleman will permit: As to these Budget estimates about which we are congratulating the President because they represent decreases, does the gentleman believe we may get additional Budget estimates during this session that would increase this amount which the President has already given us?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe that is entirely a question of what the Congress does in the way of new authorizations. I believe that problem is up to us. I believe there will be no other Budget estimates unless they are real deficiencies. I do not believe there will be other Budget estimates, but if Congress undertakes to authorize new experiments and new ventures and new subsidies, then we may expect additional Budget estimates for them.

Mr. RICH. But the gentleman believes that we are not going to get additional Budget estimates because of laws that have already been passed.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe not.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But if we do, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is entirely within the hands of Congress whether we grant them.

Mr. MAY and Mr. LAMBERTSON rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. What I want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia is that the figures he has given indicate that the largest personnel increase made by the President is in the civilian component of the Army that is not on regular pay.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate the gentleman's emphasizing that.

And in that connection may I say the National Guard and the Organized Reserves come in for most generous treatment in these items. The following is a summary of what is carried for the Guard and Reserves:

National Guard:
(a) 12 additional armory drills.....	$6,390,000
(b) Additional 7 days' field training.....	5,360,000
(c) Additional special instruction of officers (591).....	505,000
(d) New motor equipment.....	3,846,000
(e) Individual equipment and miscellaneous collateral expenses.....	3,822,000
Total.....	19,923,000
Organized Reserves:
(a) Active duty of 1,306 Reserve officers other than Air Corps (508 medical and 798 promotion list).....	1,975,000
(b) Active duty, 350 additional officers (Thomason Act).....	520,000
(c) 14 additional days' training for 2,660 14-day trainees.....	471,000
(d) Additional special instruction of officers (283).....	231,000
(e) Earlier employment of Reserve officers on active duty in Panama than previously contemplated.....	121,000
(f) Earlier employment of Reserve officers on active duty in connection with aviation expansion program than previously contemplated.....	200,000
(g) Miscellaneous.....	107,000
Total.....	3,725,000

I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Following out the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, we must not forget that we had 25 or 30 supplemental estimates last year after the regular Budget was submitted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They were deficiency estimates, and there are always deficiency estimates. We must remember that in many instances we have been cutting agencies very close and sometimes real deficiencies come up. This cannot be prevented. There are always supplemental estimates when we pass some new law authorizing new expenditures. But to get back to the matter in hand.

WHY HAVE A DEFENSE FORCE?

Someone says: "It is not any use to do this. Whom are we getting ready to fight? Who is going to jump on us? Why all this preparation?" This same argument would be just as legitimate and just as good against having any Army or Navy at all. We are not going to fight anybody and nobody is going to jump on us; therefore we do not need any Army or Navy at all. Such an argument in a time like this is not impressive. When you take out an accident policy suppose someone would ask you: "What are you getting ready to do to yourself? Are you going to run your car over a bank, or break your neck?"

If you take out a fire-insurance policy on your house or store, do you contemplate a fire sometime soon? That is, usually, you do not. You are simply taking reasonable and logical precaution against what might or could happen to you.

AMERICA PREPARES FOR PEACE

Mr. Chairman, if there is one thing that America has learned from world conditions, I hope it is that anything can happen anywhere. Let us not as citizens ever be foolish enough to say that "it cannot happen in America." It can happen here. We are not getting ready to make war upon anyone. America is preparing, not for war but for peace. America is arming, not for war but for peace. This program which the President has sent to us as an emergency program is not a war program. It is a peace program. America has always stood for peace. Our traditional policy has been to live in good fellowship and neighborliness, in peace and in accord, with the other nations of the earth.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, never has our battle flag been unfurled in a war of conquest. We have no enemies which we wish to punish and no grudges which we wish to settle. We only ask—we demand the right, however—to live under our own chosen form of government, and we do not want any other nation, or any group, or any concourse of nations, to come here and undertake to tell us what to do about it.

A few years ago under the administration of Mr. Harding there was held a peace conference in the city of Washington. Chief Justice Hughes presided over this conference. Great Britain, France, Italy, and other nations came and sat around the conference table. This was a conference to limit naval armament. A treaty or an agreement was drawn up, but hardly had the ink of the parties signatory become dry until they were back home figuring out ways to get around the solemn obligations which they had made.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of what happened to the United States Navy after that conference, does not the gentleman think we ought to be relieved of listening to that story again at this time? The gentleman knows we had in process of construction the greatest Navy in the World at that time, and as a result of that conference nearly half a billion dollars of the taxpayers' money was wasted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate the suggestion that we should not say anything about that; however, we should profit by experience. I want to remind you of a few things when there is talk about America becoming a swash-buckling, saber-rattling Nation. We came out of that conference, and Irvin Cobb said that we took a worse licking in that conference than we would ever take or had taken on the field of battle. We came out of that conference and scuttled the greatest Navy that any nation on the face of the earth ever had, provided we had carried it on to completion. We had in the course of construction the greatest Navy that ever sailed the seas of the world. We had previously expended $330,000,000 on the building of those great battleships. Some of them were from 50 to 55 percent complete, and we are told that it cost us $25,000,000 to scuttle them. We scuttled those ships in the interest of trying to bring about peace and disarmament among nations. Chief Justice Hughes said it was the most magnificent gesture in the interest of world peace that had ever been made by any civilized nation.

AMERICA FOR PEACE

Our country wants peace. The President in October 1937, speaking at Chicago, said:

America hates war. America hopes for peace; therefore America diligently searches for peace.

Of course, we shall continue to search for peace, but while we are continuing this search for peace we will follow the admonition of another Roosevelt, who said, "Speak softly, but carry a big stick."

May I say to you, my fellow American citizens, that if our eyes are open and our ears attuned to what is happening, we must know there is only one peace argument which the dictators of Europe understand. That is that the other fellow has a little bigger gun. [Applause.]

I for one am not willing to take the responsibility of disarming and dismantling our country and leaving it to be the prey of whoever may wish to come along in the days to come. We shall continue to search for peace. We shall continue to try to live in the ways of peace and when that day comes, and it will come, when the war-weary nations of the earth are ready to listen to reason, then I hope America will be ready to offer its good offices, its sound judgment, and its vigorous leadership toward trying to bring about a lasting peace. But until that time comes we must continue to see to it that our country is prepared.

Someone has said:

Only he deserves freedom and liberty who is prepared to win it for himself every day.

O Freedom! Thou art not, as poets dream,
A fair young girl, with light and delicate limbs,
And wavy tresses gushing from the cap
With which the Roman master crowned his slave
When he took off the gyves. A bearded man,
Armed to the teeth, art thou; one mailed hand
Grasps the broad shield, and one the sword; thy brow,
Glorious in beauty tho' it be, is scarred
With tokens of old wars; thy massive limbs
Are strong with struggling. * * * Oh! not yet
May'st thou unbrace thy corslet, nor lay by Thy sword; nor yet, O Freedom! close thy lids
In slumber; for thine enemy never sleeps,
And thou must watch and combat 'til the day
Of the new earth and heaven. * * *

Mr. Chairman, in this critical hour the American people look to Congress to point the way to national peace and internal security. Let us not fail them.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken too much time of the Committee, and if there are any questions I will try to answer them. When the bill is read under the 5-minute rule there will be ample opportunity to give detailed information.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman one more question? I notice quite a bit of publicity about a joint committee being appointed to study the finances of the Federal Government. Yesterday the Senate passed a resolution asking the House Appropriations Committee and the Ways and Means Committee to join in appointing a committee to make a study of the finances of the Federal Government as well as our spending program. Does the gentleman believe the House will participate with the Senate in this worthy project, and what does he think will be accomplished if we go into it? Does he not think it would be a wise thing if the House leaders joined in that investigation?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I can only speak for myself personally, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because I do not know what the leadership of the House think about it or what other members of the Appropriations Committee think.

I believe such a conference, before the present Budget came to Congress, between the revenue-raising groups of both bodies and the appropriating groups might have been most helpful to the Chief Executive in sending his Budget to the Congress. Of course, any conferences that now may be held whereby we can make retrenchments should be encouraged and looked upon with great favor. I do not know exactly what is in the mind of the gentleman who proposed this conference. Again I want to reiterate that you cannot do anything by talking. You cannot do anything by conferring. It takes affirmative action.

Speaking now specifically to the practical problem, five of the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives began hearings on appropriation bills immediately after Thanksgiving. Speaking of my own independent offices subcommittee, we had weeks of careful hearings. No conference such as has been suggested could possibly know as much about the intricate details of that bill, covering forty-some Government departments, as the subcommittee knows. The majority and minority members have worked on it, and I can say that when we bring that bill in here it is going to be very substantially below Budget estimates, and these cuts will be made in a way that we do not believe will cripple any useful Government function. This statement, I believe, can apply to four or five other appropriation bills.

Mr. RICH. It certainly ought to gain this end, however, that it will give enlightenment to the Senate so that they will not keep on increasing the House appropriation. For the last 5 years they have increased every appropriation we have sent over there. If this plan will only do that much good, it certainly ought to be worth while.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, anything that will help to hold down appropriations will be worth while, but I wish to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that I am not so much concerned now as to what another body may do. I know very definitely and very positively that if this House of Representatives will in its heart determine that we are going to hold down expenditures, it does not much matter what anybody else does. What I want is a united determination in this Congress to attain this objective, so that if anything happens to it, no man, no woman, no group can point their fingers at the Congress and say, "You are the cause of this thing's happening." [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as we begin this session of Congress we are faced with problems of a type that have seldom confronted a Congress. Our direct national debt today is approximately $42,000,000,000; that is, the acknowledged direct national debt which appears upon the daily Treasury statement.

In addition, there is another debt, a direct positive debt that is liquidated, amounting to over $1,600,000,000, on account of annual gratuities that have been contracted to be paid by the United States Housing Authority under the Housing Act. Further, there is approximately $6,000,000,000 of contingent liabilities where we have guaranteed the bonds of different organizations. In addition to that amount, there are enormous sums of contracts entered into by various local housing authorities which the Federal Government has guaranteed, and it is absolutely impossible at this stage to tell where we are on those liabilities.

Besides these amounts, at the present time, based on the present status and with the present requirements for the payment of annuities, there is an obligation beyond the amount that can be figured out as possible receipts under the Social Security Act under title II of what I estimate to be exceeding $10,000,000,000, and I hope to have actuarial figures to present to the House before long. There is probably an obligation under the employees' retirement fund beyond the amount present receipts will provide of several billions of dollars. I expect to have an actuarial estimate to present to the House later in the session. Therefore, the total national debt at this time is approximately $60,000,000,000.

Now we are presented with a Budget calling for $8,400,000,000 of expenditure. I have that Budget in front of me. There are a good many points about it that I do not understand, and I do not know whether anyone else understands it.

I find on page XX that estimated receipts on account of social security, titles II and VIII, taxes, are $632,000,000. The amount provided for transfer to trust funds, which would be largely on that account, is $225,000,000. In other words, $407,000,000 of funds that should go into trust funds are not provided to be set up that way, and there is no place where they could be so set up.

I also find that item of $700,000,000 about which the gentleman from Virginia spoke as return of surplus funds from Government corporations. I pray to God that this $700,000,000 will be returned to the Treasury.

There is a statement indicating that the national defense expenditures for the fiscal year 1940—that is, this current fiscal year—will approximate $1,359,000,000. I call attention to the fact that as of the first of the year the expenditures were running at a rate which would exceed that, with the progressive increases we have to expect, by at least $100,000,000. The estimated appropriations for national defense for 1941, according to this table on page 19 of the Budget, are $1,539,000,000. For the current fiscal year our total appropriations and contract authorizations for the Army, without figuring on the $267,000,000 which is provided in the pending bill, ran approximately $900,000,000, and for the Navy $812,000,000. The total in the pending bill of $267,000,000, added to the other two items, will make a total of approximately $1,915,000,000, or practically $2,000,000,000. I confess that I am unable to understand that kind of budgeting.

The statement calls for a reduction in the amount of the working balance in the Treasury of $1,150,000,000 for this current fiscal year. What the national debt will be by the end of the fiscal year 1941 it is almost impossible to tell. At any rate, the deficit that shows on the balance sheet, without figuring in the other things that have added to the national debt, is going to be upward of $4,000,000,000.

Yesterday the Senate passed a resolution providing for a set-up of 24 Members, 6 of the Senate Finance Committee, 6 of the Senate Appropriations Committee, 6 of the House Ways and Means Committee, and 6 of the House Appropriations Committee, to study the Budget that has been presented. God knows we do need to study that Budget, and we know that unless there is a better understanding of the problem that we are facing, we are not going to accomplish results along the line of cutting down the appropriations. There has got to be a large group in this Congress that understands the menace to the financial integrity of America before we are going to be able to keep our appropriations down where they belong. Eight billion four hundred million dollars is more than we can possibly raise by taxation. This resolution provides, among other things, that the committee shall attempt to formulate a comprehensive fiscal program which will tend, ultimately and at the earliest practicable date, to bring revenues and expenditures into balance.

Let me say to you that the Appropriations Committee, if it is going to keep these expenditures down where they belong, needs not only the cooperation of the top members of the Ways and Means Committee, but it needs the cooperation and the support of the entire Congress [applause]; and we are not going to get anywhere except by getting out to the people the serious menace we are facing in respect of our fiscal situation, so that they understand the problem we are up against and realize that something must be done to place America upon a sound footing and place her where she is not dependent upon gratuities and grants but upon the sound earnings of her people. [Applause.]

Frankly, I do not believe the House of Representatives can afford to turn down a gesture on the part of the Senate looking to an understanding on the part of the Congress as a whole and of the people generally of this fiscal situation. I believe we should take advantage of that opportunity to bring to the attention of the American people the responsibility that not only belongs to the Executive, to the Senate, and to the House of Representatives, but to the people of the United States. We are not going to get the kind of support we need to balance the Budget unless the people of the United States understand how serious the situation is.

I now want to talk for a few moments about the bill that is before us now. It calls for an appropriation of $267,000,000, a very considerable part of which is to take the place of funds that were spent by order of the President, issued on the 8th of September, at a time just before he called the Congress to meet on the 21st of September. If there was need at that time for funds to increase different items of our defense, those items should have been submitted to this Congress when it convened on the 21st day of September and not spent for some other purpose than that for which they were appropriated, because to the Congress belongs the power of making appropriations. The proper way to meet emergencies is to let the Congress pass upon the need of such appropriations.

Now, frankly, in my own opinion, many of these items are too large. I am not going to attempt to outline them at this time, but as some of them are reached I am going to call attention to them and attempt to put some of them in line. Some of them I would not question at this time, because they relate to some items of restoration of appropriations for the maintenance of our fleet, which absolutely must be maintained. Some of them relate to the operation of our patrol off the coast. Some of that, undoubtedly, is necessary. Whether all of it is necessary or not, I, frankly, do not know enough to answer.

A large part of the additional expense that relates to the one-hundred-and-thirty-odd million dollars that goes to the Navy with reference to engineering, construction, and repair, relates to the reconditioning of the old destroyers of the 1918 to 1923 vintage, which have been out of commission at Philadelphia and San Diego, and putting them back into commission. The funds that were provided for the regular maintenance of the fleet are being used for this purpose and, unquestionably, we have got to replace these funds regardless of whether the way that the job was done was the right way to do it or not and regardless of whether the recommissioning of those ships was needed or not.

Frankly I doubt if we need to increase the personnel of the Navy as much as this provides for. I doubt if we need to increase the personnel of the Army as much as has been provided for. I doubt if we need as much for the maneuvers as is provided for, because I do not see any sense in 4 months of maneuvers, but I do not see any valid reason for objecting to the increase that is asked for in the National Guard, increasing the annual drills by 12 and the number in the National Guard by approximately 40,000. I do feel that there are substantial savings that could be made in this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. A few years ago it was stated that we would soon be a billion-dollar Nation in the preparation for war. I call attention to the fact that in 1939 we appropriated for the Army and Navy over $2,200,000,000. Last year it was a good bit over a billion and a half. From what the gentleman knows of the appropriations for the Army and the Navy, does he have any idea of what the Congress is going to be requested by the President to appropriate through Executive order, as well as the regular routine of appropriations for the Army and the Navy?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is asking me to do an impossible thing, that is, to read the mind of the President. I anticipate that the appropriations that will be asked for, including construction of naval vessels, and the meeting of contract authorizations heretofore adopted by this Congress, will run very close to $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941, although the Budget estimates do not run that high at the present time. They run nearly that, because there is a supplemental provided for of $300,000,000 for 1941, which would make their total approximately $1,839,000,000, besides the administrative expenses, which I have not in mind now, but which undoubtedly will be $100,000,000.

Mr. RICH. What does the gentleman figure will be the annual operating cost additional to the Federal Government when this program is concluded, or by the end of 1941? How much additional will the annual upkeep be?

Mr. TABER. It is difficult to answer that. It depends on the manner in which we spend money for airplanes, the cost of them, and all that sort of thing. The regular pay and maintenance of the Army itself is easy enough to compute, but when you come to the matter of airplanes and that sort of thing, that is something beyond the ability of anyone to foretell. It depends very largely on the improvements that result in airplanes, and the increases in cost that result from the present hostilities across the water, and no man in the world could estimate anything about that intelligently, or answer that question intelligently. There are four or five hundred million dollars that might go into that particular matter in a year. On the other hand, something might result from those hostilities that would develop a different type of warfare besides the air, and it might develop that some other type is more useful, which might be less expensive. The gentleman is speculating too much there to get anywhere.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the President had suggested that the working balance be reduced in excess of a billion dollars?

Mr. TABER. He has stated that he was planning to reduce the working balance in the Treasury during the fiscal year 1940, that is, by the end of June next, by $1,150,000,000. That appears in the Budget on page XIX.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Taking our January 1 figures roughly, the working balance is $1,700,000,000. If a reduction of that kind should be put into operation—

Mr. TABER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but the balance shown on January 5 is $2,449,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has included all your gold and your seigniorage. I am talking about the actual working balance as shown on the Treasury sheet as $1,700,000,000 on January 8. If we take the $2,000,000,000 plus, you will have to utilize the so-called free gold held now, plus your seigniorage, to have anything at all.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us go back to the $1,700,000,000 actually in balance as of January 8.

Mr. TABER. One billion seven hundred and forty million dollars.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you take a billion-plus out of that, you would have an actual working balance brought down to around, say, four or five hundred million dollars, which would be ridiculous to talk about with the volume of disbursements running as they are now. We saw an illustration of that in the past calendar year when the market weakened on Government bonds. The Treasury must look ahead and must necessarily have a very large working balance on hand to prevent a real catastrophe in the market value of Government bonds. It seems to me that thing should be literally exploded, blown to pieces, in this discussion.

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman is correct, except that with disbursements running approximately $700,000,000 a month, that working balance, with business conditions such as we face, of $550,000,000 or $600,000,000 is rather low.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, there is two and a half billion dollars involved. Now, with reference to the seven hundred million which is to be taken from the capital structures of present Government agencies, has the gentleman gone into that sufficiently to give us any additional information as to where those funds are to be drawn from and what agencies are to be affected and how much those capital structures are to be reduced?

Mr. TABER. I have not been able to do that. I do not know just how it could be done.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Was there a statement made before your committee of what the national emergency is which requires these expenditures?

Mr. TABER. Well, it was the enforcement of neutrality.

Mr. MASON. Under the 300-mile limit?

Mr. TABER. Well, I do not think it was limited to that. It was the enforcement of neutrality.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Well, who are we to enforce it against? Is that shown in the hearings? Why do we have this force, and against whom is it to protect us?

Mr. TABER. Frankly, with the situation as it exists, I can see reason for elaborate patrol of the territory outside of our coasts, because there are so many ships running around without lights all over the sea that there are likely to be disasters beyond the ordinary range. I can see where there would be considerable criticism on the part of our own public if we were not in position to guard our own ships on some sea lanes. I do not anticipate at the present time any attack on the part of any foreign country against us. Of course, you can never tell when some other country might feel that she wanted us in the hostilities on one side or the other. I can see why, within moderate reason, we need to have our house in order to meet a situation, but we do not need to go too far.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Virginia said that the President's proposal for economy was a challenge to the Congress. Now, with reference to this particular bill, is it not a fact that all of the appropriations here are authorized not by authorization of the Congress, but are authorized by the President's Executive orders, and that, instead of this being a challenge to the Congress, this is simply a presentation to the Congress of a bill by the President in which he says, "Here is what I have done under Executive order and this is what it costs to pay for it." Is that not the case?

Mr. TABER. That applies to probably 50 or 60 percent of the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Now, let me suggest another question. At about the time these Executive orders were made Congress was in special session?

Mr. TABER. Congress was about to be called to meet and was to meet within a few days.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion, would it not have been better to have presented this program to the Appropriations Committee, to present the facts and evidence there, and let the committee decide whether they wanted to make these appropriations or not, instead of going ahead and putting this program into effect by Executive order and then calling upon the Appropriations Committee to furnish the money?

Mr. TABER. Unquestionably that is the proper way for the Executive to proceed.

Mr. MOTT. I say this with this in mind: That I am in favor of a very large Army and an adequate Navy, but under the circumstances I do not think that an Executive order was the proper way in which to put this program into effect.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. If it is possible to advise the Congress that $700,000,000 will be available to be returned from Government agencies, does not the gentleman think it would also be possible for us to be advised as to what agencies might return that money, and how much?

Mr. TABER. I think that is correct. I would like to see them return it now. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate that there have not been more Members present today to listen to these fine, illuminating speeches by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. We should consider it a great honor to listen to such a splendid gentleman as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], presenting this bill, and such a splendid gentleman as the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], explaining the facts and philosophies of the measure.

It may not be facetious if I say to you that it is too bad also there are not more people here to listen to what I am going to say [laughter and applause], because it may not be too violent an assumption on my part to say that what I am going to talk about may also be very interesting. The subject is interesting, but whether I discuss it interestingly or not will remain to be seen. But I dare say you will agree with me that right now there is probably no question so engrossing, so universal in its interest, as the question of whether our President is going to seek a third term. I want to discuss that proposition as to whether he or any other President should seek a third term.

Mr. Chairman, there is a lively public interest shown in whether any President should ever run for a third term. This interest is intensified by the imminence of a Presidential election and by propaganda. This is not a new question. It has come up periodically since Washington declined a third term. Heretofore, as now, the reason or excuse for pressing the agitation has usually been that an inordinately large and ravenous group of Federal employees and Cabinet officers were seeking to perpetuate themselves.

The President, by reason of his departure from the well-known policies of the Democratic Party, has divided that party. His adherents call themselves new dealers, leaving the others to call themselves Jeffersonian Democrats. This cleavage is stronger in its animosities than the cleavage between the Jeffersonian Democrats and the Republicans. So strong is this cleavage that only recently when I was debating with Hon. Charles West, one of the best known and ablest of the new dealers, he was asked from the audience where would a Jeffersonian Democrat be classified under the arguments that we were advancing for our respective sides. Mr. West replied, in substance, that he could not and would not assume to speak for the Jeffersonian Democrats, for he himself was not one of them.

That is a very significant statement when one of the substantial Democrats of the Nation out on the hustings is forced to admit that there is a group who call themselves Jeffersonian Democrats to which he cannot readily belong. If it has come to the time when many Democrats cannot be Jeffersonian Democrats, then the Democratic Party must be facing a serious division. If there is any man in our history who is an authority on this question of Presidential succession in office, that man is Thomas Jefferson. There is no doubt that this division is largely responsible for this third-term agitation. A Jeffersonian or a Jacksonian Democrat has found himself at variance with the new dealers in many ways. The Jeffersonian Democrats believe and respect old principles of republican form of government, while the new dealers stress their newness. The former is a party of principles, while the latter is a party of policy. The new dealers refuse to respect precedent. In fact, they boast of their disregard of precedent. They reject the lamp of experience as a guide to their feet. They are new dealers and neither national memories nor racial heritages have any magic with them. The fact that Jefferson said, in effect, that any President who might seek a third term should be defeated does not influence them.

That is a very significant statement from Jefferson. I have not an exact quotation of the words here; I did not want to encumber the Record with them, but that is the substance of his statement, and he goes on record emphatically that, in his judgment, any President who sought a third term should be defeated.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I gladly yield to my distinguished friend from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman if he will not please insert in his remarks the actual quotation to which he refers from Jefferson?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I will. I have it further along in my speech. I will insert the exact quotation of Jefferson.

That Jackson strongly advocated a constitutional amendment limiting the term of the President to one term does not deter the new dealers, for with them the end justifies the means. Neither custom nor Constitution presents any obstacles. They respect no past and fear no future. In all seriousness, this course is not the proper course for America. All around us we see this philosophy of government bringing national dissension in other countries. Making this applicable to the matter under discussion they can see no merit in Jefferson's position. Neither can they recognize that Jackson had a profound conviction that to continue a President in office for a long term of years was dangerous and would surely jeopardize the existence of the Republic. The new dealers have been so accustomed to getting what they want by crying "Emergency! Emergency!" that they now wish to put their party and the Jefferson Democratic Party in the position that there is but one man in either of these two parties that can "save the Republic." This is a terrible indictment both of the patriotism of the country and the capacity of the members of these two parties. For the new dealers to raise the cry that the country needs to be saved is strange. Do they mean saved from themselves? If that is what they mean, it makes sense. But to argue that it is necessary to elect Mr. Roosevelt for a third term in order to save the country leads us to ask, Has he really been trying to save it for the past 8 years? That, too, might make sense. I repeat, my friends, there is no such an emergency as will require a departure from a course that has been adhered to by the greatest men of the Nation. If we depart from this course and elect a President for a third term, we will find ourselves in the midst of an emergency much more dangerous than any we have yet encountered.

The propaganda employed to make it appear that there is an emergency is easily analyzed. It all springs from one source. It is actuated by those who hold high places at the pleasure of the present President. They know that when Mr. Roosevelt ceases to be President that they will be without positions or party affiliations. Will Robert Jackson, Harold Ickes, or Tommy Corcoran, or Benny Cohen be welcome into Jack Garner's party?

Mr. SCHAFFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFFER of Wisconsin. The multimillionaire New Deal Secretary of the Interior indicated an intention to form a new party. Perhaps they might light there.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It might be a good place for them.

It will be a sad day for these paid columnists who have risen to great prominence not by reason of their ability but solely by reason of their adulation of the new dealers to find themselves without inspiration to write. These ambassadors who come back from Europe to tell us that there is but one man that can save us make us stronger in our opinion that they would not have been selected as ambassadors in the first place except for the social urge and ready contributions of their million-dollar wives. There is no denial of the fact that there are many people in our country who approve some or many of the Roosevelt policies, but they are not engaging in this forced propaganda. In fact, it is certain that the President's best friends are counseling him against becoming a candidate for a third term.

These propagandists can find no real argument to justify their persistency in suggesting that the President run for his third term. There is no emergency. There is no war that he can keep us out of. And those who fear that he is trying to put us into a war can allay their fears, for he cannot put us into war.

If these propagandists would strip themselves of their personal interest, they might be able to employ the one argument which unprejudiced persons employ. It is a weak argument, but it is the only argument. They say that there is no constitutional prohibition against a President seeking a third term. There is none against his seeking a fourth or fifth or sixth term, but who would advocate or tolerate a sixth term for any President? To say that the Constitution does not prohibit a third term is no more convincing than to say that the Constitution does not sanction a third term. We know that the framers of the Constitution were overwhelmingly opposed to a life term for the President. We also know that after much consideration the Constitutional Convention adopted a provision favored by Jefferson fixing the term at 7 years, with no second term. This provision was carried in the drafted Constitution for some time and was considered as having been a closed matter until the second or third day before final adjournment, when the matter was taken up again and changed so as to provide for a term of 4 years. They thought that 7 years was too long, but that if a person served acceptably for 4 years the people could be trusted to give him 4 more years, or 8 in all. Jefferson ratified this change, and in doing so said:

My wish, therefore, was that the President should be elected for 7 years and be ineligible afterward. This term I thought sufficient to enable him, with the concurrence of the legislature, to carry through and establish any system of improvement he should propose for the general good. But the practice adopted I think is better, allowing his continuance for 8 years, with a liability to be dropped at the halfway of the term, making that a period of probation.

There is a real fundamental reason why an Executive should not be selected for long tenure or for successive terms. Jefferson voiced this reason when he said:

If some termination to the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for years, will in fact become for life; and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance.

When Jefferson said "his office nominally for years will in fact become for life," he knew what we know, that if we ever break this third-term rule for a President he will be President for life if he desires it.

Some men may be strong enough to carry on the democratic processes of a government for life, but history does not name one. On the contrary, history shows where bureaucracy has throttled the strongest. When the executive usurps the other branches and the orderly processes of government fail, the constitution is impotent. An impotent constitution in the hands of a senile, benevolent dictator is as impotent as in the hands of a despotic dictator. When a dictator, benevolent or despotic, comes in, the constitution goes out.

And when Jefferson said "and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance" he was appraising accurately the situation of his day, for monarchies were then in their heyday. But I would not fear that now. If we lose our form of government—and God forbid that we do—we will not find ourselves under a monarchy. What we need to fear is a repetition of what happened in much of Europe in the past 15 years. Today the real issue in the European conflict is whether life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are the inalienable rights of men or whether it is the duty of man to fatalistically fit himself into the mass called humanity, not daring to claim his life as his own and not daring to bring the blessings of liberty to himself or his posterity, and not daring to indulge in the great American pastime, "the pursuit of happiness."

In the debate between Mr. West and myself, a man in the audience asked me a very pertinent question, which I had anticipated. He wanted to know how I justified my opposition to a third term for a President when I had sought and accepted more than three terms as a Member of Congress. I was glad to attempt to answer him, for I felt that this gave me an opportunity to express myself with the emphasis I feel should be given when discussing this issue. The founders of our Government feared the reestablishment of a monarchy. They knew they should have a Federal judiciary to decide national questions and questions between the States. They threw around the courts every possible protection so that they could do their duty free and uninfluenced, so they provided life tenure for them. They gave them no executive power whatever. The Supreme Court can do nothing but interpret the law for the guidance of the people and Congress and the President. The framers of the Constitution assumed that the President and the Senate would put none but lawyers on these courts and none but men of the highest order. Recent events have shown that they slipped a little there. At any rate, there are nine members of the Supreme Court and probably 200 additional Federal judges. The founding fathers also knew that there must be a legislative branch, so they set up a House of Representatives and a Senate. The House was to be close to the people and Members were to be elected for short terms, leaving it to the people to decide who should represent them. The Senate was to represent the States so as to make clear the dual form of our Government. There are now 435 Members of the House and 96 Senators. But there is but one Executive. He is the executive branch. Dictatorships have never come through the judiciary or the legislative branch. They have always come through the executive. And the first act of every dictator is to dissolve the courts and the legislative branch. There have been thousands of Members of Congress since the beginning of the Government, yet most of the influential Members of Congress have been Members with extended service. Our Speaker is serving his twelfth term, our majority leader is serving his fourteenth term, our minority leader is serving his eighth term, and so it goes. Who is it but will agree that each of them should be reelected if he wishes?

But, my friends, where is there a man so foolhardy as to say that he would favor the reelection of any one man to serve as President for 24 years? Yes; you may say "that is different, I only am voting for a third term now." Yes; I know, but a third term for a President means an abandonment of a precedent that has become by time-honored custom a part of our republican system of government.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman has spoken about likely Democrats, and I ask him about available material on his own side.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I said there were many Democrats who would make good leaders, and I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana that if he were the Democratic candidate I think he would have the support of every Democrat in the United States.

Mr. LUDLOW. What about available timber on that side of the aisle over there? Let me say that there is no more able Member on the Republican side and no Member over there who more faithfully represents the philosophy of the great Republican Party than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio who now occupies the floor [Mr. JENKINS]. There are numerous able gentlemen on that side, and I hope the gentleman will not overlook them in his inventory of candidates. I appreciate the complimentary reference the gentleman made about me, and if he feels that he can deliver the Democratic nomination to me, I will accept, and close the entries right now.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his kind words. In the language of Uncle Joe Cannon, maybe both parties "could go farther and do worse."

That Washington opposed kingdoms, monarchies, and long-term executives is shown by his great sacrifice in laying his life and his fortune on the line.

To suggest that the great Washington would favor any of the trappings of a monarchy would be to the average American sacrilegious. He knew that the Constitutional Convention had turned down the proposal of Hamilton, his best friend, to provide a life term for the President. He had opposed that himself. He knew the action taken by the convention, and he emphatically refused to consider a third term. But, on the contrary, announced early that he would not accept it. While I think Hamilton was probably America's greatest statesman, I cannot subscribe to his theories as to a life tenure for a President.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Did that have anything to do with the President's reference to Alexander Hamilton as a great man during his recent Jackson Day dinner speech?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know. I cannot follow the devious mental processes of the President.

Adams had no chance for a third term.

Jefferson refused it emphatically. Someone has said that he wrote to Lafayette indicating that he might accept a third term. Let us see what he said in this connection. His words are:

There is, however, but one circumstance which could engage my acquiescence in another election, to wit, such a division about a successor as might bring in a monarchist. But that circumstance is impossible.

Jefferson's most passionate hatred was of a monarch for his country.

Not a single President has ever sought a third term in succession. Every President that could have done so refused to do so. The two who sought a third term not in succession—Grant and Theodore Roosevelt—have some extenuating circumstances connected with their third-term efforts. Grant was succeeded by Hayes, who favored only one term for Presidents. The reconstruction days were trying ones, and because of Grant's great popularity he was prevailed upon to permit his name to be used, but stated:

I would not accept the nomination if tendered to me unless it should come under such circumstances as to make it an imperative duty, circumstances not likely to arise.

Theodore Roosevelt, who succeeded to the unexpired term of McKinley, and was elected to succeed himself, was not a full-fledged second term yet he stated long before the expiration of his full term:

The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance, and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.

In spite of this strong pronouncement he did contest with Taft, and he thought—although I did not agree with him—that there was a principle at stake, and that he must fight it out. This, too, was after a term had intervened.

Since no President has asked a third term in succession, why should we think that the present incumbent intends to do so? I have never thought that the present Roosevelt would run for a third term in view of his emphatic statement on the subject. When he entered upon his second term, he said:

I am by no means satisfied with having twice been elected President of the United States by very large majorities. I have an even greater ambition. My ambition relates to January 20, 1941. My great ambition on January 20, 1941, is to turn over this desk and chair in the White House to my successor.

To keep his word he must "turn over this desk and chair" as he promised.

I shall not tire you with a recitation of the statements made by the various Presidents from Washington down, but with permission, I shall insert some of them in the RECORD at this point.

Andrew Jackson, true to form, sniffing the tyranny of monarchs, in burning words, strongly favored a single term of 4 to 6 years.

William Henry Harrison took office pledged to a single term. Hayes favored election for one term only. Cleveland, the only man to serve two nonconsecutive terms, in vigorous words and deeds, strongly opposed a third term.

McKinley said:

I am not and will not be a candidate for a third term.

President Taft said:

I am strongly inclined to the view that it would have been a wiser provision, as it was at one time voted in the convention, to make the term of President 7 years, and render him ineligible thereafter.

The Calvin Coolidge economy was never more strikingly demonstrated than when he eloquently, and with an economy of words, told the world his position. "I do not choose to run," is a national classic. His brief sentence has been the theme of practically every second-term President from Washington to the present time.

The great Democratic Party has, on many occasions, taken a strong position against a third term. I read a plank out of the Democratic platform adopted in the convention of 1896:

We declare it to be the unwritten law of this Republic, established by custom and usage of a hundred years, and sanctioned by the example of the greatest and wisest of those who founded and maintained our Government, that no man should be eligible for a third term of the Presidential office.

Forthrightly the convention nominated William J. Bryan as its candidate.

Again in 1912 the great Democratic Party declared in its platform:

We favor a single Presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

Woodrow Wilson ran on that platform. It is quite possible that many of my distinguished colleagues voted for Mr. Wilson.

The House of Representatives, as you know, usually decides all major political controversies. We decided this matter long, long ago. On December 15, 1875, by a vote of 234 to 18, the House adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House, the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States, in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term, has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

This resolution was introduced by Congressman Springer, an able Democrat.

On numerous other occasions resolutions of the same import have been introduced in the House of Representatives.

The Senate, usually following the example of the House, took action on this subject when Mr. Coolidge was President. In 1928 Senator Robert La Follette introduced a resolution which after considerable debate was adopted by a vote of 56 to 26. This resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term, has become, by a universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate commends observance of this precedent by the President.

I am sure you will be interested in knowing the names of some of those who voted for this resolution. Lo! as it was with Abou Ben Adhem long, long ago, so it was with Dear ALBEN BARKLEY, for his name led all the rest. Among other Senators, who voted for that resolution were CARTER GLASS, PAT HARRISON, CARL HAYDEN, and Senators McKELLAR, NEELY, PITTMAN, SHEPPARD, TYDINGS, WAGNER, and WHEELER.

Then, too, I must not omit another distinguished Senator, at present unattached politically, Senator GEORGE NORRIS, who apparently has changed and is now a persistent advocate of a third term. Also let me give you the names of some who voted for that resolution and are yet in the Senate and no doubt ready to vote as they did before: Senator BORAH and Senator HIRAM JOHNSON.

Senator HOLT, of West Virginia, will introduce a resolution in this session of Congress which will contain the same language as the La Follette resolution. He claims his resolution will be voted on in this session. It will be interesting to watch that vote. No doubt, many Senators will change their positions. That may be what it means to be a new dealer.

The great Democratic Party surely has not come to such a low state as to have but one man great enough to be President. My distinguished Democratic friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has just come into the room. He would be splendid timber for the Presidency. You do not have to hang your hat on one peg, because you have any number of men in your party who can do this job.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I assume my friend is nominating me for the presidency of some social club in my district?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not want the gentleman to assume that at all. I know he could grace the presidency of any social club with distinction, but I meant the Presidency of the United States. If your party has run out of capable people, you had better get into another party.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is that a pledge to vote for the gentleman from Massachusetts in case he runs?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; but I will tell the gentleman what I will do. I will agree to vote for him under certain circumstances, and those circumstances would be that he come over on my ticket. If he runs on your ticket, will you vote for him?

Mr. LUDLOW. Your conditions are too hard. However, in reply to your last question, if our national convention nominates the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] I will support him with great energy and enthusiasm. He is a very able man and stands high in the estimation of the country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The Governors of the States usually reflect the sentiment of their people. The election of 1936 brought Democratic Governors to 38 States, while 7 States elected Republican Governors. The United Press polled these 38 Governors as to their views on whether a President, including Roosevelt, should have a third term. Three openly declared themselves against a third term; 29 refused to say that they would favor a third term for any President, including Roosevelt; 6 of these 38 declared for a third term for Roosevelt. Among these 6 are Murphy, of Michigan, now Attorney General; Earle, of Pennsylvania; and Leche, of Louisiana.

In April 1938, before the present war hysteria, Dr. Gallup took a poll of the country on the question, "Would you favor a third term for President Roosevelt?" The poll showed 30 percent for and 70 percent against. It showed 54 percent of the Democrats against. This poll also grouped the people as to their economic station in life, with the result that of those "above the average" only 14 percent favored, while of those listed as "average" only 24 percent favored, and of those listed as "poor" only 40 percent favored.

Another Gallup poll was taken on August 20, 1939, among none but young Democrats between the ages of 20 and 29. No more favorable conditions for the approval of the third-term idea could possibly be arranged. This poll showed only 52 percent for a third term for President Roosevelt, with 48 percent against.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to dwell just a little bit on the relief situation in Ohio?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I shall be pleased to tell the gentleman about that, but it is not apropos to this discussion. I shall make it short. The only thing in the relief situation in Ohio is Democratic politics. That is the whole story. Is that a sufficient answer? Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman mean that the Governor is a Democrat?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; the gentleman understands what I mean. I mean that, boiled down, the whole situation comes from Democratic politics. In Cleveland, before the election, it was clearly manifest that the relief situation was full of politics. I cannot give you the exact figures, but, for example, I should say that if there were 85,000 persons on relief during the month before the election there were about 35,000 on relief during the month following the election. That is the situation in Ohio. Does the gentleman wish to elaborate on that?

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman mean the Democrats reduced the relief load that quickly?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The situation explains itself. The gentleman can draw his own conclusions.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It would be relatively an easy matter to feed the people of Ohio if the Federal Government paid practically all the bills, as it does in many States of the Union.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Certainly, as in some of these States where about 90 percent of the relief load is carried by the Government. This is not the condition in Ohio. Ohio pays to the Federal Treasury much more than it draws out. It is true that there is much distress in Ohio; I deplore this very much. But there is no more distress there than in other States. It is all due to the fact that there are about 9,000,000 people out of work and naturally some of them are in Ohio. To relieve this unemployment is the first duty of all of us. The gentleman's party has been in power now about 8 years and it has not made much headway in relieving this situation.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the almost unanimous opposition of all classes of people from Washington down to the present time, why keep the people agitated? The President should not temporize further or keep the people agitated. With great unrest in the world we, of all nations, should not encourage internal unrest and discord. Dictatorship is stalking across the world, recognizing neither right nor justice, disregarding all promises however solemnly entered into, defying nature, and denying God. All this comes from a usurpation of executive power. To break the time-honored custom of two terms for a President and to elect him for a third, a fourth, and a fifth term would launch us on a course that might irresistably lead us to national destruction. The executive branch is one man only. This one man is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. He names the Secretary of the Treasury that might improperly take from the people the power to control the purse strings of the Nation. He names the Attorney General, who is the legal representative of the Government. To give him the additional power that comes from the control of a million Federal employees by controlling their action for a long and uncertain tenure is a danger which we should recognize before it is too late. Totalitarianism inevitably displaces individual freedom of action in business and chokes free speech and stifles free worship. God forbid that the time may ever come in America when one man shall call himself the state. [Applause.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I have not more time, for I should like to answer the question asked of my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

I come from the city of Cleveland, regarding whose relief situation a question has been raised. Cleveland is one of the cities of America that has always taken care of its poor and unfortunate. Long before Mr. Roosevelt became President, whenever there were needy persons, we provided for them. Cleveland was the first city in America to establish the community fund.

Since Mr. Roosevelt has become President we have had emergency after emergency, wherein thousands upon thousands of our people have been unemployed. This unemployment was created as a result of his economic philosophy or his lack of an economic philosophy. During these 41 emergencies—and we have felt every one of them—there has been a large influx of population into our city as the result of the good treatment of our people. In spite of the situation created by Mr. Roosevelt and his new dealers, we have managed to struggle along. When the Federal and county governments stepped away from handling direct relief, 3 years ago, the city of Cleveland stepped in.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Our city administration, operating on a very limited budget, had to assume the additional relief burden created by the Federal administration at Washington. We have been doing a marvelous job, and we resent the implications in the statements of Mr. Ickes and Mr. Roosevelt that Cleveland, or Ohio, has not been taking care of its job.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell the Members of the House how much money the city of Cleveland spent for relief last year or the year before?

Mr. BENDER. I have not the exact figures before me.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Just roughly.

Mr. BENDER. I believe that practically one-third of the entire budget of the city has been used for relief purposes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. One million dollars or five hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. BENDER. Oh, a lot more than that.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The only thought I had in mind is that if it was one-half a million dollars, there is much more being spent for relief in Cleveland than in the cities and towns of many other States of the United States, where the Government itself is paying from 95 to 99 percent of the entire cost of relief.

Mr. BENDER. Let me say further that Washington reduced the number of W. P. A.-ers far in excess of the reduction in any other State in the Union, because we have a Republican administration in Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BENDER. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio to do this. I know that what the gentleman is saying is absolutely true, and will not the gentleman put the exact figures in his speech so that we can close the mouths of everybody with respect to what we have been doing in Cleveland?

Mr. BENDER. I want to say this with regard to Governor Bricker: There is not a man in this country who is more sympathetic with the underprivileged than Governor Bricker [applause], but at the same time Governor Bricker is interested in balancing the budget, and he has balanced the budget in Ohio. He is not playing politics with relief.

"Ohio is still here." With these words as his battle cry, Gov. John Bricker, of Ohio, completely routed the forces of the New Deal in the sensational controversy centering about relief difficulties in Cleveland. Democratic spokesmen—prominently including President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, aided and abetted by Democrat-Republican-Socialist-New Dealer Fiorello LaGuardia, mayor of New York—did their utmost to discredit the Republican administration of the Buckeye State through a series of bitter and uninformed attacks upon the handling of relief in Ohio. Their worst was not enough to destroy the reputation of the State.

Speaking before the Ohio Society of New York, Governor Bricker, a vice president of the society, rallied to the New Deal attack and returned far weightier clouts than his State had received. In unmistakable terms he made it clear that there was no disposition on the part of any Ohio official to minimize the importance of a constructive relief program. He left no doubt that the State administration had cooperated fully with the local representatives of Cleveland and other troubled areas of the State to solve their problems. His national radio audience heard him describe the solution of Cleveland's difficulties on precisely those lines laid down by him in a series of conferences with the city's officers.

But more than this, Governor Bricker did not hesitate to attack the basic evils which have given rise to constant emergencies and almost 4 years of pressing troubles. He assailed the New Deal administration of W. P. A. as a "political racket," and pointed to its padded pay rolls in election years, followed by sharp decreases in the "off years." To replace this partisan system he demanded a new organization of relief, to be administered locally and to be financed by local, State, and Federal participation.

Answering the slanders cast at him by his Democratic opposition, he announced his unwillingness to be "clubbed" into silence by "maligners" and "falsehood, innuendo, and propaganda" or to "flinch before a public crack-down from the White House." He refused to permit Ohio relief to become the "football of disgraceful partisan politics in Washington, New York, and the Department of the Interior." Ohio had not been "taken over by the White House," or Mr. Ickes, and the inference was obvious that so long as Governor Bricker sat in the Governor's office at Columbus, he did not propose to turn over his key to the Secretary of the Interior or his superiors.

The Cleveland predicament came in for its share of examination. In Cleveland during October 1938, just before the congressional elections, there were 74,225 men and women employed on W. P. A. One year later this figure had been cut by 60 percent, down to 30,000.

The biggest cut in Ohio—

Governor Bricker pointed out—

was in Cleveland, the very place that relief needs are greatest. The State has recognized this fact and has distributed this year 35 percent of the State's total relief appropriation to Cleveland's county, although that county contains only about 18 percent of Ohio's population. Throughout all these months, by resolution and by visits of the mayor of Cleveland to the national administration, requests were made, demands were sent that this discrimination by W. P. A. against Cleveland must cease. As this process of punishing Cleveland continued after the election last year, the State relief rolls in Cleveland steadily increased. They increased from 15,744 cases in October 1938 to 28,060 cases in October 1939. Keep in mind that W. P. A. is the Federal program and direct relief is carried at the cost of the State and local communities.

Governor Bricker demonstrated, too, that W. P. A. opened its rolls in Cleveland and elsewhere in Ohio to nonrelief clients, although the Federal law requires that preference be given on the basis of relative needs. To the argument that the Federal Government has done its job while the State and its cities have failed to do their duty, the Governor replied:

Ohio this year has increased her appropriation for general welfare and public assistance out of State and local funds. Ohio and Cleveland have taken care of their people, but the Federal Government has failed miserably in Ohio. There are only two answers to be given for this discrimination. It was either a deliberate attempt to cut the W. P. A. employment in Ohio unfairly as a punishment for not voting right last year or as an embarrassment to a Republican administration. Possibly it was for the purpose of creating such a situation that the Federal administration, with a demagogic gesture of rushing to the rescue, could take credit where blame was due.

The people of America must awaken to a realization of how far this Federal administration will go in playing politics with human misery and relief—how far it will go in its attempt to smear the good name of a State or an administration which dares to do a good job financially as well as in social service. The issue is clear-cut: Shall relief, including work relief, W. P. A., or whatever it may be called, be administered honestly, fairly, with due regard to the needs of the people, or shall it be administered as a political racket—padding the W. P. A. rolls in election years, and forgetting the needs in nonelection years, carrying the burden so the Federal Government can take credit when a national election is on, and passing the buck back to the States and local communities in the other years? This is a question which the American people must answer; and in it is involved a fundamental question of public morals.

Denouncing the tactics of the New Deal in assailing him, the Governor asserted that—

Most new dealers have contempt for any government authority or public official who does balance a budget, does administer relief honestly, does save public money, or shows any interest whatever in the taxpayer.

Constructively, Governor Bricker proposed that the system of Federal control and domination in each relief area of the United States should be reformed:

Work-relief programs in the various States should be administered locally and financed by local, State, and Federal participation, with the assistance of Federal grants in the same manner as prevails in all other public-assistance programs. This principle has the endorsement of the Committee on Mobilization for Human Needs, the National Association of Community Chests, and a great majority of the welfare administrators in the various States. The President has rejected this program for work relief, although the same principle of Federal grants is applied to the other forms of public assistance, such as aid for the aged, and to dependent children, and aid to the blind. It seems significant to me that the program which involves the largest expenditure of Federal moneys and which directly applies to the largest number of voters is operated under a system and on a principle entirely contrary to the other Federal programs.

The Governor declared that he would not be—

Clubbed into a position of fear or silence in the conduct of affairs in the State of Ohio when the very foundations of public morality, political decency, simple honesty, and fundamental human integrity are being eaten away by the unblushing political immorality of the New Deal in its relations to human needs and relief. As Governor of Ohio, I do not propose to condone with official silence a scheme of political manipulation which threatens the very integrity of the ballot simply because that scheme has been bundled up in the glittering trappings of official demagoguery and offered to the Nation in the name of relief.

In Ohio—

we are doing our part. For 7 years promises, experiments, pump-priming, and political manipulation have failed to bring satisfaction to the hopes of the people of the United States. Nor can our social and economic problems be solved by name calling, crack-down, and purge. Their solution requires integrity, intelligence, and tolerance.

The political "pork barrel" never can become the wheel of American progress. America wants to get off relief. America wants to go to work.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. The good people of Ohio do not resent the Roosevelt administration going in there for the purpose of benefiting the people seeking relief, do they?

Mr. BENDER. The people of Ohio pay a lot more than they get in return for relief or for W. P. A. or for any other purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. What relief?

Mr. BENDER. We in Ohio contribute a far greater percentage of money than we receive in return, and I will be pleased to supply the gentleman with the figures, because I have them here.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would there be any money put into Ohio for the W. P. A. if they did not ask for it?

Mr. BENDER. Because Roosevelt creates a condition where the people cannot find jobs in private industry and breaks down the efforts of those engaged in private industry and makes it impossible for them to employ persons in gainful occupations, of course, all of these makeshifts follow under such an administration.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did Roosevelt create the flood condition in Ohio?

Mr. BENDER. No; of course not. That is absurd.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri what happened to the $1,500,000 that was sent out there to pay for a bridge job but the people who did the work have not yet been paid?

Mr. HOUSTON. Where was that?

Mr. HINSHAW. At Kansas City.

Mr. HOUSTON. I resent that. I am from the great State of Kansas.

Mr. HINSHAW. I have the facts in my office and I can show them to the gentleman.

Mr. BENDER. The United States Senate today has just passed an appropriation bill sponsored by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] appropriating $1,300,000 to pay the State of Ohio money that was due it when Davey was Governor and Roosevelt was President. They began squabbling among themselves and created a shortage of $1,300,000 that was due the old people under the old-age pension fund.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not mind a lot of general statements being made here, but I do not think that statement fairly represents a true picture. There was an honest misunderstanding and the members of the Ways and Means Committee, myself included, joined with my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], but the statement the gentleman from Ohio is now making, by itself, is not correct. I know the gentleman does not intend to make any incorrect statement, but that statement does not reflect the true situation.

Such things can easily happen and that was the result of the State legislature failing to act within a certain time limit, and we provided in this measure that the money should be paid back which, of course, should be done, and my Democratic colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee were pleased to join with our friend from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] in seeing that this was done.

Mr. BENDER. And I am glad he did.

Mr. McCORMACK. It was the fair thing to do, but it was not the fault of the Governor or the fault of the President.

Mr. BENDER. It was the fault of the Federal administration having a squabble with the then Governor of the State of Ohio, Mr. Davey.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I know the gentleman does not mean to make an intentional misstatement, but the gentleman's statement does constitute a misstatement as to the true conditions, and there was more than one State involved.

Mr. BENDER. I am sorry to disagree with the gentleman. He is entitled to his opinion and I to mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more in order to ask a question or two. I understood the gentleman to say that Governor Bricker had succeeded in balancing the budget of the State of Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. That is correct.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does the gentleman think that reflects a bad economic condition if Ohio is living on a balanced budget?

Mr. BENDER. The Governor of Ohio cut down the number of unnecessary jobs and he cut down the pay rolls. He did what the President has recommended, if we are able to understand his Budget. The Governor did everything essential to be done—and the thing that the gentleman from Virginia was praying for—in taking a lot of New Deal pap suckers off the pay roll that were entirely unnecessary on that roll.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think that if the State of Ohio has balanced the State budget, it has a pretty large obligation to take care of its own unemployment relief and that it should not ask anything of the Federal Government?

Mr. BENDER. We are making a very great contribution to the general welfare of the country in Ohio in paying taxes into the Federal Government funds far in excess of the amount of money we receive in return to take care of our unfortunate people in Ohio.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Gladly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman tell the House if the statement in the newspaper to the effect that when that acute situation existed in Cleveland the President issued orders for thousands of men to be placed on the W. P. A. is correct?

Mr. BENDER. The orders were there for the men to be on the W. P. A., but they were not taking care of them as agreed after the passage of the last appropriation.

Mr. COCHRAN. I mean just recently when you had that bad situation in Cleveland. Did not the President then issue orders that the W. P. A. go into Cleveland and put the unemployed to work?

Mr. BENDER. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is not that true?

Mr. BENDER. Wait a moment. I would like to have my time extended, in order to answer the question.

Mr. COCHRAN. That question can be answered by yes or no.

Mr. BENDER. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. He did not?

Mr. BENDER. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then the gentleman means to say that the W. P. A. Administrator did not follow out the orders of the President?

Mr. BENDER. The W. P. A. Administrator had not been following out the orders that were in the instructions in the bill that passed in the last session.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not talking about the bill; I am talking about the order of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield 1 minute more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I ask the gentleman from Virginia this question, which is in line with the question that he asked the gentleman about the ability of the city of Cleveland to take care of its own, because of present economic conditions. I have given a good deal of thought to this problem. Does the gentleman from Virginia think there is any justification for the Federal Government to step into any State where the industrial conditions have continually improved from 1920 to 1929, 1935 and 1938, and where the gross farm income is pretty nearly on a level with that of 1929, and pay from 95 to 99½ percent of the cost of relief? Does the gentleman think that is right?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. But that is so; that evidence is before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is not before my committee.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It was before the gentleman's committee last year, and there is a number of situations of that kind.

Mr. BENDER. Ohio is doing its share, and Cleveland is doing its share. The trouble is right here in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, on Wednesday, January 3, I introduced a joint resolution in this Chamber. Its purpose was to stop all appropriation for maintaining an embassy of these United States in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and estop all expenditures from the State Department for diplomatic agents of the United States to the Soviet Russian Government. The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no moneys appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, shall be used for the purpose of maintaining an embassy in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of Russia or for the purpose of assigning or sending diplomatic officers or employees of the State Department as representatives of the United States to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of Russia or for the compensation or maintenance of such officers or employees within that country.

There is neither ambiguity nor equivocation about the resolution. It means what it says—a closing of diplomatic relations with the Soviet for the 2 years specified.

I have not introduced this because we have heard in America the Macedonian cry of Finland, "Come over and help us." This resolution in no way places the United States in the position of an ally of Finland nor does it mean the extension of aid with American armed forces across the sea. But it does say to the Soviet that we can no longer abide the violation of the agreements made by Russia when we gave her recognition 7 years ago. That recognition was not by act of Congress. It did not have the support or confirmation by this House or Senate. It was done by correspondence between President Roosevelt and the Commissar of National Affairs for the Soviet Republics, Maxim Litvinov.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert in this address the two most important commitments made by the Soviet Government through Commissar Litvinov.

The first has to do with Communist propaganda and organization of subversive movements in the United States.

WASHINGTON, November 16, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to inform you that coincident with the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two Governments it will be the fixed policy of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics:

1. To respect scrupulously the indisputable right of the United States to order its own life within its own jurisdiction in its own way and to refrain from interfering in any manner in the internal affairs of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.
2. To refrain and to restrain all persons in Government service and all organizations of the Government or under its direct or indirect control, including organizations in receipt of any financial assistance from it, from any act, overt or covert, liable in any way whatsoever to injure the tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories or possessions, and, in particular, from any act tending to incite or encourage armed intervention or agitation or propaganda, having as its aim the violation of the territorial integrity of the United States, its Territories or possessions, or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

tory of any organization or group or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which makes claim to be the Government of, or makes attempt upon the territorial integrity of, the United States, its Territories, or possessions; not to form, subsidize, support, or permit on its territory military organizations or groups having the aim of armed struggle against the United States, its Territories, or possessions, and to prevent any recruiting on behalf of such organizations and groups.

4. Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or the bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

I am, my dear Mr. President,

Very sincerely yours,

MAXIM LITVINOV.

The second is a wobbly effort to discuss religious freedom:

WASHINGTON, November 16, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In reply to your letter of November 16, 1933, I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as a fixed policy accords the nationals of the United States within the territory of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics the following rights referred to by you:

1. The right to "free exercise of liberty of conscience and religious worship" and protection "from all disability or persecution on account of their religious faith or worship."

This right is supported by the following laws and regulations existing in the various republics of the Union:

Every person may profess any religion or none. All restrictions of rights connected with the profession of any belief whatsoever, or with the nonprofession of any belief, are annulled (decree of Jan. 23, 1918, art. 3).

Within the confines of the Soviet Union it is prohibited to issue any local laws or regulations restricting or limiting freedom of conscience, or establishing privileges or preferential rights of any kind based upon the religious profession of any person (decree of Jan. 23, 1918, art. 2).

2. The right to "conduct without annoyance or molestation of any kind religious services and rites of a ceremonial nature."

This right is supported by the following laws:

A free performance of religious rites is guaranteed as long as it does not interfere with public order and is not accompanied by interference with the rights of citizens of the Soviet Union. Local authorities possess the right in such cases to adopt all necessary measures to preserve public order and safety (decree of Jan. 23, 1918, art. 5).

Interference with the performance of religious rights, insofar as they do not endanger public order and are not accompanied by infringements on the rights of others is punishable by compulsory labor for a period up to 6 months (Criminal Code, art. 127).

3. "The right and opportunity to lease, erect, or maintain in convenient situations" churches, houses, or other buildings appropriate for religious purposes.

This right is supported by the following laws and regulations:

Believers belonging to a religious society with the object of making provision for their requirements in the matter of religion, may lease under contract, free of charge, from the town soviet, special buildings for the purpose of worship and objects intended exclusively for the purposes of their cult (decree of Apr. 8, 1929, art. 10).

Furthermore, believers who have formed a religious society or a group of believers may use for religious meetings other buildings which have been placed at their disposal on lease by private persons or by local soviets and executive committees. All rules established for houses of worship are applicable to these buildings. Contracts for the use of such buildings shall be concluded by individual believers, who will be held responsible for their execution. In addition, these buildings must comply with the sanitary and technical building regulations (decree of Apr. 8, 1929, art. 10).

The place of worship and religious property shall be handed over for the use of believers forming a religious society under a contract concluded in the name of the competent district executive committee or town soviet by the competent administrative department or branch or directly by the subdistrict executive committee (decree of Apr. 8, 1929, art. 15).

The construction of new places of worship may take place at the desire of religious societies, provided that the usual technical building regulations and the special regulations laid down by the People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs are observed (decree of Apr. 8, 1929, art. 45).

4. "The right to collect from their coreligionists * * * voluntary offerings for religious purposes."

This right is supported by the following law:

Members of groups of believers and religious societies may raise subscriptions among themselves and collect voluntary offerings, both in the place of worship itself and outside it, but only amongst the members of the religious association concerned and only for purposes connected with the upkeep of the place of worship and the religious property, for the engagement of ministers of religion and for the expenses of their executive body. Any form of forced contribution in aid of religious association is punishable under the criminal code (decree of Apr. 8, 1929, art. 54).

5. Right to "impart religious instruction to their children either singly or in groups or to have such instruction imparted by persons whom they may employ for such purpose."

This right is supported by the following law:

The school is separate from the church. Instruction in religious doctrines is not permitted in any governmental and common schools, nor in private teaching institutions where general subjects are taught. Persons may give or receive religious instruction in a private manner (decree of Jan. 23, 1918, art. 9).

Furthermore, the Soviet Government is prepared to include in a consular covenant to be negotiated immediately following the establishment of relations between our two countries provisions in which nationals of the United States shall be granted rights with reference to freedom of conscience and the free exercise of religion, which shall not be less favorable than those enjoyed in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by nationals of the nation most favored in this respect. In this connection I have the honor to call to your attention article 9 of the treaty between Germany and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, signed at Moscow October 12, 1925, which reads as follows:

"Nationals of each of the contracting parties * * * shall be entitled to hold religious services in churches, houses, or other buildings, rented according to the laws of the country, in their national language, or in any other language which is customary in their religion. They shall be entitled to bury their dead in accordance with their religious practice in burial grounds established and maintained by them with the approval of the competent authorities so long as they comply with the police regulations of the other party in respect of buildings and public health."

Furthermore, I desire to state that the rights specified in the above paragraphs will be granted to American nationals immediately upon the establishment of relations between our two countries.

Finally, I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, while reserving to itself the right of refusing visas to Americans desiring to enter the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on personal grounds does not intend to base such refusals on the fact of such persons having an ecclesiastical status.

I am, my dear Mr. President,
Very sincerely yours,

MAXIM LITVINOV.

The two most important paragraphs in these commitments are in the first of these letters, dated November 16, 1933. Its purpose was to stop all communistic propaganda in this country. I want to read to you particularly that paragraph 4, so that you will be familiar with what was agreed to, and it requires no very great dissertation on what has actually happened. Mr. Litvinov, for the Soviet Union, agreed:

Not to permit the formation or residence on its (the United States) territory of any organization or group; and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories, or possessions.

That agreement has not been kept. It has been constantly violated. The communistic problem in this country has increased more than one hundred fold ever since this commitment was made by the Soviet through its commissar. The time has arrived, my fellow Members of Congress and the people of the United States, to make serious, emphatic objection to such violation.

That is why I have introduced this resolution which has its effect of breaking off our diplomatic relations and ending our unnatural association with a government which has no sense of responsibility for its commitments. This resolution is at least a notice to Russia and the Soviet Socialist Republics that we no longer will tolerate this continuation of purpose, although that Government has agreed that the things that are done shall not be done.

What is the real purpose of the Soviet? In December 1926 Stalin, expanding upon the platform of Lenin, talked about the victory of socialism within 10 or 20 years; and he said:

This victory will be a victory not only within the U. S. S. R. but a victory on the world scale.

Then he proceeds to say—quoting Dictator Stalin:

And what is meant by "victory on the world scale"? Does it mean that such a victory is equivalent to the victory of socialism in a single country? No; it does not. Lenin in his writings carefully distinguished the victory of socialism in a single country from victory "on the world scale." What Lenin really means when he speaks of "victory on the world scale" is that the success of socialism in our country, the victory of consolidating socialism in our country, has such an immense international significance that it (the victory) cannot be limited to our country alone but is bound to call forth a powerful movement toward socialism in all capitalist countries; and even if it does not coincide with the victory of the proletarian revolution in other countries, it must in any event lead to a strong proletarian movement of other nations toward world revolution. Such is the revolutionary outlook according to Lenin, if we think in terms of the outlook for the victory of the revolution, which, after all, is the question in which we in the party are interested.

I find this quotation which I have read to you in the statement of Carl Radek, at that time one of the great leaders of the Soviet movement, but who, getting in the way of Stalin, has been liquidated by a firing squad.

There is and has been from the beginning but one purpose in the action of the Soviet Union. And it was always very clever. It was a creature of Marxian socialism. It built itself into a nation on the doctrine of Karl Marx, and its bible was the Communist Manifesto. This position is inescapable. Without Marx, there would be no Soviet Union. It was taught by Marx that it could take any position or do anything for the purpose of making its way in the world and to build up the dictatorship of the proletariat.

We are interested here in America and all over the world in another statement which was made by Radek, and that is:

Never, and under no conditions, did it (the Soviet Union) participate in the plundering of other nations, because participation in such a plunder would be contrary to the international solidarity of the workers.

O my friends, two and a half million Poles, and others in Finland, cry out the falsity of that statement!

In the correspondence between Litvinov and President Roosevelt there is no mention of recognition. This correspondence is a series of agreements and understandings. One author says that it was "unparalleled in the history of American diplomacy." And he adds naively "but not in the annals of the Soviet Union," and later:

The American settlement is almost unique in that there is no parallel treaty. More properly speaking, the settlement, while casting nonunion treaties, form actually members' stipulations lifted almost bodily from well-known Soviet threats, and logically follows the schema of the earliest Soviet powers.

Strange as it may seem, there is under these early arrangements for actual recognition but one mention of recognition in any of the collateral doctrines, and that occurs in a note from Acting Secretary of State Phillips to Sirge Huget, the residuary legatee of the Kerensky regime, referring, under date of November 16, 1933, to "the recognition of the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics by the Government of the United States."

It may still be a question whether we actually recognized Russia. We know that Congress took no action. It never was presented to Congress. It was done entirely by administrative action.

A reading of this correspondence between President Roosevelt and Litvinov discloses five distinct factors:

First. The promises of state collaboration.

Second. The pledges regarding propaganda.

Third. The guaranties of religious freedom.

Fourth. The stipulations regarding protection of nationals.

Fifth. The waiver and extrication of certain claims.

It is not necessary for me to tell this House nor its Members, nor the people of the United States, that the protection of this country against Soviet propaganda and communistic evangelism has not been kept. The stipulations and guaranties in reference to religious freedom is, if you will read the Litvinoff answer carefully, a tricky statement. What has happened has fully justified the statements of Secretary Hughes and President Coolidge and many times reiterated in their attitude against Russian recognition. The fact is, my fellow Members of Congress, that the very basis of Soviet diplomacy is deception. To those of us who opposed recognition from the first has come justification for that attitude.

The President of the United States, on November 16, 1933, addressed a note to Litvinov which in effect extended recognition through him to his Government and expressed the desire to reestablish normal diplomatic relations by the exchange of ambassadors.

The President added:

I trust that the relations now established between our people may forever remain normal and free, and that our nations henceforth may cooperate for their mutual benefit and future pledges of the people of the world.

The same day Litvinov replied, stating that his Government was glad to reestablish normal diplomatic relations and concurring in the hopeful views for the future as expressed by the President. And later we established diplomatic relations. Now, confronting the constant violation of these agreements, long subversive and submerged, and facing as we do the determination of Russia to carry out its world revolutionary conquest based upon the direction of the dead Karl Marx, it is our duty to resume our place as a nation upholding justice, honesty, and morals.

The great moving reason for this administrative executive recognition was the almighty dollar. It was not diplomatic peace we were seeking; it was trade. It was dollar diplomacy to the *n*th power. We have been selling the Soviet a lot of machinery for the establishment of great mills and electrical plants in Russia. Without recognition, we had sold at first $4,350,000 in 1923, and jumped to $114,398,587 in 1930.

Here the Soviet Government had established a great trading and propaganda center. It was exposed by the evidence before the Fish committee as not only a trading organization, but became the central financial agent for communistic proselyting in the United States. There was never an even flow of trade. Russian demands were abnormal because the program in Russia was abnormal. Then came the question of credits, and we were not in any position, nor had we the desire to extend credits. We remembered that there were $800,000,000 of debts, claims, and unpaid interest due the United States, so credits were not available, and Russia wanted to buy where she could have credits, and the amount of their exports fell within 3 years to around $8,000,000.

Wild and extravagant statements had been made as to what we were going to do in trade with Russia. Mark Twain's Col. Mulberry Sellers, famous for his eyewater for Egyptians—"there's millions in it"—was a piker compared with some of these recognition addicts in their claims for increased trade. It did not pan out. While we increased trade with Russia so that last year we sold $69,000,000 worth of goods, there has been no year when we sold as much as we did before recognition.

I want to approach the subject in no attitude of intemperate language. Other nations than Russia have been founded on assassination, mass murder, and ruthlessness. No dictator can be a dictator without the purge of those who disagree. It has been so from the beginning of the human race. It matters not in whatever form dictatorship comes—the formula for power is the same. It is the old Augustine doctrine that there are no inherent rights in any individual—that all rights come from the ruling force. We have thrown away the historical calendar of 10 centuries and gone back to the days of the serf villein and the regimented individuals in Russia, as in some other countries in Europe.

The soul of the world is upset. The struggle upward of great peoples has been halted. Democracy is crying in the wrecked streets of war-torn lands. Blood is on the lintel of millions of door posts. Fear possesses the minds of millions. Sweden and Norway, in the pathway of the Soviet Union ambitions, seeing what happened to Poland and what is going on in Finland, may well have visions of "red" armies despoiling their coasts and cities, villages, and people.

We may well break off our diplomatic relations with Russia because, entirely outside these warlike movements of the Soviet and devoid of any item of sympathy or financial aid in Finland, the solemn obligations because of which we established that diplomatic relationship have been violated. The marriage contract made by the Soviet Union with President Franklin D. Roosevelt has been broken by the party of the second part, said Soviet Union. My resolution provides for a divorce, a mensa et thoro. Later it may be necessary to make the divorce complete and permanent without alimony. My proposal is that it be accomplished without bloodshed.

My colleagues of the House, can we longer be wedded to Muscovite barbarism or the butchery of Stalin?

I ask the Committee on Foreign Relations to make an early report on that resolution and that we be given opportunity to vote upon it promptly. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BOLLES. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. To whom is that resolution addressed—to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. BOLLES. I introduced it here in the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. By any action of others, can the Department of State be instructed to withdraw the United States representative?

Mr. BOLLES. I will show the gentleman how this is accomplished by reading the resolution. The resolution takes all of the "biscuits off the table." It reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no moneys appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, shall be used for the purpose of maintaining an embassy in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of Russia or for the purpose of assigning or sending diplomatic officers or employees of the State Department as representatives—

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does not need to read any further. That is the old-fashioned way of the Congress asserting its rights by simply depriving them of the money; but the thought I wanted to ask the gentleman to put over is this: How can this administration criticize a great leader like Stalin for changing his mind because a very great man at a later date, under different conditions, would have acted so differently? [Laughter.] You heard that at the Andrew Jackson dinner if you listened in.

Mr. BOLLES. I did not listen in. I was very busy. [Laughter.] I have read fiction so long that I do not like to listen to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I wanted to remind the gentleman that great men in a very short time—for instance, from 1932 to this date—will change their minds, and they should not be criticized.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has made a very fine contribution, and I am sorry to see his contribution in part destroyed by facetious injections, but I want to try to make a contribution also to the gentleman's efforts. I was chairman of a special committee 5 years ago that investigated communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and bigotry in this country. We made a report then that the Litvinov agreement had been violated. We uncovered direct evidence showing that it had been violated, and the gentleman's statement that there has been a constant violation of the Litvinov agreement is supported by the evidence. I join with the gentleman in saying that the best way is to make a motion, when the appropriation bill comes before the House, to eliminate the appropriation for the next fiscal year. I intend to make such a motion when the bill is taken up in the House.

Mr. BOLLES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I assure the gentleman there are many of us on both sides of the aisle who are sincerely in sympathy with the purpose expressed in the speech and resolution offered by the gentleman who has just addressed the Committee. I am very certain that the communistic Government of Russia has violated, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has so well said, the agreement made with the United States Government. I feel that although perhaps we may be charged with being overly concerned, this Congress can well give prompt and careful consideration to such a resolution as has been presented, because I feel in my own heart that there has been an absolute disregard for the pledge made by Russia to this country. I trust that something can be done to sever diplomatic relations with such a nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BOLLES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not believe that the New Deal will sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia, which were negotiated under Finklestein, who calls himself Litvinov. Immediately following his negotiating the recognition of Russia, the New Deal preached, practiced, and emulated the Soviet conception of regimental bureaucracy as preached and practiced in Moscow. I want to ask the gentleman a question with reference to another related matter. The New Deal administration's so-called neutrality bill, the Bloom bill, was enacted in the special session of this Congress. This bill requires that the President issue a proclamation and apply the provisions of that act when he finds a state of war to exist. Do you not believe it is about time that the President, if he has not been able to find that war exists, should send an emissary to find that a state of war exists between the Communists of Moscow and the Polish people and the Communists of Moscow and the Finnish people, and that he should then issue the proclamation required under his own so-called Neutrality Act?

Mr. BOLLES. May I say to the gentleman that a distinguished Member of this House called the State Department and was informed that they did not know of any state of war existing between Russia and Finland. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am in favor of the gentleman's resolution, and I shall support it.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago, while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] was speaking, I asked him if it was not a fact that when there was an acute situation in the city of Cleveland recently the President of the United States issued orders for an additional quota under the Works Progress Administration for that city. I was unable to get a direct answer from the gentleman from Ohio at the outset, but when I insisted he could answer the question "Yes" or "No," he said "No."

I have just talked to Mr. Emerson Ross, Chief of the Division of Statistics of W. P. A., and Mr. Ross told me that the President did issue an order for 7,000 additional men to go to work in Cleveland immediately. If those 7,000 men have not been placed to work in the past 30 days, the fault lies solely with the city of Cleveland for not providing the projects, which, as we all know, is required under the law.

The gentleman from Ohio also stated that because they had a Republican Governor in Ohio the Democratic administration was not treating the State fairly in connection with W. P. A. I asked Mr. Ross what the situation was with reference to W. P. A. employment in Ohio in comparison with its population. He told me the employment under W. P. A. in Ohio was 6.8, while the population in Ohio was 5.4. In other words, W. P. A. in Ohio has today more than the quota to which it is entitled under its population.

Now, let us see what the chief official of Cleveland says about W. P. A. As I understand it, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is Congressman at large, and being a Congressman at large in a large State, naturally he cannot go into the conditions in his own home city as he could if his duties related solely to that city. Undoubtedly his mayor, Mr. Burton, who is also a Republican, is competent to speak for his own city. Mr. Burton appeared before the Woodrum committee investigating W. P. A. What did he say? He said there were no politics in W. P. A. in Cleveland. That was his language. Go get his testimony and find out what your mayor of Cleveland said before a committee of the present Congress. You will find it on page 424 of the printed hearings. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] asked Mayor Burton the following question, "Has the W. P. A. projected itself into the politics of your city?" Mayor Burton replied, "No, sir." This statement was made on May 8, 1939, after the reduction the gentleman referred to. Of course, it is needless for me to say all States and cities were subject to the same reduction.

Furthermore, the mayor of Cleveland made a speech over the radio in which he said there were no politics in the handling of W. P. A. or in other relief in the city of Cleveland. The answer to the gentleman's charges is found in the statement of his mayor, who belongs to his own political party.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. My time has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Would the gentleman mind telling me what date it was that the mayor of Cleveland made the statement that there were no politics in W. P. A.?

Mr. BENDER. I do not know.

Mr. SECCOMBE. It was early last year before the election, was it not?

Mr. BENDER. I do not know.

Mr. SECCOMBE. But politics entered into it right after that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will tell him when it was.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Why did the gentleman not give the date when he made the statement on the floor?

Mr. COCHRAN. It was in the middle of 1939, and you have not had an election since then. Go down stairs and get the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] yield for this purpose?

Mr. BENDER. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. BENDER. Since the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Kansas questioned me, I have checked the record as to Ohio's performance, and the latest available information it is possible for me to get is that for the year 1938 Ohio paid in Federal taxes $287,289,233. Ohio received for all purposes from the Federal Government in return $165,072,954. In other words, we received from the Federal Government only 57 percent of what we paid in. In that same year the State of Kansas paid in $16,644,000 and received $48,582,000, or 291 percent, of what was paid in. In Missouri they paid in $109,104,000 and received in return $84,044,000, or 77 percent, of what they paid to the Federal Government in taxes that year.

Regarding W. P. A., apparently the administration of W. P. A. in Cleveland was derelict in its duty when you say and they say here in Washington that we are permitting people in Cleveland to starve and at the same time they find opportunity to place 7,000 more. This figure I say is incorrect.

If they prorate the need for additional W. P. A. employment for the current year we were far under our quota.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I decline to yield.

I might inform the gentleman from Missouri that I am well informed as to conditions in Cleveland, because it is my home city. I know exactly how the mayor of Cleveland feels. He was here, and he appeared before the committee. He is a Republican. He has to work with the gentlemen down here and he is going to be just as nice to them as he possibly can. For that I admire him and respect him. He is a fine gentleman. I will say to you, however, that if you will examine the records for the year 1938, the election year, you will find my statement verified by the record as to the number who were employed before election. Then you will see the number on the rolls immediately after the election and during the entire period since.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFFER of Wisconsin. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio for straightening out the record in the controversy between the Republican Governor of Ohio and the New Deal leaders. Governor Bricker of Ohio opened up both barrels on the New Deal and apparently hit the bull's eye. That is why the New Deal leaders, from the President down, have been squawking, squealing, and apologizing since the Governor's exposé. I believe the New Deal crowd is more interested in trying to smear the Governor because of the 1940 and not the 1938 election. They no doubt have observed the reaction throughout the country and realize that Governor Bricker of Ohio is an exceptionally formidable potential dark horse Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1940.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. In the first place when he said that the 7,000 jobs that were authorized by the increased quota of the W. P. A. in Cleveland under the order of the President was a responsibility of the W. P. A., and their fault that the men did not go to work, he misinformed the House. For the information of the gentleman from Ohio and the Members of this body let me say that the Ohio State relief organization, under control of the Republicans, must certify them as eligible for W. P. A. work before they are authorized to be placed at work on the W. P. A. That Republican relief organization is responsible if they are not working, not the President nor the W. P. A.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I cannot yield; the gentleman would not yield to me.

I was astounded at the other remark when he intimated that a great Republican mayor from the great city of Cleveland would practically prevaricate in order to sustain his position. I am surprised at the confession.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, in going over the hearings on this bill I find something which I believe the Members of Congress should examine very carefully. I want to read from page 304 of the hearings, the testimony of Mr. Edgar Hoover in support of his request for the appropriation contained herein. At the outset, may I say that I do not propose to oppose this appropriation. Any appropriation that is needed to fight espionage and sabotage against our national defense is well spent; at the same time, I feel very strongly that the operations of the Federal Bureau of Investigation should be limited to the purposes and scope of uprooting spies, saboteurs, and other violators of the law. However, when the activities of the F. B. I. are extended to what to me smacks very much like the activities of a Gestapo or any of the so-called intelligence bureaus that exist in the dictator countries, I submit the Members of Congress should pause and examine this situation very closely. I now read from page 304, Mr. Hoover's testimony in which he states:

In September of 1939 we found it necessary to organize a General Intelligence Division in Washington. The establishment of this Division was made necessary by the President's proclamation directing that all complaints of violations of the national-defense statutes and proclamations be reported to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This Division now has compiled extensive indexes of individuals, groups, and organizations engaged in these subversive activities, in espionage activities, or any activities that are possibly detrimental to the internal security of the United States.

This language is very wide and most dangerous and to me indicates preparations for a drive that will be very similar to the activities of the Palmer days. This language indicates to me the beginning of a disease which will make our democratic body very, very sick. The creation of a super secret service body in a democracy is injecting our democratic institutions with the virulent toxine of an antidemocratic activity under the guise of so-called protection of so-called national defense. Himmler's super secret service in Germany has kept Hitler alive and German democrats dead or dying in concentration camps.

Mr. Hoover states further:

The indexes have been arranged not only alphabetically but also geographically, so that at any time, should we enter into the conflict abroad, we would be able to go into any of these communities and identify individuals or groups who might be a source of grave danger to the security of this country. Their backgrounds and activities are known to the Bureau. These indexes will be extremely important and valuable in grave emergency.

I submit that if Mr. Hoover has the names of those who are guilty of or suspected of engaging in espionage or sabotage, it is Mr. Hoover's duty and it is the duty of the Department of Justice and other law-enforcement agencies to immediately apprehend these people and put them in jail rather than leave their names on mere index cards. If, on the other hand, these people are not engaged in espionage or sabotage, but their names are put down on these index cards simply because of the views they may entertain, which may be contrary to the views entertained by Mr. Hoover and other people in power, then I submit the preparation of these indices is most dangerous to the constitutional rights of the American people. They constitute a real serious menace to civil liberties in the United States and they lay the foundation, I repeat, for Palmer raids, for a Palmer system, and for a Gestapo system in the United States. This innovation in the Federal Bureau of Investigation can be correctly described as the index-card menace to American liberty.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] 1 additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, furthermore, this type of language creates the very kind of hysteria that leads a country into war. The United States will go into war only as a result of a hysteria which is engendered by those who want to get us into war. This is hysteria language that will get us into war. Mr. Hoover uses the words "should we enter the conflict abroad." Then he paints the tremendous picture of 10,000 communications being received monthly by this Bureau, as he testifies in these hearings; put that picture before the American people and you are engendering war hysteria. By this type of testimony given by an important member of the Department of Justice two facts become obvious: First, we are preparing a general raid against civil rights, a black-out against the civil liberties of the American people, a system of terror by index cards such as you have in the Gestapo countries of the world; second, we are engendering a war hysteria which is a menace to the peace of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, several items appear in the pending deficiency bill which raise a question of policy with respect to national defense that I hope the Committee will indulge me very briefly as I seek to bring into this question such thought as I have devoted to it. In view of the conflagration in Europe, the whole question of adequate national defense is going to receive major emphasis in this session of the Congress. Every Member of this House, of course, is interested in a defensive establishment that is adequate for our needs in the light of world conditions. I am more concerned, however, with the whole pattern that is being projected, in view of the possible expenditures that may be entailed so far as the long-term future is concerned. When I think of the Army, I recall the story of a little town or village that purchased a fire truck. They were going to have suitable dedicatory exercises and they called on one member of the fire department to be ready to state a toast on the occasion of that dinner. He had great difficulty in contriving this toast, but on the night of the dinner, after they had been suitably invigorated by substantial viands, he stood up and stated: "Fellow citizens, I hope this fire truck may be like the old maids of the village, always ready but never called for."

I hope our defensive establishment may be like that—always ready but never called for. When we discuss the question of readiness, it means readiness not only in the light of what is happening in Europe today but it should be ready and it should follow a pattern under which we can dip down into the structure of national defense any time, whether it be today or 10 or 20 years hence, and say it is ready. It is a state of high efficiency which is achieved through economical methods.

There are two items in this bill that bring the whole question of policy to mind. The first one is an item of $18,000,000 for field exercises, which are in a state of commencement already and probably will run until June of next year. In addition thereto, there is an item of more than $22,000,000 for the purpose of transportation in order to articulate this program of mass maneuvers that General Marshall has designed for the Army.

It is interesting to read General Marshall's testimony. He says, first, that transportation is the most expensive item in connection with a mass maneuver to be held somewhere in the southeast part of this country; transportation, because you have to reach everywhere in this country, find your troops in different garrisons, posts, and cantonments, and send them down into the section where this mass maneuver is to take place. That is No. 1.

Secondly, he has stated that this is one of those infrequent things, and that one of the weaknesses in our Army is the fact that they can only plot these tactical diagrams on paper, but that it is theoretical because it has never been translated into terms of terrain action. I rather agree with the Chief of Staff that you have to do more than merely shuffle a lot of colored pins around a map in order to make a good soldier and develop the right kind of teamwork.

The third point is this—and he emphasizes this fact—that our Army units, in particular the Regular Army divisions, are so diffused in the country today that it becomes a matter of real expense to pick them up in one section or another and move them into the areas where a mass movement or a mass maneuver must take place.

In the light of that testimony I took down the annual report of the Secretary of War last night in connection with the number of military posts we have in the country, and I found that it was not a new subject with me. In the current annual report of the Secretary he states that not so long ago the War Department advocated the abolition of many of the smaller and more inconsequential garrisons in the country for the purpose of concentration, but that presently under the system of training we are following, it probably lends itself to that system of training, and hence nothing has ever been done about it.

May I emphasize that with the more than 250 military posts that we have in the country, which you can check from the Army Record, which I obtained from the Library yesterday, you will find them scattered all over the country. Almost every State has one. New York has 26, and Massachusetts has 13, and they are of all shades and descriptions and sizes. It seems to me that it is a hodge-podge pattern that ought to have the attention of Congress before we go too far in dumping a lot of money into this program, only to find that ultimately we have saddled the taxpayers of the country with a tremendous depreciation and maintenance expense and that we cannot draw back.

I found one Army post, for instance, that has only 53 officers and 400 men. Consider what you have to maintain when you maintain an Army post. If you have 400 men, you have to have hospital facilities, you have to have a sewage system, you have to have a heating plant, you have to have a lighting plant, you have to have all those auxiliary facilities that are enjoyed by almost any municipality.

Suppose we could take 10 or 15 such establishments and concentrate them somewhere. It would mean definite economies as far as the taxpayers are concerned, and then it would get close to the thing General Marshall emphasized in the hearings, namely, that you do not have to reach way out hundreds of miles away in order to get enough Regular Army troops and corps troops to have an effective maneuver and somehow articulate the things the strategists and tacticians have been setting out on paper for a great many years.

Many of these posts are a relic of frontier days. As the frontier was pushed westward they went down into Kansas and Arizona or into North Dakota and established garrisons there. Then little by little a larger increment of troops was placed there, more buildings and facilities and structures were erected, and so we took on a quality of permanency. This whole diffused set-up today is nothing else except testimony to a great patchwork of camps, garrisons, and posts in the country, that does not make for an efficient military structure.

After all, when we talk about national defense the whole purpose is to take a raw recruit and dump him into a system of discipline and training and develop there an efficient fighting unit, properly armed with all the implements and the requirements of warfare. That is simply translating the thing in terms of factory language. Yet I fancy, if you got some of the better organizers in the country together and laid this thing out on paper for them, they would say that we are following a very inefficient and ineffective plan today that is going to cost a great deal of maintenance money as time goes on.

Look at what we have spent. When the National Industrial Recovery Act was before the Congress some years ago we made available a great chunk of funds for Executive allocation. How much of it went to public works for national-defense purposes for the Army? One hundred and two million dollars. A good deal of that money was used to build structures in different parts of the country. There came the Emergency Relief Acts of 1935, 1936, and 1937. We gave the Army $61,000,000 more for that purpose. In 1938 we gave them $74,000,000 and in 1939, $51,000,000. So we have made available for housing facilities for the Army $253,000,000, expended in different sections of the country.

When you set up a series of barracks, heating plants, lighting plants, hospitals, fire stations, and all the rest, do not forget that there is a continuing repair cost every year; do not forget that there is a continuing maintenance cost every year; so that the further we project this building and construction program in all sections of the country, the more we add to the repair requirement in the Budget year after year, and, in my judgment, that does not constitute efficiency.

This bill will provide for maximum strength of the Army of 227,000. Suppose that were allocated among 48 States of the Union. Suppose you had one camp or one post in each State in the Union. That would be 48. Suppose you had a little more than that, so that you had 100. It would make it possible to eliminate almost 150 garrisons in this country in the interest of efficiency and in the interest of efficient expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

I am satisfied that a committee consisting of a few Members of the House, a few Senators, a few Representatives of the War Department, and a few very capable organization experts, to be appointed by the President, could go through this whole military set-up and make recommendations that would save this country $100,000,000 a year, and not impair its efficiency. When you translate that in terms of years to come, it is going to mean a great deal as far as the taxpayer is concerned, and that is my principal interest.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is not a Member of Congress who is not interested in adequate defense, but I am satisfied that you want to get a dollar's worth for every dollar that is expended.

I do not pretend to be an amateur tactician or a sapient strategist. Standing on the side lines I just look at the map of the United States of America and see a camp in North Dakota, several in Illinois, several in Massachusetts and in Kansas and in Missouri and in North Carolina and elsewhere. It seems to me if the strategic spots in the country were picked out and you had a camp there, and then probably one for every State so that the civilian military training system could be carried out and so that the National Guard maneuvers might be provided for, then you would take adequate care of the whole training program, reduce the tremendous and recurring expense of maintenance and construction and repair, year after year, and then give us an efficient national-defense establishment for a whole lot less than it is costing at the present time.

Sooner or later, despite the fact that the people have a very sweet attitude on this thing now and are willing to have themselves taxed for the purpose of a better and more efficient national defense, there will come a time when they will rebel as this thing continues to hug the $2,000,000,000 mark every year for Army and Navy regular and supplemental appropriations, and it occurs to me that the Congress might well give attention to this program of reducing the number of military posts in the country and then subserving the thing that General Marshall emphasizes in this report, the need for mass maneuvers without the tremendous incidental cost of transportation and all the other things that go with it. You would then have the necessary requirement of troops in each section of the country and would not have to depend on the delivery of motor transportation to the Army before that kind of mass maneuver can be properly carried on. So as we address ourselves to national defense in this session, let us have some regard for the establishment of a durable pattern that will be just as good 25 years hence as it will be in 1940. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, following up somewhat the discussion that is taking place on the floor of the House this afternoon with respect to the relief situation in the State of Ohio, I want to take just a few moments to speak on the general problem of relief and also the outlook the Members of Congress should have in approaching the whole question.

I made the statement this afternoon that in the distribution of relief money through the medium of W. P. A. the Federal Government is going into many States of the Union and paying nearly the entire cost of relief. There are many instances of States wherein the Federal Government assumes well over 95 percent, and this, mind you, in those States of the Union where industrial conditions have consistently improved through the period from 1920, 1929, 1935, and 1937.

Much of this information was before the Appropriations Committee when it had the relief bill under consideration a year ago. I well recall on the floor of the House when the W. P. A. bill was under discussion that I quoted the Governor of one of the States, and I will read what he had to say in the newspaper, without naming the State again:

If you come intent on material gains, bear in mind that—is today the most prosperous State in the Union.

Despite this most prosperous situation, the Federal Government in that particular case in 1938 spent $23,413,000, or 95.1 percent of the cost of relief. And bear this in mind, particularly in relation to the city of Cleveland. We are informed that that city has spent a great deal of money locally from its own taxes for direct relief, and amounting, perhaps, to $1,000,000 or more, whereas in the State that the Governor said was the most prosperous in the Union the Federal Government in 1938 contributed over $23,000,000, while the State itself and all the cities and towns of that State were spending only $1,199,000 during the same period for direct relief.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What State was that?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Well, the State was Louisiana, but that is only one of many States. There are a number of others where the Federal Government pays from 95 to 98 percent of the cost of relief.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That is the State where a bunch of them are under indictment for irregularities?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I do not wish to comment on that, because, otherwise, it is a pretty good State, and many things like that have happened in my State that the State itself or the people are not responsible for. Time alone will take care of that, I hope. The point I wish to bring to the attention of this House is that I have made it my business in the past 2 years to visit many of these States and confer with the municipal officials, including the mayors of the cities, the chairmen of the finance committees, and the city managers, in order to determine just what the local problem is insofar as relief is concerned; and in many of these States the total expenditures for direct relief is less than that for each of half a dozen cities I could name in my own State. When I mention the relief cost of the State I mean the total expenditures by all the cities and towns of the State for direct-relief purposes.

As we peruse the records and see how much revenue is coming from those States, and then compare it with the huge sums the Federal Government puts back into them by way of Federal grants, the question uppermost in my mind is, How long can we continue that condition? There are many other cases where the Federal grants run from 2 to 10 times the amount of the Federal internal-revenue collections from those States. The gentleman from Kansas seems to be complaining this afternoon about relief conditions in the city of Cleveland and in the State of Ohio. Yet, if the State of Ohio, which contributes nearly twice as much money to the Federal Government as it gets back, was used the same as the State of Kansas, it would have no complaint. The State of Kansas in 1938 contributed $16,000,000 to the Federal Government and received $48,000,000. Kansas certainly is used pretty well by the Federal Government.

If the Federal Government is willing to pay the bill and drag that money from the great industrial States of the Union, then, of course, we cannot blame those States to which I have referred for taking the money. It is up to us to put a stop to that particular situation, which is not only bringing ruination to these industrial States of the Union, but I believe is eliminating local responsibility from those who ought to assume it in this relief problem.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. DARDEN. I was interested in the gentleman's observation in respect to taxes paid in contrast to relief received. What has the gentleman to say about a situation such as this: Take the Ford Motor Co., for example. It pays its income taxes in the State of incorporation, and yet that income tax is passed on to consumers in every State in the Union, and is paid in part by every State in the Union. Is it a fair test to take States, say, like New York and New Jersey, or the small State of Delaware, where there is a tremendous number of incorporations, and use them as an indication that the State pays much more than it receives, while other States receive less than they pay?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The only question I raise in that respect is that the economic condition of these industrial States is built up around the industries that come there. When these industries come into our states, it is not all "gravy." They bring many problems, not only relief but the need for sewers and schools and highways, and every kind of municipal service, and when we directly attack that source of revenue around which the economic condition of the State has been built, then we strike at the very basis on which they depend for revenue.

But aside from that, I am speaking about those States where, because of Federal contribution, Federal grants, Federal subsidies, and so forth, there has come statutory exemption of taxes for real estate on properties of from one to five thousand dollars, assessed value, and in many States the assessed value represents only 50 percent of the real value.

When they exempt factories from taxation for 5 to 15 years, when they have no income or inheritance tax that many other States depend on for a major source of income, when they are getting to be tax-dodging States and refuse to raise locally sufficient money to take care of their relief problem, then I resent the Federal Government reaching into these other industrial States of the Union and impairing their source of revenue upon which they must depend in order to exist under the most depressing economic conditions that exist at the present time.

That is my complaint. No State ought to expect the Federal Government to pay 95 to 99 percent of the cost of relief and then, by local tax exemption, get off scot free from assuming the local responsibility that ought to be theirs and would be theirs if our Members of Congress will see to it that they properly assume their rightful burdens of government. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have had a great deal of discussion this afternoon on matters not bearing directly on the bill under consideration. I want to talk for only a moment or two on some of the features included in this bill with reference to the Navy.

I was very much interested in what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] had to say about the Army. I think the same thing is true about the naval forces of the United States. I think we have an excellent Navy. It is a splendid force—both officers and men. The appointment of Mr. Edison only a few days ago as successor to Mr. Swanson was a particularly happy one.

There is no question about the fact that keeping up the defense of the country entails a heavy financial burden. I think we all appreciate that, and we realize that it is a sacrifice which on account of the times must be met. We must make no mistake about the fact that these are desperate years in which we are living and that the only people who will survive are the people who are able to take care of themselves. This country has nobody to whom it can turn in time of grave emergency. It is of vital consequence that no money be wasted on the naval or military forces of the United States, but it is equally important that they be kept on an adequate and well-prepared basis. I do not believe it an extravagant statement to say that the genuine desire and effort on the part of the party in power in Great Britain—the Labor Party in the first instance and later the Baldwin Government—to forward the cause of peace by disarmament, and like views held by our own administrations through this same period, contributed as much to the unfortunate situation abroad in the world today as any other single thing. Had we been able to keep our armament at a strength that would have commanded respect of our views in the period from 1922 down to 1933 or 1934, we would not now be faced with the necessity of tremendous naval expansion and the very heavy cost incidental to it. It is my belief that the territorial integrity of China would have been preserved without a shot being fired. Nor would Hitler have had the opportunity to ruthlessly overrun his weak neighbors. The success of Hitler has been due no more to the preparation of his own armed forces than to the failure of the western democracies to arm.

Dictatorship rests on armed force. It fears nothing except power—power great enough to curb its lawlessness and oppression.

The requests that have been made in this bill are reasonable. Many of you know that during periods of peace it has been the custom to keep the Navy on an 85-percent war basis. I have been of the opinion that the Navy, at all times, ought to be on a war footing; that it ought to be manned 100 percent, because it is an arm of the national defense, and we are not able, quickly, to bring it to 100 percent strength. The training of the personnel of the Navy requires time. The construction of naval vessels is a very slow and tedious undertaking. It is a truism, almost, that all wars are fought with the naval power in existence at the outbreak of the war. Countries are rarely able to add to their naval strength during a period of conflict. So, the requirements that are being met in this bill are simply those necessary to put our fleet, the United States Fleet, on a war basis. A basis which will permit us to deal immediately and effectively with an enemy.

I think, frankly, there is some question—and I hope to have an opportunity at a later time to say something about it—as to the amount of money being spent in reference to the neutrality patrol. Admiral Ellis is doing good work with his command in the Atlantic, but I think there is grave question about the 300-mile limit set out in the declaration of Panama. It has, of course, no legal basis; it is not an area that we are called upon to defend, or in which we have any legal right superior to any other power. We have no rights beyond the territorial limits of the United States. We have interests in our shipping wherever it may be. But to draw a line in the western part of the Atlantic and claim control over the water lying within it is not only folly—it is a dangerous precedent. No step should be taken by this Government that might tend to embroil us within the limitation of 300 miles off our coasts. The seas are free. We have fought to maintain this doctrine. Why should we seek to repudiate it now. Our interest lies in its assertion, not its denial, with the exception of this expenditure—and it is not great—in this bill, the request for some $150,000,000 for the United States Navy is a reasonable request. It is money that is needed, and it is money which I hope the Congress will be inclined to make available, and available immediately. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I was presiding at the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] spoke. I listened carefully and found myself agreeing quite generally with his remarks in favor of an economy to be brought about through a wise concentration of our Army camps and posts. I am aware of the fact that we have many relics of an earlier date. I am also aware of the fact that Members of Congress, perhaps like myself, more or less locally minded, each feels the need in his own State or district of having an Army post. Perhaps the West today is covered with Army posts which are relics of the day when the Indian wars made such posts necessary. So I want to express general approval of the proposal advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and others.

I have a feeling, of course, that the Army, the Army officers, the military organizations, taking all factors into account, ought to lead the way in this sensible suggestion of reorganization for our physical defense plans, so to speak. I am aware, of course, that strategic locations will be thereby considered. Do not smile if I may seem to blow hot and cold in the same breath by wanting to consolidate and yet keep all of mine—one. I recall that I mentioned to members of the House Military Affairs Committee in the Seventy-Fifth Congress that I thought Fort Huachuca, down in southern Arizona—this was 2 years ago—ought to receive some consideration and rehabilitation. Such has since been done to a certain extent, but perhaps not to a sufficient extent.

One member of the committee asked me: "Why should we give any thought to that distant outpost down on the southern desert?" I explained that it was the only military post we had between El Paso and the Pacific Ocean, a long stretch and a very strategic border. It is not that I am thinking of our neighbor on the south, who might cause trouble, but I was thinking then and am still thinking of this, that in the event of an Asiatic war, or an enemy striking us from across the Pacific, that that particular back door, if left unguarded or partially so, would be our vulnerable point. I would say that it is one of the first ten which must be kept up.

I am not refuting the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] now, for I noticed he said that perhaps one post ought to be retained in each State for the training of civilians and for other purposes. Such a plan would take care of Fort Huachuca for Arizona, but I believe we should have more protection along that border. I am calling attention to the fact that something more is needed besides the persuasive power of a Congressman pulling for his district.

I have faith in the impartial, scientific judgment of our Army officials and those charged by us with the responsibility of protecting our country. So, with this understanding, I want to express approval of the proposals made from the floor on this matter of economy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill down to line 11, page 2.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7805, making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—CONSERVATION OF NATIONAL RESOURCES (H. DOC. NO. 561)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The provision for the wise use and conservation of our national resources must necessarily be one of the primary responsibilities of the Federal Government at all times. Through research leading to the development of programs and recommendations, the National Resources Planning Board and its predecessors have been at work for the past 6 years in the interest of planning for resources conservation and use. This is democratic planning. It is decentralized; it is based on the wishes of the people, who, through their elected representatives, decide what plans we will develop and follow; it is planning "from the ground up."

The accomplishments of the National Resources Committee in a large measure have been the results of cooperation with Federal and non-Federal planning groups. Today there are planning organizations by various names in many Federal agencies; there are also 43 State planning boards and hundreds of county and city planning groups. The continuance in operation of these democratic planning activities demonstrates the desire of our people for the utilization of long-range planning to conserve and develop our resources.

The functions and duties of the National Resources Committee, as you know, were transferred under Reorganization Plan No. 1 to the National Resources Planning Board in the Executive Office. The story of the committee's work and a picture of the responsibilities that lie ahead of the National Resources Planning Board are presented in the progress report of the National Resources Committee, which I now transmit for the information of the Congress.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 11, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the committee today and to include therein certain statements and brief extracts from the hearings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We give Thee thanks, our Father and our God, lover of our souls, to whom our lives are bound by ties death cannot break. Forgive our lack of faith, for Thy presence often seems to us like a clouded mirror that has been breathed upon. The Lord shall preserve our going out and our coming in, and His love and mercy ever wait at the door to welcome us. Deepen our reverence for Thee, O God; increase within us the divine that it may dominate the human. We pray that our chief desire shall be to hallow Thy name in thought, word, and deed, emulating the earthly life of our Master. Enable us to put into daily practice the sublime injunction:

All things whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do you even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.

In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5118. An act for the relief of the State of Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein some correspondence I have received from a Government agency, as well as a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement made before the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday morning by the Honorable Cordell Hull.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on this floor, the distinguished and beloved gentleman from Tennessee made various pertinent and pungent observations regarding the status of the administrative office of W. P. A., in the District of Columbia. I rise to accede and concur with the gentleman's remarks and to compliment him for the crystal-like clarity in which he views one of the smuggest organizations in Washington, D. C.

I was interested to read in the newspaper that the Administrator declared,

My office is always open, and I am always personally available, not only to Representatives and Senators, but to their representatives. I have always been only too glad to discuss, with the Representatives of the people, any question which may help to alleviate conditions.

I was also interested to read where the Administrator maintained his office had informed the gentleman from Tennessee to send his constituent around and he would be immediately taken care of. That is a happy solution. I have dug up a needy citizen of the Nation, and I shall forthwith send him to the District of Columbia W. P. A. office with the childlike faith that the Administrator's generous offer includes Representatives holding to the Republican philosophy of government.

STATE OF OHIO

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5118) for the relief of the State of Ohio, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, the Social Security Board is authorized and directed to ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio as old-age assistance (money payments) for the month of October 1938, with respect to each aged needy individual eligible under the State old-age assistance plan, who at the time of such disbursement was 65 years of age or older, and was not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for such month as exceeded $30, and to certify an amount equal to one-half such total of such sums to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, pay the amount so certified to the State of Ohio.

"For purposes of estimates and other certifications with respect to the State of Ohio under title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid shall be considered as certification of exactly the correct amount payable with respect to such month, without any increase or reduction of amount with respect to any other periods except for recoveries from estates in or for such month.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of title I of the Social Security Act, such amount so paid may be used for purposes other than old-age assistance."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out just a few minutes ago by a gentleman on the Republican side, my warm friend and able colleague the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] yesterday took occasion to call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that we have present in the various governmental departments and agencies certain individuals who are "insolent, arrogant, and impudent two-bit nitwits." I am not going to argue the point with the gentleman from Tennessee, because I believe we all agree with that.

However, I do have an interest in the matter, inasmuch as the name of Paul Edwards was made the main subject of the assault by my able colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Paul Edwards is the local director of the W. P. A. for the District of Columbia, having but recently been nominated for and assigned to that position. I have enjoyed a fine friendship with Paul Edwards for several years, that friendship resulting from the admiration I came to have for him for the fine job of work he did when he was thrust into my State of Massachusetts a few years ago to clean up a bad mess in the W. P. A.

W. P. A. in Massachusetts at that time was in a frightful condition, but Paul Edwards courageously tackled the job and saw it through to a finish, with the result that the fine-working W. P. A. machinery which we now have in the State of Massachusetts can be accredited solely to his efforts. Withstanding a storm of abuse and criticism, he cleaned up a very bad situation.

Knowing Paul Edwards and his fine record, I sincerely regret the incident which has been called to the attention of the Members of this House by my warm friend from Tennessee. I am sure that the difficulty experienced by my colleague was entirely a misunderstanding, and I am certain that if he could come to know Mr. Edwards personally he would find that Mr. Edwards is anything but an arrogant, impudent, insolent nitwit. He would find him, in fact, to be the same fine gentleman and character as is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. I know he would find him a conscientious, able, intelligent executive, ready and eager to cooperate not only with him but with every Member of this Congress.

I should be happy to act in bringing these two fine gentlemen together, if my good friend from Tennessee so desires; and I hope the gentleman will take advantage of my offer, as I am sure that he would discover that Mr. Edwards does not come within the category he mentioned yesterday, but rather is a high type of official.

For my own part, let me state that I feel that if we had a few more like Paul Edwards in responsible positions in our Government departments and agencies we Members of Congress would suffer fewer headaches.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer several resolutions which I send to the desk and ask their immediate adoption.

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Respectfully,

JOHN Z. ANDERSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, each of the several resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the proceedings of the Thirty-sixth Annual Meeting of the United States Group or the American Group of the Interparliamentary Union. This meeting was held last January in the rooms of the Committee on the Library of the Senate. It contains very largely a speech of Senator BARKLEY, and in view of the fact that this is a semigovernmental organization, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent not only to have it printed in the RECORD but also that the request be granted now even though it may go half a page or so beyond the space limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ALEXANDER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein a letter from Mr. A. M. Kleinschmitt, traffic manager of the Minnesota State Prison Industries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an editorial by Mr. Tom R. Hutton, appearing in the Birmingham Press of January 10, 1940, entitled "A Theory Sustained."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reviewing attorneys of the National Labor Relations Board examine hundreds, sometimes thousands, of pages of testimony. Then they orally present to the Board their conclusions or findings. The Board then, stating its conclusion on the issues, directs the reviewing attorney to write an opinion in conformity to those conclusions which it has expressed, which the Board adopts. Then when the case gets to the circuit court of appeals, that court under the act adopts the opinion of the Board if there is evidence in the record to sustain it. So what you have is this: The reviewing attorney writes the opinion adopted by the Board, which is then adopted by the circuit court of appeals.

Now, if you will go over to the caucus room in the old House Office Building where the committee is doing such a good job, the Smith committee, and take a look at the "reviewing attorneys," you will understand why there has been so much trouble. Those girls who are acting as "reviewing attorneys" for the Board are fine young ladies. They are good looking; they are intelligent appearing; they are just as wonderful, I imagine, to visit with, to talk with, and to look at as any like number of young ladies anywhere in the country, but the chances are 99 out of 100 that none of them ever changed a diaper, hung out a washing, or baked a loaf of bread. None of them has had any judicial or industrial experience to qualify her for the job they are trying to do, and yet here they are—after all—good looking, intelligent appearing as they may be, and well groomed all of them, writing opinions upon which the jobs of hundreds of thousands of men depend and upon which the success or failure of an industrial enterprise may depend and we stand for it.

These young women, these girls—and I make no criticism of them—are orally stating to the Board their conclusions of what is shown by the testimony. They have not on all occasions heard the witnesses testify. They have been deprived of judging from the appearance of the witness on the stand; from the witness' demeanor, the degree of the witness' interest or bias, or lack of either, the weight which should be given to the testimony of any particular witness.

Nevertheless, they go before the Board, state their conclusions, influenced undoubtedly by their previous training and experience—and some of these attorneys have been recommended by the C. I. O.'s general counsel—and the Board, the National Labor Relations Board, bases its opinion upon those conclusions. Then the judges in the circuit court of appeals adopt the decision of the Board, if there is evidence in the record to sustain that decision.

I have repeated my statement as to the procedure of the Board because that procedure is most startling. I am wondering how, when this situation comes to the attention of the judges of the circuit courts of appeal—courts which have always had the respect and the confidence of the people as a whole—they will feel when they discover the flimsy foundation upon which they have based their decisions.

Probably they will try to escape the disgrace of the procedure by stating, as they have so often, that the fault and the remedy lies with Congress. Undoubtedly, the major fault does rest upon us. But the courts, too, have had a responsibility to see that citizens had equal protection of the law. The courts had the responsibility of refusing to uphold acts of Congress which denied due process, equal protection of the law, to employees and to employer alike.

But let us here in Congress no longer delay, no longer shirk our duty. Let us at the very first opportunity abolish this Board and amend the law so as to protect the rights of all those who come within its provisions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a short excerpt from an article in this week's Liberty by our colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an article that appeared in the Washington Post of January 12.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article which appeared in the Alabama Legionnaire by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] entitled "Study of Nation's Military Installations."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter to myself from the Fortune Magazine in respect to an editorial appearing in that magazine on War and Peace and my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7805, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This bill as presented to the House by the committee was predicated on a program outlined by the Army and the National Guard, which contemplated the attainment of certain objectives in the way of increased enlisted personnel, as of December 31. The program has not moved as rapidly as the War Department had anticipated. The enlisted personnel of the Army, as provided for in this bill, which the program contemplated would be attained by December 31, is now estimated not to be reached until February 15, according to their present schedule. The National Guard program is now estimated not to be reached until March 1. That drag in the program will make it possible to make additional reductions in the applicable appropriations carried in the bill. The clerk of the committee has been at work with the budget officers and they have furnished us with a list of amendments which may be made to a number of the appropriating items, which will bring about further reductions totaling $2,586,656, which, added to the decrease of $4,801,615, which the committee effected in the Budget estimates in reporting the bill, will leave the bill as standing before the House, if the committee amendments are adopted, in the total sum of $264,611,252, or $7,388,271 under the Budget recommendations. I emphasize that these reductions do not mean a curtailment of the program. They mean simply that the program has not moved as quickly, and the objectives have not been attained as rapidly as had been anticipated when the Budget estimates were sent up, and the committee reported the program to the House.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to have inserted in them a tabulation of these several amendments as they will be offered by the committee from time to time as we reach the items in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am sorry that I did not get an opportunity to address the committee on this bill before, but I was engaged in the Subcommittee on Agriculture. My attitude may be a little singular on this bill. I am a member of this deficiency subcommittee, and I think I am right in my attitude and that I represent a large number of my constituency and also the constituency of the United States. I am opposed particularly to the $18,000,000 for the 8 months Army maneuvers. I am not against national defense. I resent, first of all, the action of the President of the United States in acting on September 8, under the emergency provision of the National Defense Act and the Neutrality Act when Congress was meeting on the 21st of September, only 13 days away. Further, in the same week that he declared an emergency, the call for the special session of Congress was made. There was no effort on his part to cooperate with the Congress on the importance of this program, but he took advantage of the acts which gave him this power in congressional recess to declare an emergency and make these increases. I do not think it is compatible with our democracy that we should let that go unnoticed.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first appropriation bill to be considered by the Congress in this session. If gentlemen are going to do business in the matter of reducing expenditures, here is a good place to start on the first bill, regardless of what the bill is, and thereby show their attitude. Your attitude on the other bills will be shown by your attitude on this first bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is a wonderful and a brilliant man, but to me his first speech was a paradox. He spoke wonderfully of reductions, and then he spoke wonderfully also of accepting practically what the Army experts—the brain trust of our national defense—suggested.

They are the "brain trust" of our national defense. We should accept their suggestions to a reasonable degree, but they are always scared. They never think our Navy is big enough. We have been increasing the Navy all of the 7 or 8 years of this administration. Some people think that we have not anything to start with right now. I cannot understand the attitude of some of our economy friends who would advocate economy and then swallow a bill like this. We reduced it only $4,000,000 out of $266,000,000, and now, after exerting ourselves and going through some more labor, we cut off two and a half million more from this big bill. Nobody knows what is adequate national defense. There will be a second Army deficiency and a third one in all probability right along this line, if we let these men have their way, and we subject our sober second thought in this purported emergency to the proposals that are going to come up from the Army and the Navy.

There is no emergency any more than there was 4 months ago. We are a long way from a real emergency. Nobody is half as scared today as they were that week when the national emergency was declared. Who are you afraid of? Russia? The Allies seem to be taking pretty good care of Germany, and they are a long way off. They can hold up all sorts of conceivable things to scare us. I do not propose to be scared. I think we have an adequate defense. When we ask these experts in the committee about what some other generals have thought, who disagreed with them, they do not answer. It is a sort of a prerogative that they can refuse to answer because there are so many hidden secrets about it. [Applause and laughter.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIELD EXERCISES

For an additional amount for the conduct of special field exercises, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $18,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941: Provided, That this appropriation may be used for troop movements and travel of personnel of the Regular Army in connection with field exercises, including special combat training for small units, and settlement of claims (not exceeding $500 in any one case) for damages to or loss of private property resulting from such exercises, heretofore or hereafter accrued, when payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages, and when each claim is substantiated in such manner as the Secretary of War may prescribe by regulation and is approved by the Secretary of War, such action thereon to be conclusive.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 4, line 10, strike out "$18,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment with the idea that the proposed field exercises or maneuvers could well be accomplished within a space of 2 months rather than 4 months. Now, let us look at the picture a little. We are providing for the concentration of the National Guard units for about 2 weeks in connection with these maneuvers. Unquestionably, it is desirable that our general officers and our officers as a whole have an opportunity to learn how to command and handle troops in larger numbers than they have had the opportunity in the maneuvers held heretofore, because so many of their outfits have been skeleton forces.

We have heard of maneuvers abroad, of large army units, never lasting more than a couple of weeks, and some of the time only a week. Now, in order to be especially liberal I am suggesting that this figure be cut down from $18,000,000 to $9,000,000, and that this period of maneuvers be provided for on the basis of 2 months rather than 4 months. We would save $9,000,000.

We are bringing this appropriation bill here with the proposals which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has suggested, with a reduction of less than six and one-half million dollars on a proposed Budget estimate of $271,000,000. To my mind, we have gone pretty wild on this proposition. We have gone pretty wild in building up the personnel of the Army without building up the material with which they can operate. I think we should at least be half-way conservative and cut this figure for maneuvers from 4 months to 2 months.

I hope that this amendment will be adopted and that we will be able to save $9,000,000 and be able to put that maneuver proposition on a more moderate and what seems to me to be a more intelligent basis. I do not see how, with the National Guard available for 2 weeks, that 4 months' maneuvers are necessary. I think we can very readily cut this down from $18,000,000 to $9,000,000 and still have plenty of money for the operations of defense.

Personally, I like to see the Army strong enough to meet our needs. I believe it would be strong enough to meet our needs with very considerable cuts, and I believe that this cut should be made and could be made to advantage, and that we could save a little money and really improve these maneuvers by bringing them within a space of 2 months, and not having so much time when they do not have a large number of troops that will be added by the National Guard available to participate.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

If we would pursue the logic of my good friend from New York [Mr. TABER], we could increase the saving to $18,000,000 and not have any maneuvers at all. If the object of passing this bill is to save money, we could just not appropriate any money and save $267,000,000.

With my high regard for the opinion of my good friend from New York, I must say I would rather trust the judgment of General Pershing and General Marshall as to how these maneuvers should be conducted, and what it is necessary to do in order properly to prepare our armed forces, than to trust the judgment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] or my own judgment.

I do not believe we have ever had a greater Chief of Staff of the American Army than we have today. If he does not know his business and cannot be trusted, then certainly we should have some drastic changes in our military set-up.

Nobody claims that the $18,000,000 is too much money for what he proposes to do. They propose now to have maneuvers in all of the corps areas. They have never had that before. It has been done once every 4 years. If you will turn to page 138 of the hearings, which time does not permit me to read now, there is quoted there three paragraphs from General Pershing's book, showing the drastic need for these Army maneuvers, showing how the American Expeditionary Force in the World War was severely handicapped because the force sent over there, while individually of the finest type America could produce, had never had the collective training that was necessary. If you will read the splendid statement of General Marshall, he likens the situation to this: He said if you will take the finest football players that America can produce in each individual position and give them a set of fine rules and put them out on the field, unless they have rehearsed and had teamwork, a high-school team can whip them. That is exactly the situation.

The field maneuvers of the Army, which is a continuous program starting last fall and running through next summer would be interrupted and interfered with if you reduce this amount. It would cut into the program just that much. Maneuvering is the very heart of the defense program as provided for in this emergency legislation, and I think it would be a great mistake to take it out on the theory of economy. If you feel it is a question of saving money, then save it all, do not appropriate any of it; but if you are going to have such training let us take the judgment of those whom we have selected because of their peculiar fitness and knowledge of the subject and do the job in its entirety. We must rely upon their information and advice in this respect.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. As I read page 138 of the hearings the reason given there for the difficulty in France was that they had been changing the personnel all the time. The personnel was constantly changed because they had not had maneuvers ahead of time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They had to be changed in order to be trained. That is exactly why the Army wants these maneuvers. If we have complete training as divisions, corps, and armies, our forces will be ready for defense purposes when they are called upon. If we only have maneuvers with isolated units, they will only be partially trained. The very largest groups must know how to function when brought together.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The real reason given by General Marshall when he came before the subcommittee for this $18,000,000 was the psychology of the generals, that it would be a fine thing for the psychology of the generals. That was the essence of it. But when it comes to needing six or seven divisions in the maneuvers for so long a time, in the psychology of the American people, if it means anything, it means war, if we have these 8 months' maneuvers, and spend $18,000,000 on it. The psychology of my people will accept it as meaning war.

Talk about the psychology of the generals! The psychology of the people is to be thought about in this regard. I feel that if there ever was a thing that ought to be cut down or cut out without cutting out the whole bill, then here is the best place to make the cut. Even if we defeat this item or defeat the bill, it would not mean that we would not have an army and a navy. They could bring back another bill. But we will register our protest against accepting the Army and Navy heads' dictum for everything, laying aside all our own judgment. Wait until you get down to agriculture and see some of the things they are going to do to you in the name of national emergency and patriotism. Those feelings are strong now, but wait until they come along to you in these other bills that are coming in. Then you will begin to say, "I wish I had started early in this session on the Army and the Navy." Here is your chance now. What are you going to do with it? Some of you are going to be very red in the face before the session is over because of the things they are going to do to you in order to finance the Army and the Navy. This is the time to start. [Applause.]

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the holding of Army maneuvers is not an innovation. We have held Army maneuvers for years for the purpose of properly training our officers and troops in event of an emergency. Such maneuvers as are planned for Fort Benning this year are, in my opinion, absolutely essential from a national-defense standpoint.

I see no reason why the Nation should become excited over the fact that Army maneuvers are being conducted in one section of the country. Maneuvers were held in Michigan 4 years ago and the residents of my State, or that section, did not become worried concerning them. The opposite reaction was noted. The maneuvers, instead of exciting the citizens of Michigan, served to create confidence in the Nation's military forces.

I took the floor of this House yesterday in support of this legislation and I related experiences during a recent visit to Fort Benning, Ga., where these proposed maneuvers are to be held. I observed during my visit the preparations now being made to conduct these maneuvers. A good job is being done down there in Georgia, and it is an important job. In my opinion, it is essential that the proposed appropriation be passed, if we are to prepare an adequate defense for this Nation.

Our Army maneuvers should not cause any citizen to become alarmed. They are absolutely essential in the training of our officers and men. These maneuvers will cost money. That is certain. But the results obtained will be worth the expenditure. I am sure of that.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFFER of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. I quite agree with the gentleman. I think that had any of the Members visited Plattsburg this summer, when they had 50,000 of our soldiers up there and had seen the mistakes that were made, realizing what it would have meant had it been a real battle instead of a maneuver, they would change their minds. These mistakes were made because they had not previously been able to get these large groups of men together and train them to know what to do under certain circumstances. I believe that had you been up there for 2 days, as I was, you would all vote against this amendment.

Mr. SHAFFER of Michigan. I believe the holding of these maneuvers serve to create confidence in our Army on the part of our people. I believe they should be held and I feel that the full appropriation should be voted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 50, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for pay of the Army, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $13,281,675: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitations as to numbers of commissioned officers and enlisted men specified under this head in such act.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 5, line 10, strike out "$13,281,675" and insert "$12,714,196."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence of the Army: For an additional amount for subsistence of the Army, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $2,872,488.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 6, line 5, strike out "$2,872,488" and insert "$2,737,488."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for the purchase of draft and pack animals and horses, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $15,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we talk about horses in the paragraph of the bill just read, and I rise at this time to speak of a horse of a different color. We are now asked to appropriate the sum of $267,000,000 for additional military operations by Executive order. After statements we have heard from the President of the United States on economy, it is really a horse of a different color. I want to call attention to a statement made by the President of the United States in his address in St. Louis, Mo., on October 21, 1932, as follows:

I called attention in my address at Pittsburgh on Wednesday night to the great importance of Federal Budget making as the foundation of the national credit. I pointed out that the Hoover administration had been responsible for deficit after deficit—that as one disastrous year succeeded another no attempt was made to arrange the finances of the country so that at least the mounting loss of revenue might not be turned into a deficit for the next year. It is my pledge and promise that this dangerous kind of financing shall be stopped and that rigid governmental economy shall be enforced by a stern and unrelenting administration policy of living within our income.

The national deficits since that time—Mr. Roosevelt's record—are as follows:

National deficit:
1934	$3,255,393,297
1935	3,782,966,360
1936	4,952,928,957
1937	3,252,539,719
1938	1,449,625,881
1940 (estimated)	4,032,813,641

The point I make is that the statements made previously by the President of the United States and the things he is doing today are horses of a different color. Let us take this bill, for instance. I shall insert in the Record the increase in our Army and Navy for each year from 1936 to 1940.

The following table shows the regular appropriations for the Army and the regular appropriations for the Navy for the years 1936 to 1940, inclusive:

Regular annual appropriation with deficiency

Army:
1936	$351,485,626.43
1937	388,244,859.00
1938	415,263,154.00
1939	460,201,254.00
1940	742,125,171.00
Navy:
1936	481,731,379.00
1937	528,102,532.00
1938	516,543,308.00

Mr. Chairman, this bill is brought before us today because of Executive orders by the President of the United States which ask us to expend an additional $267,000,000. The Congress of the United States gave the power to the President, as I understand it, by Executive order to increase the expenditures of the Federal Government from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 more. This he may do by Executive order. Then he asks us to appropriate the money. I was always under the impression it was the duty of the Congress and the Members of the Congress to say what the increase shall be in our military forces.

I am in favor of an adequate national defense, but I am not in favor of putting the question of what is an adequate national defense in the hands of the President of the United States. I am not in favor of putting that question into the hands of the leaders of the Army or Navy, either. The information that I get from the various bureaus of the Government is to the effect that every bureau of the Government wants to increase in size and power, and these bureaus want to increase because of the power it will give certain individuals. I sometimes question whether the men who are at the head of our Army and Navy are thinking as much of adequate national defense as they are thinking of the fact that if we appropriate this money it will provide an opportunity for the creation of more admirals and more generals and will create more power to be placed in the hands of the heads of the Army and Navy of this country. I am opposed to that. The exorbitant cost to the people of this country does not warrant it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the real danger to America and our democratic institutions is not from a potential enemy from without but from within? Should we continue the New Deal spending spree much longer, we will meet bankruptcy and inflation face to face and our Army and Navy will not be able to save America from chaos and ruin, no matter how perfect and effective they might be.

Mr. RICH. That is just the road we are traveling on now. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are heading for the greatest catastrophe this Nation has ever seen, and it is going to happen from within, not from without. I am not afraid of being attacked by some foreign nation. I think we can live at peace with Canada, and I think we can live at peace with Mexico. I am not afraid of the people of those countries, because they are our neighbors; they are going to be friendly with us and we will be friendly with them.

Let me call your attention to this morning's paper, in which appears the headline, "Navy asks $2,000,000,000 for 195 ships, which will lay down a fleet in 2 years to beat any coalition of nations if the Allies lose."

Mr. Chairman, that is the kind of propaganda that will involve the Nation in hatred and to war. It is that sort of propaganda that creates hatred in the minds of the people of one nation toward another. Such articles cause peoples to become unfriendly toward each other. What we need in this country today is more religion. We need more teaching of the people of this country and the people of the world. We should teach the people to live as friendly neighbors to each other. We should teach them to solve their problems, not by wrecking this Nation and other nations by a program of building up a huge army or navy that will surpass anything that might be turned loose on either land or sea. God forbid this country ever getting into war again.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of building up our preparedness, but I hope someone will define the word "preparedness." Let anyone come out and tell us what are the absolute essentials and what are the things that are necessary, so that we might maintain peace with the nations of the world. It has not been done so far. Let the President of the United States, the Chief of the Army or Navy, or other high-ranking officials get together and send us a plan so that we will know what we are doing and will not have to take all of these Executive orders at their face value. I do not want to follow the leaders blindly. The men who have charge of our various committees are men of the highest type that we have in the House of Representatives. We have a lot of respect for their judgment, but they are trying to carry out the requests of the leaders of the Army and Navy without a definite plan or a definite policy being presented to us. The cost of the Army and Navy is running into billions of dollars every year. We will have requests from agriculture, from labor, and from all other branches of government, and if we are not careful we will find later on that we have come to a parting of the ways. We will have a bankrupt nation. What good are battleships to a nation of that kind?

That will be when this country goes bankrupt, because of our foolish and unwise spending instead of having a policy that has been planned judiciously, honestly, and conscientiously for the best interests of the American people. The time will come when we must try to keep this Nation from going into bankruptcy by cutting down expenses, and it seems to me that this is a good time to start, by cutting down some of the items that have been proposed and some of the items that will be proposed for larger national-defense appropriations. I not only hope but pray that we as conscientious Members of Congress will try to coordinate the various branches of the Government in order that we may protect America and protect the peace of the world, not with arms but with a conscientious will to do the things we have been taught, that is, to treat our neighbors as we would treat ourselves and to seek the good will of all peoples in all the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise not so much to oppose the pro forma amendment, because it will rise of its own lightness if anyone will think a minute. It needs no opposition. I will say to the gentleman, however, that even if this bill did exactly what he says it does, I cannot conceive of any better hands to which this trust that he decries could be committed than the hands of the President of the United States. No matter whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, we can safely trust our Chief Executive, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, to discharge that trust faithfully and honestly for the common good. The same applies to the high-ranking officers of our Army and Navy. I resent bitterly, as one humble Member of this House, the attack that has just been made upon them in calling them, in effect, bureaucrats anxious to magnify their own importance and that of their bureaus.

However, the primary purpose of my rising was to call the attention of the House to this small bill, which is not subject to the criticism I shall now advance against the general policy or practice of our great Committee on Appropriations. There has never been in the history of parliamentary government a more able, honest, diligent, hard-working committee than the House Committee on Appropriations. I believe, however, that sometimes we get so close to a problem, with our nose to the grindstone, that we do not lift our eyes to look at the whole picture. For this reason, with the highest regard for every member of this great committee and for its leadership on both sides of the aisle, and for its staff of expert assistants, I am questioning whether we give enough time to House Members to prepare for the consideration of our appropriation bills.

This House is the initiating custodian of the money power. We can either turn the cock and let the hose through which comes the money from the Treasury run freely or we can step on the hose. This particular bill is a very small one. It has only 29 pages. It carries, in my humble judgment, hardly a sufficient appropriation for the purposes it is designed to effectuate. That is not the question, however. I do not know. You members of that committee do know, because you are all experts on the subject. What I am saying is that while this bill is small, being only 29 pages, and while the hearings are thin, with only 325 pages, they were filed during the period of debate on the antilynching bill the day before yesterday, and we have not had a chance to study them for a minute.

Many bills are brought in that way, I believe, too precipitately. I am told that the full Appropriations Committee sometimes does not see the bill that is to be taken up in the House at 12 o'clock on a certain day until that very morning. Other Members of the House never see bill, report, nor hearings until debate is begun on the floor. Some of these bills are a hundred pages in length, carry a billion dollars of appropriations, and the printed hearings fill hundreds of pages. I maintain that this is unwise practice. It means legislation by subcommittee rather than by the House. Most respectfully I invite the attention of this great committee to the whole picture as some of us on the outside see it.

Another point to which I should like to invite your attention is that this bill is only a part of our Budget obligation. It may be wise for you to think of having an appropriations bill covering the entire Budget, to be worked out in detail by your subcommittees, submitted to your full committee for a full month of study, possibly, and then brought before the House for a full month of debate, after we of the House have had an opportunity for a month to study the whole picture presented by bill, report, and the hearings. It seems to me in that way we would have a check and a double check against our appropriations, which we do not have now. I believe every Member of the House, no matter how ignorant he may be about money matters and about appropriations, is entitled to a fair opportunity to post himself upon the subject matter of these appropriation bills, which are so carefully worked out by excellent subcommittees and their expert helpers, but are seen by few others.

I commend these thoughts to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations and the other Members of the House. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS

For an additional amount to be added to the appropriation "Construction of buildings, utilities, and appurtenances at military posts," contained in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $611,800, to be applied as follows: For temporary shelter, Air Corps, Puerto Rico, $319,000; temporary hangar, Air Corps, Panama, $92,800; additional amount for housing for shop testing facilities, Chanute Field, Ill., $200,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALEXANDER: On page 7, line 14, insert the following:

"Provided, however, That for the purpose of reducing the cost of Government buildings and other structures and of stimulating interest in efficient designs, plans, and specifications, any department or bureau having charge of building same is hereby authorized to employ competent professional engineers and/or architects engaged in private practice to prepare designs, plans, and/or specifications for new buildings and other structures or to assist in preparing designs, plans, and/or specifications therefor, and to compensate them for such services.

"The said department or bureau is hereby further authorized to employ competent professional engineers and/or architects engaged in private practice to prepare alternate designs, plans, and/or specifications, hereinafter called "alternate designs", for new buildings or other structures which are estimated to cost $200,000 each, or more, the conditions of such employment to be as follows: The Government agency may, if deemed expedient, pay the out-of-pocket cost of the preparation of the said alternate design, including only labor, material, supplies, general office overhead expense, and necessary travel and sustenance expense in connection therewith, but no compensation for or salaries of principals. The said alternate designs shall be advertised and submitted for bids at the same time and under the same conditions that the designs, plans, and/or specifications prepared by the department or bureau staff, hereinafter called the "base plans", are advertised and submitted for bids. The alternate design may apply to the structural design or any division of the work, but the bids on the alternate design and the base plans shall be for the complete building or structure in each case and shall be compared on that basis. If the low bid or the sum of the low bids on the alternate design compared with the low bid or the sum of the low bids on the base plans show a gross saving to the Government equal to or greater than twice the amount of the full fee or fees of the private engineers and/or architects who prepared them and including their out-of-pocket costs, the Government shall pay them the said full fee or fees, otherwise not more than the amount of their out-of-pocket costs as hereinbefore defined. Not more than one alternate design shall be prepared for each division of the work for each building or other structure. The alternate design shall comply with Government building codes and/or standards and be equal to the base plans as to strength, durability, utility, and quality, all of which shall be clearly defined to the private engineers and/or architects before the alternate designs are prepared."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is appropriate to consider the amendment at this time, in view of the fact that the amendment would make it possible for us to effect a saving in the $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 that we contemplate spending for buildings under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the amendment and is of the opinion that it is clearly in conflict with clause 2 of rule XXI, which forbids legislation on a general appropriation bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for Engineer service, Army, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $2,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In order to get before the House and before the Members here the matter I just attempted to insert in the bill by way of an amendment, I want to make a slight explanation of the features of the amendment which I offered.

The amendment provides that bureau heads or department heads may, if they see fit, hire outside architects and engineers to prepare plans and specifications and alternate designs in the construction of buildings costing over $200,000. I want to tell the Members of the House of Representatives that in this United States of ours we have various kinds of building and engineering designs which have been perfected. They are not all alike, and if this amendment of mine had been allowed in this bill it would have made it possible to save upward of 25 or 30 percent in the cost of construction of these buildings which are contemplated in the sections of the War Department deficiency appropriation bill, which have just been read and in which we are about to appropriate for construction the sum of ten to twelve million dollars. We could save, in other words, upward of $3,000,000 if we would make it possible for our Army engineers and for the men in charge of these various bureaus of the Army and the Navy and Coast Guard to avail themselves of the modern, up-to-date engineering designs which are being used every day throughout the United States by businessmen and concerns that are engaged in constructing buildings.

I know if any of you gentlemen had that many millions of dollars to spend personally, and you were contemplating putting it into buildings, instead of calling in one engineer or one architect you would call in at least three different engineers and architects, and you would get their opinions and their designs and plans and estimates on your contemplated buildings. In this way you would protect yourself against any exorbitant charges, and you would be able to carry on your plans in an efficient manner. I know this is the way it is done in private industry and business, and I assume we should carry on in the same way here in the House of Representatives when we spend the people's money.

This amendment of mine would not affect the total expenditures, except as it might effect a saving in design and construction costs. In other words, I am not attacking any of the proposed items in the bill. I am only suggesting, in the case of the erection of these buildings that are contemplated here, we make it possible to use these alternate designs as provided in my amendment and which are being used every day in private construction. Right over here in Baltimore in the last few years this method was used in the construction of a large building and they made a saving of $40,000 besides getting a building with 50 percent more floor area as the difference between the original estimates and the final cost, by using these alternate designs.

It seems to me what we, as Members of Congress, want to do in the operation of the business of the Government is to do these things in an efficient manner, and here is an opportunity to inject efficiency in government. If engineers and architects, outside of the Government service, have something which is more efficient and which will effect a saving, it seems to me we should make it possible for our bureaus and Government departments to avail themselves of it, and I wish there could be some way whereby this matter could be reopened before the closing of debate on this bill so we could make it possible to include this particular amendment in the pending bill and for that matter in all future appropriations, because it is something that would make it possible to effect a saving, without any loss to anybody; in fact, it would doubtless be so great a saving in this present bill that we could pay approximately one-half of the annual salaries of the 531 Members of the House and Senate. I cannot imagine our coming down here and taking up the time we do, spending the people's money in the way we do, without justifying our service here by making savings of an efficient sort where we can do it. It may be fine to say we have cut out this or we have cut out that, when, perhaps, you have cut out something that is essential and needful such as the waterway appropriation I previously mentioned this morning; but here is an opportunity to effect a saving and cut down on expenditures without hurting anybody and at the same time add to the efficient operation of the Government. I hope each of you will take time to study the amendment reported above and let us take action on it. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon the able and courageous gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who has charge of this bill, made what appears to me an astounding statement. What I have to say about this statement is not to be taken as reflecting in the least upon the good name and high standing this gentleman enjoys in this House. I regard him as having no peer either in this or the other legislative body in ability, courage, and forthrightness.

Nevertheless, I believe this statement should be examined, because it reflects a state of affairs in the Congress that all should know about.

Inasmuch as his remarks have not been published in the RECORD, I must speak from memory. If I am in any way wrong, I wish to be corrected.

With reference to the $700,000,000 which is set up in the Budget as representing receipts to be recovered from excess capital funds from Government corporations, if my memory serves me correctly, the gentleman from Virginia indicated he did not understand this particular item, that the President has indicated he will supply this amount; further, that he did not consider it his problem, but that it was the President's headache.

I certainly cannot agree with him that the raising of this $700,000,000 is the business of the President. Does not the Constitution specifically provide in section 7 that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, and that the Senate alone may propose or concur with amendments relating thereto? Certainly it will not be gainsaid that the purpose of the framers of the Constitution is clear and unmistakable. Yet here we have the Executive taking to himself the authority to raise this enormous amount of revenue without Congress having the least idea as to whether it will really be raised or where it will come from. Congress knows next to nothing about the financial state of these corporations. There is no capital budget to show their condition. Before any value whatever could be attached to this item it would be necessary to know what the losses of all these corporations are in depreciation, loans, and so forth. It is only after these losses are known and charged against the capital structure that we can possibly have any idea as to the real value of any of the capital that may be recovered and added to receipts.

The losses by these corporations are now running into the hundreds of millions of dollars. The last report of the Home Loan Bank Board shows a loss of nearly $60,000,000 of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation alone. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already canceled two and three-fourths billions of its securities.

The important question is, How much is this $700,000,000 already encumbered by losses?

Now, I feel Congress would certainly be derelict in its duty if it allows this matter to pass in the condition it now stands. I have tried, but in vain, to find out something about it. Neither the Finance Committee nor the Budget Commission appears to know anything about it. The most information I have yet been able to obtain about this item is that it is "an over-all guess coming from the executive department."

As the gentleman from Virginia so strongly emphasized, it is the Congress that is responsible for Government finances. How is it possible to reconcile this position with that of committing to the Executive the raising of this vast sum, concerning the amounts and sources of which the Congress is wholly ignorant?

It appears to me we have represented here something that shows the chaotic state of our national finances. It seems to me, also, we have shown here that the Congress has lost in a very great measure one of the basic functions for which it was created, namely, the control of the purse strings of the Nation.

I want to protest against this abdication of congressional authority, and I ask that the executive department submit promptly to the Congress the full details of his plan to raise this $700,000,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for compensation of help for care of materials, animals, and equipment, including the compensation of employees engaged upon Federal property custodial and accounting work in the offices of property and disbursing officers for the United States, $27,155.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 14, strike out "$27,155" and insert "$15,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for expenses, camps of instruction, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $5,360,277.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 17, strike out "$5,360,277" and insert "$4,583,752."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for general expenses, equipment, and instruction, National Guard, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $185,077.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 23, strike out "$185,077" and insert "$175,641."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for pay of National Guard (armory drills), $6,388,687.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 9, strike out "$6,388,687" and insert "$5,469,962."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $7,243,023, and all of the sums appropriated in this title on account of the National Guard shall be accounted for as one fund.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 6, strike out "$7,243,023" and insert "$7,218,087."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please explain why he is reducing these appropriations under the head of the National Guard?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is because of the slowing up of the program. It is not because of any curtailment. These amounts have been worked out satisfactorily with the National Guard.

Mr. SHORT. Oh, they are revised figures?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. These amendments offered are satisfactory to the National Guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 13, line 8, after the word "fund", add the following: "of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used for the pay of employees in the National Guard Bureau."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for Organized Reserves, comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Military Appropriation Act, 1940, $3,725,382: Provided, That not to exceed $80,000 of this appropriation may be used for establishment, operation, and maintenance of Organized Reserve headquarters.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Page 13, line 16, strike out "$3,725,382" and insert "$3,617,282."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 13, line 16, after the word "Provided", insert: "That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitations as to Reserve officers on active duty specified under this head in the Military Appropriations Act of 1940: Provided further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for miscellaneous expenses comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $720,000, of which there shall be available not to exceed $200,000 for telephone, telegraph, and teletype rentals and tolls, telegrams, radiograms, and cablegrams; $4,000 for allowances for civilian employees in attachés' offices; and $176,400 for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 14, line 25, strike out "$720,000" and insert "$685,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the attention of the Committee just briefly to the procedure that was followed by the executive departments and the Navy in connection with the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

The Bureau of Yards and Docks is that bureau of the Navy that has to do with the improvement of shore facilities. In the appropriation bill last year the following language was a part of the bill which made provision for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and I read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commence, continue, or complete the construction of, or make provision for, by contract or otherwise, projects heretofore authorized and appropriated for under this head.

The committee that has studied this supplemental appropriation which is now before us found that the Bureau of Yards and Docks, instead of adhering to the policy set forth in this provision, either by contract obligations or by actual work, started a program of public works to the extent of $57,000,000. There had been no authorization for it. No appropriation for many of the items had been made. The Congress had in no instance, or at least only in a very, very few instances, been asked to pass upon the projects in question. Under the cloak of an emergency, programs were initiated which may or may not have the approval of the Congress.

I presently rise to question the wisdom rather than question the motive of the Executive in carrying out that policy. It seems to me that before obligations of this kind were contracted for, before these projects were started, the Congress, which was in session, should have had the opportunity to pass on the projects and give legislative authority for them. Instead, projects were started, obligations were incurred, and programs were initiated that this Congress knew absolutely nothing about, but that this Congress would be required subsequently to carry out.

I want to point out the type of some of these projects. For a long time the Navy, and the Congress as well, has felt that it would be wise to have fireproof construction in the erection of hospitals for the Naval Establishment. This present program threw that policy to the winds. Fire traps—and that is just what we may call them—were started and will be continued under this program. They said, "This is temporary construction." I want to tell you how temporary this construction is. It is just as temporary as the Navy Building right down here in the city of Washington. That was built as a temporary Navy Building. It has been down there for a good many years, and it will stay there probably for a great many more years. But under the excuse of "temporary construction" that building was put there, just as the present construction program is being excused under the cloak of a "temporary program."

I have seen too much of this in the past. I want the attention of my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], the leader of the economy bloc on the other side of the aisle—and I pay him my respects for the diligent work that he has done. But I want to point out to him the danger of endorsing, without question, this policy of the Navy Department. During the emergency days of 1933, 1934, and 1935, when they seemed to have so much money down there at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue that they did not know what to do with it, all types of projects were started by the Navy under the N. I. R. A., under the W. P. A., under the P. W. A., and every other emergency fund possible. Those projects were started, and then the obligation was saddled on the Congress to provide the money to maintain those projects. We are going right into the same line here as that carried out in that old day, permitting the executive establishment of the Government to create obligations, to start programs, to load upon the taxpayers a debt obligation, without this Congress having the opportunity of saying a word as to what the projects shall be or what the amounts thereof will entail. I say we ought to stop, look, and listen. If this Congress had not been in session, some excuse might be found for the policy of the administration.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. I say there would be little in the way of probable questions raised had the Congress not been in session throughout the entire time that these obligations were incurred or the program started. We were here. The other body was debating neutrality. My energetic friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was straining to have something to do. So were the rest of you men. But we were marking time. But they were not marking time down at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. They were as diligent as could be loading on your shoulders—loading on the shoulders of the taxpayers of the country—these obligations that sometime, somehow, somebody will have to pay.

We probably cannot correct the mistake that has been made. Probably we cannot pull in on the loose check rein that was used under the emergency powers, but at least we can take notice of what has been done and endeavor as far as we can to exercise that responsibility which the American people feel is ours in protecting their interests, including financial stability, as a part of the national-defense program.

The developments in connection with the expenditure of funds appropriated for national defense and the question of the powers of the President in that connection give rise to many perplexing legal and administrative problems. On one hand, there are the general laws and rules governing the appropriation and expenditure of public funds, and, on the other hand, the powers of the President over the Army and Navy, both in time of war and in case of an emergency. The President has great powers in respect to national defense, and the exact line of division of authority between the President and Congress has never been worked out precisely.

On September 8, 1939—3 days after the proclamation of the neutrality of the United States in the European war—President Roosevelt issued a proclamation stating—

That a national emergency exists in connection with and to the extent necessary for the proper observance, safeguarding, and enforcement of the neutrality of the United States and the strengthening of our national defense within the limits of peacetime authorizations.

On the same day, September 8, 1939, the President issued Executive orders authorizing the increase of the enlisted strength of the active list of the Regular Army to 227,000 men, of the National Guard to 235,000 men, of the Regular Navy to 145,000 men, and the Marine Corps to 25,000. Provisions were also made for increasing the commissioned strength of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps by the use of retired and Reserve officers.

Both the War and Navy Departments were authorized to waive or modify the monthly or other apportionments of their appropriations for contingent expenses or other general purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. At a press conference on October 3, 1939, the President announced that he had ordered the War and Navy Departments to ignore statutory limitations on expenditures for Army and Navy hospitalization, housing, and reconditioning of 100 World War destroyers which have been considered obsolete. It was stated that the President had discussed the matter with two Supreme Court justices and the Comptroller General and had decided to anticipate congressional approval of the expenditures necessitated by the emergency program. It was said in the New York Times that Comptroller General Brown had suggested that the President not ask for a formal ruling of the General Accounting Office on the matter at that time, since Congress undoubtedly would straighten out the matter. At the press conference President Roosevelt said that he had clear authority to increase the strength of the Army and Navy, and that he also had the implied authority to direct expenditures incident to such increases, such as housing and hospitalization.

Before examining specifically the President's acts and contentions, it is well to review briefly the general laws and rules in regard to appropriations and expenditures. In the first place, attention should be called to clause 7, section 9, of article I of the Constitution, which provides:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law. * * *

And, of course, it is well known that money may be used only for the purposes for which it is appropriated. The statutes provide:

Except as otherwise provided by law, sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 628).

Furthermore, the laws provide that no establishment of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations, unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law. The amounts of money appropriated by Congress for each agency are to be apportioned by monthly or other allotments so that they will last out the whole year. But if, in case of an emergency, it is certified by the head of the establishment, such requirements of allotments may be waived.

In the first place, it seems clear that the President acted clearly within his legal right in ordering the increase in the enlisted strength of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

The maximum size of the National Guard as provided in the statutes is in excess of number authorized by the President, but he is given no specific authority to order an increase (U. S. C., title 32, sec. 121). There is ample authority for the President to order Reserve officers of the Army and Reserve and retired Navy and marine officers to active service in time of an "emergency" (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 369; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 423; and U. S. C. Supp., title 34, sec. 853c; and secs. 5, 6, 7, and 8 of act of April 3, 1939 (Public, 18, 76th Cong.)).

In no case has the President ordered an increase in the armed forces in excess of the maximums provided by law. The President, in the absence of specific action of Congress, is the judge of the existence of the emergency.

Since there is statutory authority for the President to order the increase in the armed forces in time of emergency such condition would appear to be sufficient emergency for waiving the apportionments of the Army and Navy appropriations for the fiscal year 1940. The effect of such action is that the money appropriated for national defense will be spent at a more rapid rate than anticipated and will not last the whole fiscal year. The determination of how and for what purposes the national defense moneys may be spent, however, depends largely upon the provisions of the appropriation acts and authorizations. The President has no general authority to overrule them. Such power must be specifically or impliedly granted if it exists.

First, there is the question of the pay of the increased force of enlisted men and officers. It seems logical to assume that since the President has the power to order the increase, money already appropriated for pay of the Army and Navy may be used for the additional men. In the Navy Department Appropriation Act for 1940 (Public, No. 90, 76th Cong.) a total of $183,455,545 was appropriated for the pay of naval personnel, with some specific allocations included. There was also an appropriation of $20,389,000 for the pay of the Marine Corps, broken down into specific amounts for specific purposes. There is no stipulation in the act as to the number of men to be paid, except in a few specific cases. So it seems clear that the additional men may be paid out of the amounts appropriated for pay, the emergency having been declared and the monthly or other allotments waived. Additional amounts must be appropriated by Congress to carry the Navy through the fiscal year. The President does not have, so far as it can be discovered, statutory power to authorize the payment of naval personnel after the appropriation for such purpose has been exhausted. Nor does there seem to be any statutory authority for disregarding the specific allocations for pay of certain types of personnel or the transfer of funds from one specific appropriation to another. To summarize then, the increased personnel may be paid as long as the total amounts appropriated are not exceeded or the specific allocations not disregarded.

One might conclude that the rules just discussed in connection with naval appropriations apply to the Army as well. Generally speaking they do, but the Military Establishment Appropriation Act for 1940 (Public, No. 44, 76th Cong.) introduces some differences. For instance, the appropriation for the pay of the Army totals $170,371,405 with specific amounts set for officers' pay and pay of enlisted men. But the act states that $36,017,416 is for the pay of not to exceed 13,106 commissioned officers, and $69,688,880 for pay of an average of not to exceed 165,000 enlisted men. The President has authorized the increase of the enlisted strength to 227,000. Can the stipulation of the appropriation act be disregarded? On one hand there is the general statute which states that money appropriated shall be applied solely to the objects for which it is made and the specific mandate of the Military Establishment Appropriation Act for 1940. On the other hand, it may be argued that since the President has the power to order the increase in the enlisted strength, it is implied that the new men shall be paid along with the others; otherwise the granting of discretionary authority to the President would be meaningless. Furthermore, there is the constitutional power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. A strict following of the law would seem to support the first point of view, but there is a reasonable doubt involved. In the past Congress has practically always made an appropriation to correct a situation of this kind. In any case it seems desirable that the matter be considered thoroughly and some understanding reached upon the part of the Congress and the Executive as to what justification there is for disregarding the stipulations and restrictions placed in appropriation bills.

Furthermore, it seems clear that, in the absence of specific exception, the funds appropriated for subsistence, clothing, and hospitalization of the Army and Navy may be used to provide those services for the additional men. The proper rule is that the monthly allotments may be waived but that only the funds appropriated for such purposes may be used. There is no statutory authority to exceed the amounts appro-apropriated or to divert funds. There is apparently no provision in the Army and Navy appropriations for 1940 which would disturb the general rule.

When it comes to the question of capital improvements—the building of barracks, hospitals, and ship improvements—a somewhat different situation prevails. It has been customary for Congress to specifically authorize the construction of certain forts, military posts, barracks, ships, docks, and so forth, and to appropriate specific amounts to carry out the authorizations. At the same time Congress also makes lump-sum appropriations for construction of various categories of capital improvements. There seems to be no statutory authority for the President or the War or Navy Departments to change these specific appropriations or use the money so appropriated for any other purpose, emergency or not. However, where there is a lump-sum appropriation, there is discretionary authority to determine what units may be constructed or repaired. Ordinarily the amounts appropriated are based upon the justifications submitted to the Appropriations Committee. The agency must keep within the total amount appropriated and observe such restrictions as are placed in the appropriation acts. Again the declaration of an emergency does not disturb this rule.

In the Military Establishment Appropriation Act for 1940 specific appropriations are made for certain military posts and the acquisition of land at particular places. On the other hand, there are general lump-sum appropriations for the construction and maintenance of barracks, quarters, other buildings, and utilities and the construction and repair of hospitals. However, there are important limitations upon the use of funds for barracks, the most important of which is that no part of the funds shall be available for construction of a permanent nature of an additional building or an extension or addition to an existing building, the cost of which in any case exceeds $20,000. There is also a lump-sum appropriation, with some restrictions, of $53,173,100 for ordnance and munitions. The War Department can spend the funds appropriated to it more rapidly than anticipated and can undertake the construction of new barracks, and so forth, but it must observe the specific item appropriations and the restrictions placed on the use of the lump-sum amounts.

The situation in respect to appropriations for construction and repair for the Navy is similar. In the Navy Department Appropriation Act for 1940—Public, 90, Seventy-sixth Congress—there are specific appropriations of $4,000,000 to modernize the Lexington and Saratoga, of smaller amounts for various purposes, and of $207,593,712 for “construction and machinery” and $46,011,000 for “armor, armament, and ammunition” under the general heading “Replacement of naval vessels” and to be used for vessels authorized by the act of May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401-403), or other acts. Neither of such appropriations—

Shall be available for obligation for any purpose as to ships commissioned prior to July 1, 1938, nor as to any ship commissioned subsequent to such date after 12 months shall have elapsed from commissioning date.

There is no statutory authority to divert the specific appropriations for any other purposes. But there are also several important lump-sum appropriations with few specific restrictions placed on their use: $26,317,500 to the Bureau of Engineering for repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, boilers, and so forth; $24,422,500 to the Bureau of Construction and Repair for designing, constructing, and repairing naval vessels; $32,548,000 to the Bureau of Ordnance for ordnance and ordnance stores; and $8,530,000 to the Bureau of Yards and Docks for maintenance and $55,328,550 for public works and utilities, but as I have said before the latter amount seems to be all allocated for specific projects already authorized.

The question arises as to what authority there is for the Navy to recondition 100 World War destroyers which have been considered obsolete. There is no specific appropriation for such work and apparently no authorization for it. Clearly no part of the nearly quarter-of-a-billion-dollar appropriation for replacement of naval vessels can be used for such purpose. But it seems quite clear that the work can be undertaken with the funds appropriated for the general purposes of “Emergency” and “Construction and repair.” This means that some of the construction and reconditioning work planned will have to be put aside until additional funds are provided, but there apparently is no barrier to starting the reconditioning of the obsolete destroyers. It would be preferable, of course, to have a specific authorization and appropriation for such work.

As a general principle, public works are not started unless there is a specific authorization from Congress and an appropriation for such work. A priority list is prepared by the Navy Department which is the result of the study of the needs of the establishment and which forms the basis upon which new construction programs are started. In fact the priority list is available to the bureau chiefs as the general Navy program for the year is projected. Unfortunately, it must be admitted that in connection with the emergency construction program undertaken by the Bureau of Yards and Docks since September, the priority list was ignored entirely. In fact the Bureau chief during the course of the hearings accepted the characterization applied to these projects as “random shots.”

As I have already pointed out, public-works projects have been started under special funds, such as W. P. A., N. I. R. A., and P. W. A., but the cost of the maintenance should always be considered. Certainly the type, extent, and desirability of the project should be passed upon by the body which will be called upon for funds for future maintenance and operation.

The accustomed procedure has been for the Naval Establishment to follow the spirit as well as the words of the appropriation acts. The limitation to which I have directed your attention, it seems to me could have been followed without serious danger to our national security. Again I say, I raise the question of the wisdom of the course taken. I know that many Members of the House interpreted the limitation as a means of restricting the construction program to specific items justified before the Appropriations Committee. The general practice of the Bureau, as well as other Government agencies, not to undertake construction projects without authorizations and appropriations, could be said to fortify this interpretation.

I submit that the same ends could have been reached, the same security could have been provided, the same program for our national defense could have been undertaken without inviting the objection of an undue exercise of Executive authority. At all events, it is the duty of the Congress in these days of uncertainty and chaos to determine the extent of our defense program. This body will be the one upon whom the responsibility will fall if this defense machinery is to be put into operation. It should be the one to determine the parts that are to become units of that defense organization. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reciprocate the felicitations of my good friend and very able and conscientious member of our committee and very diligent Congressman representing the interests of his constituency.

Generally speaking, perhaps something should be said about the manner in which the authority of the President was exercised in the emergency. Some criticism has been made of the fact that Executive orders were issued increasing the military and naval personnel and incurring the expenses incident thereto, rather than coming to Congress for it. In the first place, at the time the Executive order of September 8 was issued Congress had not been called in special session. It was called in special session very shortly after that, it is true; but those of us who know the ways of Congress, who know how easy it is for matters to get tied up and delayed by debate and action that may be embarrassing in a great emergency, I think, will agree that there are emergency occasions when the Chief Executive must take such action as he deems wise. I do not believe anyone will seriously question the fact that when the world was again plunged into conflict this fall there was an emergency and there were reasonable grounds for immediately taking steps to see to our defense forces. The President, therefore, did not increase the appropriations of the Government. That is not an accurate statement. The President was advised by the Attorney General that he had the authority to increase the enlisted strength of our armed forces up to the full peacetime strength or emergency strength which the existing statutes provide for. If he could do that, necessarily, the agencies concerned with those forces must secure the waiver of their appropriation apportionments and spend at a faster rate from their existing appropriations in order to pay, subsist, clothe, house, hospitalize, transport, equip, and otherwise care for those forces. There are existing statutes concerning the Army and Navy that give pretty broad discretion in the matter of providing for their personnel when existing funds run short.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. But the gentleman will concede that those appropriations had been made for other specific purposes than those to which they were diverted as a result of the emergency that was declared.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct. However, those specific purposes were the same purposes as those for which money necessarily had to be expended in order to care for the enlarged personnel. That is the emergency power that Congress has given in connection with appropriations when the Chief Executive acts on his integrity as Chief Executive and declares an emergency and as Commander in Chief acts in that emergency to increase the personnel of the armed forces, that brings about a situation that requires the funds that have been appropriated by Congress for the military and naval forces to be reapportioned and expended at a faster rate than was originally contemplated in order to care for the emergency.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman indulge me a moment further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. DITTER. Does the gentleman contend that the Executive has that power in the light of the definite limitation that I gave with reference to the appropriation measure?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think he does.

Mr. DITTER. In other words, does the gentleman's contemplation of the Executive power in an emergency include casting aside all of the limitations of congressional action?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not go so far as to say that it includes casting aside all limitations of congressional action. The Attorney General ruled that the President had the authority to increase these forces as he did by the Executive orders. So far as I know, there have been no rulings of the Comptroller General to the effect that the consequent expenditures were illegal. There probably is some difference of opinion on the subject, but it does seem to me that if the President has the power to increase the personnel for the Army and Navy, those agencies should have the right to use their existing funds for similar purposes and take care of that personnel.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will indulge me further might I ask whether the gentleman will agree with me that it probably would have been wiser—laying aside for the moment the mooted question of legality—may it not have been wiser to have followed the course of congressional action rather than assuming the purely arbitrary power of emergency?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If we choose to take a retroactive view, looking upon it now when there have been brushed aside the clouds that were hanging so heavily and ominously at that moment. Now when everyone is tranquil, peaceful, and happy again, it is very easy to say that he should have done thus and so; but looking at it as of that time, where we stood at the moment, the tocsin of war had sounded, the world was plunged into a great holocaust, nation after nation was going down in defeat because it had not looked to its defenses and preparedness, then I say that any Chief Executive or Commander in Chief who did not act immediately and vigorously to see that his defense forces were prepared would be derelict in his duty. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is my understanding of the power of the President that he could disregard the monthly apportionment of funds, but not that he could shift an appropriation made for one specific purpose over to some entirely different purpose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But I do not think it could be called an entirely different purpose when for instance money appropriated to build an Army post at one place was in an emergency used possibly to build a temporary hospital or temporary barracks at another place.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman, of course, begs the question by an illustration of that kind because the facts are not exactly analogous to the incident cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. My understanding is that the President had the right to declare that an emergency existed and to increase the personnel of the armed forces. In view of the emergency, the authority existed to waive the apportionment of the existing appropriations and expend them at a faster rate, and thus bring about the necessity for additional appropriations. In all this vast undertaking there may of necessity be some fine points raised in connection with a few items. It would be a miracle if there were not. But in the overwhelming proportion of the action taken I think that the President acted wisely, and the agencies, acting in accordance with his Executive orders, have stayed within bounds.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Do I understand that the gentleman's sense of the security of the Nation was in any way seriously disturbed in the early days of September?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. My sense of the security of the Nation was not seriously disturbed because I did not believe that any time very soon any nation was going to challenge America or be knocking at our doors to cause us trouble. The gentleman will realize, however, that to build up an army and navy and to maintain an army and navy requires time; it cannot be done in a day or a month; and the program contemplates the building up of the Army and the Navy for national defense. Without this program, I do not know that I could look ahead a year without a sense of fear.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Briefly; yes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Speaking of the state of people's minds around the 3d of September, can the gentleman recall a single public demonstration in the United States by any crowd of people asking the President to do anything or accosting him of our danger?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not believe any Chief Executive has ever taken action which was more generally approved, regardless of how much he may be differed with on other occasions, than the manner in which the President and the Secretary of State have conducted the affairs of America in this national emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. May I point out to the gentleman that I opened my statement by saying I questioned not the motive but the method and the wisdom of the procedure that was followed.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I appreciate what the gentleman said. I want to say one thing more, in a spirit of good humor, to my distinguished friend from Philadelphia, who complains about building temporary barracks and hospitals. If the President had not acted in the emergency, the navy yard over in Philadelphia would not have had those 30 or more destroyers to recondition for the Government and which they have done so splendidly; the naval aircraft factory over at Philadelphia would not have had to build those 100 planes that they are building, and building splendidly, and, I am sure, to the edification, happiness, and prosperity of my friend's constituents. I did not observe the gentleman complain about that part of the program.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the pleasantry of my distinguished friend from Virginia, I believe, will permit a further indulgence. May I tell him that I represent no part of Philadelphia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The great State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. I represent a very humble section of the State of Pennsylvania. I would certainly feel unfortunate were I to believe that I circumscribed my appreciation of the need of national defense by attempts at logrolling. That might be in order among some of my friend's distinguished colleagues who lay claim to that which the New Deal has long boasted of, but we feel, probably unduly, that we will not stoop to lowering national-defense needs to purely local interests.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is a very nice statement. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, since the discussion has taken the turn it has, it seems to me it is highly appropriate that attention be directed to the constitutional responsibilities of this body with respect to appropriations in general, and with respect to the particular responsibility this body has in reference to appropriations for the Army and Navy. Whatever might be said about national defense or about the justification for any appropriation whatsoever, the fact remains the Constitution lays upon this body, the House of Representatives, the responsibility for originating appropriation measures.

I want to direct the attention of the Members especially to section 8 of the Constitution, which deals with the subject of the Army and the Navy and the powers of the Congress with reference thereto. Section 8 says:

The Congress shall have power—

Then enumerates several powers, among them these—to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for longer than 2 years.

The next power is—

To provide and maintain a navy.

It seems to me that it is difficult for the gentleman from Virginia or any other Member of the House to maintain that we should accept any situation as an emergency that would excuse us from the responsibility of examining these appropriations or of making them. Since the Congress was called in special session almost immediately after the President declared his special emergency, how can anyone maintain that this body should be divested of its responsibility for providing and maintaining the Navy?

The Constitution went even further in enumerating the special powers and responsibilities of the Congress and said:

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

I was interested in the debate that arose with respect to this $18,000,000 item for maneuvers. Certainly the chief of staff and his subordinates should be expected to give the Congress the benefit of their viewpoint and their advice on a policy of training; but this Congress cannot escape the plain responsibility for making "rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces," nor can it escape the responsibility of determining the defense policy of this country and whether the training shall be primarily that of the type of an expeditionary force or that of defensive training.

The distinguished gentleman from Virginia referred to the testimony of General Pershing given in the hearing. I may say that I hope every Member will read that testimony and, in fact, read the entire hearings on this particular bill, because it is more or less a preview of the problems and responsibilities we will have when we consider the regular appropriation bills. But mark you this, General Pershing's statement was made with reference to the experience of an expeditionary force in France.

This Congress must determine whether or not it is to be our policy to train men for mass maneuvers which could only be conceived for expeditionary purposes, or whether we are going to have these men trained in mobile, small units for such type of defense as might be necessary if we have a defensive policy. If we are to have an aggressive policy of sending expeditionary forces abroad, where large masses of troops are going to be needed, then possibly we should appropriate even more than $18,000,000 for mass maneuvers.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Nation, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

It seems to me in the discussion at this stage of the session, when we are getting our sights set upon what will probably be one of the major problems of the session—in the providing for adequate defense—we ought to pay a little attention to the constitutional responsibility of this body in determining what these appropriations shall be, and not surrender that all to the Chief Executive. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For an additional amount for "Construction and repair," comprising the same objects specified under this head in the Navy Department and Naval Service Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, $15,514,000, of which not to exceed $145,000 shall be available for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 17, line 25, after the period at the end of the line, insert: "Provided, That no part of the moneys herein appropriated shall be used to construct, repair, or operate any vessels for use in patrolling the 300-mile Welles neutrality zone established by the Panama Conference of American Nations."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that this amendment will be adopted. I am in favor of an adequate national defense. It was Abraham Lincoln who pointed out the geographical location of the United States and said that the real danger to our country would come from within and not from without. I have studied the history of many nations which continued a reckless spending spree of public money, and year after year expended $2 for every dollar collected in tax revenues as the New Deal has been doing. I have studied the history of nations which were plunged into bankruptcy and resulting inflation which in devastating effects is secondary only to a major war of invasion. I am in favor of an adequate national defense for America. I am, however, opposed to unnecessary expenditures in the name of national defense which will increase our national debt and contribute to plunging the Government of the United States into bankruptcy, with resulting inflation which will bring distress, misery, despair, and devastation such as we have never dreamed of.

In 1932, well do I remember, the total annual appropriations for our entire national defense were a little more than $800,000,000. In 1932 the present President of the United States was running about this country promising to reduce the cost of government 25 percent and condemning the Republican administration for their extravagance in spending a total of about $800,000,000 annually for national defense. The President is now asking for an annual appropriation of about $2,000,000,000 for national defense. Let us not carry this national-defense spending program to the point where it will materially help in sacrificing our country on the altars of bankruptcy and inflation.

The taxpayers expended a considerable amount of money when Congress was called into session to establish a neutrality policy for the United States in compliance with the constitutional provisions which give Congress, and the Congress alone, the authority to establish a neutrality policy. The Congress in its wisdom enacted the so-called Bloom bill as the neutrality policy for the United States. Notwithstanding this fact, we find our multimillionaire Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, while Congress was in session considering a neutrality policy, traveling at the taxpayers' expense to Panama and offering the Welles neutrality program, which included a 300-mile Welles neutrality zone. This multimillionaire, Mr. Welles, without authority of international law and without authority of the law of the United States, and in clear violation of international law and in clear violation of the laws of the United States, promised that the overburdened taxpayers of our country would be called upon to produce tax dollars in order that our Navy could patrol the 300-mile Welles neutrality zone.

In all candor and in all sincerity, I hope that the Members of this House, irrespective of their party affiliations, will, in the interest of preserving the integrity of the American Congress and its constitutional right to determine our country's neutrality policy, and as a protest against the usurpation of our multimillionaire New Deal Under Secretary of State, Mr. Welles, will support my amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 203. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to exceed the statutory limit on repairs and alterations to vessels commissioned or converted to meet the existing emergency.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that section 203 is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman from South Dakota reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I shall be pleased to reserve it for a moment, Mr. Chairman. I should like to have the chairman of the subcommittee at the same time make any statement he can with respect to the authorization proposed in the preceding section, 202.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As to the authorization in section 202, to acquire and convert one transport, I may say that the Navy Department has secured that vessel from the Maritime Commission at no cost to the Navy. There is no expenditure involved there.

Section 203 is unquestionably legislation and is subject to a point of order if anyone wishes to make it; but it becomes necessary in the carrying out of this emergency program to exceed the statutory limit on alterations and repairs in connection with some of these vessels. To refuse to permit this to be done may stop work on some of the vessels. These vessels are badly needed for use in connection with neutrality and the strengthening of our defense. They have been out of commission, but by changing this limit as proposed here they can be made serviceable and do as well as new ships. This would be good economy. If this section does not remain these ships could not be repaired, and we would have to go to greater expense to get other ships to take their places. The section is subject to a point of order, however, if the gentleman wishes to press it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to press the point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In view of the explanation given by the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am opposed to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 17, line 25, after the period at the end of the line, insert "Provided, That no part of the moneys herein appropriated shall be used to construct, repair, or operate any vessels for use in patrolling the 300-mile Welles neutrality zone established by the Panama Conference of American Nations."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignations from committees:

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation from membership on the Committees on the Post Office and Post Roads and Pensions.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES F. RISK,
First District, Rhode Island.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This letter is to advise you that it is impossible for me to serve longer on either the Roads or the Irrigation and Reclamation Committees and that I am therefore tendering my resignation from these committees.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK O. HORTON, M. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 2

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 353

Resolved, That J. HARDIN PETERSEN, of Florida, DAN R. MCGEEHEE, of Mississippi, and JOHN M. COFFEE, of Washington, be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Elections No. 2.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include a letter I received from President Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain comments on the subject of pollution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONDUCT OF DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it was with amazement and sincere regret that I heard my distinguished colleague from Tennessee call the attention of the Congress to the "two-bit arrogance" of Washington bureaucrats. Of course, I am in complete agreement with the position taken by the distinguished gentleman in his complaint that Members of Congress are not shown proper respect and do not receive proper cooperation from many of the high and mighty clinging to the Federal pay roll under one guise or another. I, too, have suffered the sad experience of having Federal employees refuse to answer queries for information, connect me with responsible departmental heads, or even give their own names so that complaints might be registered against their actions. Such is not to be unexpected by a Republican Congressman. In fact, it is rather the usual rather than the unusual. But to have such treatment extended to a Democratic Congressman under this benign and liberal administration, always so thoughtful of the poor and unfortunate—including Congressmen—is another thing.

It is almost beyond understanding that such a thing could and should happen, especially to the son of one of the most illustrious Democratic Speakers ever to preside in this House.

As a newspaper publisher, as well as a Republican Congressman, I was especially interested in the story appearing in the Washington Post this morning relative to the controversy which has arisen between my distinguished colleague from Tennessee and bureaucrat Paul Edwards, W. P. A. administrator for the District of Columbia. As a defense to the treatment received by my colleague or his secretary, the plea is made that "an average of 35 calls a day are received from Members of Congress or their secretaries at the office of Paul Edwards, local W. P. A. administrator." Can it be that 35 Members of Congress bother Mr. Edwards each day in behalf of the poor and the lowly, the undernourished and the underprivileged of the District? Oh, no! According to the newspaper story, and I quote therefrom:

The W. P. A. administrator has been besieged recently with demands that he find well-paying jobs for constituents of Congressmen, a W. P. A. official said, but he considers his first responsibility is to give employment to bona fide District residents.

Do the W. P. A. officials or Mr. Edwards dare to insinuate that any Member of this Congress has ever attempted to have one of his constituents, not a bona fide resident of the District of Columbia, given a fat and well-paying job at the expense of the poor, the hungry, and the unfortunate? Does Mr. Edwards or his assistants mean to say that politics is being played in local W. P. A. administration? Can it be, and is it, that political patronage even extends down into the humanitarian field of public relief, and that the money appropriated by this Congress for relief purposes is being expended to give well-paying jobs to deserving and worthy congressional henchmen? Certainly, if the newspaper report is at all correct, Mr. Edwards and other W. P. A. officials are casting serious reflection upon the Congress of the United States and the membership thereof. Let us have the names of these Congressmen, Mr. Edwards, who have been taking up your valuable time and embarrassing you with demands for political patronage. Let the world know who does this heaping of abuse upon your shoulders in attempting to interfere with your bureaucratic rights and privileges. Give us the names. Give us facts, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, Mr. Edwards. The people and the Congress have a right to know.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, Monday next is consent day. There is a rather short calendar, and I think in all probability it will be run through in from 30 to 40 minutes. Tuesday next, under the rules, would be Private Calendar Day, but we are very anxious to go along on Tuesday with the independent offices appropriation bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent—and I do this after consultation with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]—that after the call of the Consent Calendar on Monday next it may be in order to call the calendar for omnibus private bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I am agreeable to the request that the gentleman has made. I think the membership of the House would like to know about the full program for next week, if the gentleman from Texas can tell us.

Mr. RAYBURN. On Monday, as stated, the Consent Calendar will be called as well as the calendar for omnibus private bills. It is anticipated that the independent offices appropriation bill will be taken up on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, and that after that we will have no program unless something we do not now know about will be reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that on Monday next at the conclusion of the call of the Consent Calendar it may be in order to take up bills on the omnibus private bills calendar, and that the business on Tuesday, under the rule, be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONDITION OF UNITED STATES ARMY

The SPEAKER. Under special order heretofore made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, with the world in arms and hundreds of millions in Europe and Asia suffering the horrors of war, the patriotic, prudent American may well ask: What of our own defenses? How are we guarding our people—our men, our women, our children—against possible attacks from land, from the sea, and from the air? What further steps are necessary to give us reasonable protection against military assaults on our territory and our institutions?

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Appropriations, I felt it my duty to find the answers to these questions if possible. This information should be sought, I felt, not solely through testimony given at committee hearings, but also from first-hand knowledge, obtained through personal visits to our defense installations.

Therefore, during the past few years I have visited practically every military post in continental United States, in the Panama Canal Zone and in our island possessions. I have flown in almost every type of airplane used by our Army Air Corps. I have watched the fabrication of our guns and projectiles at our great manufacturing arsenals. In addition, I have visited many commercial plants engaged in manufacturing aircraft and other supplies for our armed forces. I have ridden on our Army transports, inspected our coast defenses, visited our supply bases, and examined in detail the plans for our national defense.

As a result of this extensive tour of our military establishments I would like to be able to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that our defense against all possible aggression is adequate. Unfortunately, this is not the case.

After the most thorough study, based on personal observations, it is my considered judgment that we still lack the necessary personnel, the complete fortifications and air bases, the required numbers of modern weapons and equipment, the essential transportation and auxiliary facilities. Our defense program is still in a state of incompleteness.

At the same time, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not advise you that in the past few years, and particularly in the last few months, tremendous strides have been made in securing for our Nation an adequate land defense. If we continue to strengthen all elements of our Army at the present rate, we may hope in the next 2 or 3 years to have a defense force on land and in the air thoroughly competent to cope with any probable threat.

Not quite 7 years ago the present President of the United States, by virtue of his inauguration, became the Commander in Chief of the Army. In taking stock of his Military Establishment he found:

A skeletonized Regular Army consisting of 12,297 officers and 121,788 enlisted men, including Philippine Scouts, scattered in weak garrisons at a hundred more or less isolated posts.

Included in this strength was the Army Air Corps, with a total of 1,282 officers and 13,497 enlisted men, operating a total of 1,775 planes.

A National Guard of 14,000 officers and 175,000 enlisted men.

A Reserve Corps composed of 119,485 officers and 5,028 enlisted men.

The arms and equipment of all elements of the Army were almost entirely those left over from the World War, the greater portion being obsolescent.

The Army had no semiautomatic rifles and was woefully lacking in heavy machine guns, modern trench mortars, anti-tank guns, and modernized light artillery.

Except for a baker's dozen of experimental machines, the tanks of the Army were of World War vintage, utterly useless against modern machines.

We were almost entirely deficient in modern antiaircraft artillery.

Our military airplanes were of a type that soon became obsolescent.

In a motor age, the Army was forced to rely very largely on animal transportation, with horse-drawn artillery and supply wagons.

With the armies of the world tending toward increased mobility, our Army had actually retrogressed in this respect. Such motor vehicles as we possessed were World War remnants, nearly 15 years old.

Advanced military training, other than for individuals and small units, was practically at a standstill. Funds were not made available for the training of large units. Brigades were seldom assembled, divisions almost never.

The housing of the Army approached a national disgrace. Large numbers of enlisted men were sheltered in dilapidated structures erected for temporary use during the war. Some troops had been under tentage since 1919. At one post junior officers occupied quarters in which bathrooms served also as kitchens. At others officers and enlisted men and their families were living in shacks that offered little in the way of creature comforts and which were fire hazards.

Stocks of supplies remaining after the World War had been largely exhausted and no provision had been made for replacement or modernization.

In short, in the name of economy our Army had been permitted to dwindle in size and effectiveness until our defenses were dangerously inadequate, and we would have been utterly unable to muster and adequately equip a respectable war force under a year and a half.

The present administration was faced with the colossal task of completely rehabilitating our national defense and repairing the damage of a decade and a half of neglect.

How well was this done? What has been accomplished in the past 7 years? Take stock with me of our present land and air defenses. Today we have—

A Regular Army of approximately 13,387 officers and we are rapidly approaching the President's quota of 227,000 enlisted men, nearly double that of 1933.

Included in the Regular Army is a highly efficient Air Corps with 2,039 officers and 41,797 enlisted men, with 5,500 military airplanes on hand or under order, an increase of 337 percent in personnel and 323 percent in aircraft.

We have a National Guard of about 16,000 officers and current recruiting is nearing the total of 235,000 enlisted men.

We now have 116,719 in the Officers' Reserve Corps, 3,054 in the Enlisted Reserve, and 24,581 in the Regular Army Reserve.

While we have not entirely made good our deficiencies in modern arms and equipment, we have made a splendid start. Our efficient arsenals and many civil industries are working to capacity in the manufacture of new weapons, planes, and equipment. Educational orders have been placed with a number of private industries to familiarize them with the production of critical noncommercial matériel.

We now have substantial numbers of the finest semi-automatic rifle in the world. Production of this weapon is being accelerated to the end that our troops may be completely supplied in another year and a half, after which a reserve stock will be manufactured.

Our Army now has a sizable quantity of fast, light tanks. These machines are at least the equal of the best. They are well protected against hostile rifle and machine-gun fire and have cross-country speeds in excess of 30 miles per hour. We are now manufacturing a considerable number of medium tanks, heavier weapons, but capable of comparatively rapid cross-country maneuvers.

Hundreds of pieces of antiaircraft artillery are now in production, with deliveries being made daily. To provide for the protection of our great cities and industrial areas, an air-defense command has just been created. This new system of defense against air attack will include air and ground troops, with facilities for rapid transmission of air-raid alarms.

We are procuring large numbers of new machine guns, anti-tank weapons, searchlights, aircraft detectors, and other essential military equipment.

Probably the most spectacular improvement has been made in our air arm. Instead of the weak and scattered air organization which survived a decade and a half of neglect, we now have a highly efficient, well-integrated, well-equipped Air Corps, ready to bring its full strength to bear at any threatened point. That portion of the Air Corps in continental United States has been welded into a compact organization known as the General Headquarters Air Force. Similar organizational improvements and strengthening in personnel and equipment have been made in our overseas departments.

Our aircraft is superior in quality, and our manufacturing facilities have so expanded recently that quantity production of most types of military aircraft is now possible.

Recent orders placed for thousands of motor vehicles will tremendously increase the mobility of our Army. Mobility has been further advanced by the reorganization of our regular Infantry divisions. Instead of the ponderous, incomplete divisions of the World War type we now have relatively small, compact units, of tremendous fire power.

Our light Field Artillery has largely been transformed from horse-drawn to motor-drawn. The gun carriages have been changed to permit high-speed towage, and alterations are rapidly being made in the guns to increase materially the effectiveness of their fire.

Motor trucks have supplanted our animal-drawn supply wagons with, of course, a tremendous increase in efficiency.

Widely scattered regiments and battalions have recently been brought together into divisional groupings for extended field training in their new organization. At this moment, four of the new type Regular Army divisions are concentrated for training in the southern part of the United States. In a few days, a fifth division will embark with the fleet in Puget Sound and put to sea to make a landing on the coast of California. Army and Navy land and sea planes will cooperate in operating against the ships and carrier-based aircraft.

Later this spring, four of these five divisions, together with elements of our Air Corps, the mechanized force and a Cavalry division, will be formed into corps to engage in extended maneuvers, the first genuine corps or army training in time of peace in this country. For once the Army will be given the same opportunity as the Navy to have its team and leaders.

New air fields, important air bases and depots have been established, and others are under construction.

After we have observed the destructive work of airplanes on the battlefronts of Europe, especially the slaughter administered Poland by the German air force, we know that in our national-defense equipment we must have a lot of the best airplanes in the world as well as antiaircraft equipment.

I would like to see the authorization for aircraft in the Army raised to 8,000 planes instead of 6,000 where it now stands.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. FADDIS. Does not the gentleman think that the organization would be top-heavy if we should increase the airplane force to the extent indicated by the gentleman and not increase the other components of the Army?

Mr. SNYDER. I might say that my idea would be to have that increase possible in case of an emergency. Say the Congress would not be in session. I suggest that we might have authority to go ahead and build up to 8,000 planes, say, by Executive order. I agree with the suggestion of the gentleman that we should bring the other elements of the Army up in proportion; that is, at the same time we should increase our Army, if possible, to the strength of 280,000.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. How many have we now?

Mr. SNYDER. Two hundred and twenty-seven thousand, and we have 5,500 airplanes on order or already delivered.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman believe that the blitzkrieg by Germany in Poland was successful because Germany not only had bombing planes and attack planes and pursuit planes but also tanks, artillery, and infantry, all four of which are necessary to conduct a successful land campaign? One of the greatest needs for our Army at the present time is to coordinate and synchronize the different branches of the service, particularly to have sufficient ordnance and matériel to equip the men we already have enlisted.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman very much for that contribution, because it corresponds with the last statement

I made. I said that for once our Army will have the same opportunity as the Navy. It would have its team.

Mr. FADDIS. And if the gentleman will permit, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] it is my belief that at the present time Mr. Hitler is afraid to reveal to the world just how little effectiveness his air corps has had and for that reason he is not employing it as he was expected to employ it. He is overbalanced as far as airplanes are concerned.

Mr. SHORT. It makes little difference how many airplanes a nation has unless it has pilots and ground force to fly and service them.

Mr. FADDIS. To back up their operations.

Mr. SNYDER. Now, may I proceed just along that line for an additional statement? It is evident that in case of emergency we would have to protect not only our shores but our industrial centers. To protect our industrial centers, take as an example the Pittsburgh industrial area, which during the last war manufactured and fabricated more steel material for the Army than any other two centers in the country. We must place a rim of airports and landing fields around the city of Pittsburgh—in a radius of 50 to 75 miles—and have selected antiaircraft placements in this circle by the hundreds.

We should not only have airports at such places as New Castle, Butler, Kittanning, Vanderbilt, Greensburg, Indiana, Beaver, Latrobe, Somerset, Uniontown, Waynesburg, and Washington, but we should have selected and mapped out level farm fields for emergencies. Arrangements should be made in advance with the farmers, just like we make with industry, that in case of a national emergency their fields would be used for landing purposes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman suggests that we buy those farms?

Mr. SNYDER. No, sir. We do not have to buy them from those patriotic people. They would be glad to say, "Light here all you want to."

Mr. DITTER. Would there be any liability attached?

Mr. SNYDER. No; no liability; just give it to the Nation free.

Mr. DITTER. Suppose the acreage was with crop at the time?

Mr. SNYDER. If it were in time of emergency, I believe most of them would do just like my good friend from Pennsylvania and myself would do. We would say, "Go ahead and land in the crops."

Mr. DITTER. Is it not true that the topography of the western part of Pennsylvania is such that the securing of sites of this kind is rather difficult, for instance, in the gentleman's immediate vicinity?

Mr. SNYDER. What I was getting at was, if we knew ahead of time, we have enough level spots in that 75-mile radius around Pittsburgh where we could map out places to land.

Mr. DITTER. Will my friend yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman would not be exclusive enough to omit from the realm of his selected group, that splendid eastern part of Pennsylvania, would he?

Mr. SNYDER. No. I would do the same thing around Philadelphia. [Laughter.] I said, "as an example," if the gentleman will remember. I said, "the Pittsburgh industrial area and the Philadelphia industrial area, or Detroit, or any other industrial centers."

Mr. DITTER. Naturally I am concerned about the eastern part of the State.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; and so am I. I would like to help you protect it.

Mr. FADDIS. Will my distinguished friend yield for an observation?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. FADDIS. I believe it might be well for those of us from the western part of the State to admonish our friend from the eastern part of the State that he should get away from the old idea that prevailed during the Revolutionary period, when the residents of eastern Pennsylvania looked down on the residents of western Pennsylvania as a bunch of barbarians and backwoodsmen, uncultured, and as a land of howling savages, when, as a reality, they were keeping the Indians from coming in and slaughtering those people in the eastern part of the State. [Laughter.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will my distinguished friend yield further so that I may have an opportunity to reply to my friend?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Izac). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] may have an additional 10 minutes for the learned discourse that he is presently giving to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crowe] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. CROWE. I will be glad to yield, if I do not lose my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will not lose his time.

Mr. CROWE. I will be glad to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for an additional 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Will my distinguished friend yield for a moment so that I may answer the colloquy of his colleague?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. DITTER. May I say in answer the Whisky Rebellion, for which the western part of Pennsylvania is always apologetic, has caused it more trouble than the Indians. I am not concerned about the topography, but rather the stigma that the vast State carries because of what went on in days gone by—in those days of the Whisky Rebellion. [Laughter.]

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Of course, we are deeply concerned about the concern of the gentleman from the outskirts of Philadelphia about the one-time morals of the western part of the State.

Mr. DITTER. I resent that reference to skirts. I must ask that those words be taken down, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing whatever to do with the outskirts of Philadelphia [Laughter], nor with any skirts of Philadelphia, for that matter. [Laughter.] My sense of the gentleman's fairness prompts me to say that I believe he will take that out of RECORD. I represent the county of Montgomery, in the State of Pennsylvania, than which there is no finer or better county.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the words "outskirts of Philadelphia" and substitute therefor "the county of Montgomery which we understand is out of debt entirely on account of the public works relief program of the administration in Washington. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I know my friend will indulge me again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes, I yield.

Mr. DITTER. May I again correct my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] that the financial stability of the county of Montgomery is in no way associated with nor due to the abortive relief efforts of the present administration. We were out of debt long before the New Deal came in. We have only been threatened with debt as a result of the mismanagement of the New Deal. [Laughter.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. FADDIS. In view of the words the gentleman has just spoken, are we to be led to believe that he was misinforming the House about a year ago when he made a joyous speech about burning the mortgages or what not of the fair county of Montgomery? The gentleman from Montgomery County boasts now that they had been out of debt long before the New Deal came into existence, but about a year ago he took this floor and spoke about his county's just getting out of debt. Now, which are we to believe?

Mr. DITTER. We were out of debt then, Mr. Speaker, we are out of debt now, and we believe we are going to be able to keep out of debt by reason of a Republican victory in 1940.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, as perhaps you know, the Poles were wiped out, comparatively speaking, in 3 days, and one of the chief reasons why the Germans were so successful with their airplanes and bombers was that the Poles had concentrated their men, equipment, and cavalry. They had their airplanes in large numbers on different fields and the Germans not only destroyed their planes, but they scientifically bombed all the runways in the first 48 hours so they could not take off with the planes they did have on the ground. Hence a plan such as I recommend for each industrial center in the United States is in keeping with what we are compelled to look forward to if might and force gain the day across the waters.

Another weakness in our national-defense set-up is roads. If the transcontinental road program as set forth in my bill, H. R. 1939, now before Congress, were ready for use our national-defense web would be at least 20 percent stronger because of the mobility and flexibility. It is evident now that we cannot put several million of our men to work in private industry under the present social, economic, and industrial scheme. Therefore we could put a million men to work in building these highways on an 8-year program and thus naturally help unemployment. When they were completed transportation costs on food and all materials could and would be reduced 15 percent. We could cut our national-defense bill at least $200,000,000 a year and still have as much, if not greater, national-defense workability and strength.

While the procurement of supplies has been primarily for the purpose of equipping troops of the Regular Army and National Guard, the necessity of establishing a reasonable reserve of nonperishable items has not been overlooked. Initial steps have been taken to build up stocks of strategic raw materials, such as rubber and manganese, for which we are largely dependent on foreign sources.

I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in favor of that, is he not?

Mr. DITTER. Usually I am for whatever the gentleman is for.

Mr. SNYDER. I know the gentleman believes in a strong national defense.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I wonder if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has given any thought to the matter of decentralization of aircraft and munitions industries? In other words, does he not feel that it would be wise to have some of these manufacturing plants in the interior of the country at places less vulnerable than seacoast points?

Mr. SNYDER. I am very glad the gentleman brought that out, and in reply I may say that not only do I believe in it but I acted on it, not only myself as chairman of the subcommittee but my subcommittee practically as a whole 3 years ago, 2 years ago, 1 year ago, and again this year. For instance, in the matter of the Edgewood Arsenal, where our chemical warfare research and manufacture centers, we have in that one place not only the facilities of manufacture but storage of the manufactured product. I do not blame the commanding officer of that post for requesting enlarged facilities; but your committee thought it would not be wise to build additional facilities at that point, a place that we consider one of the most critical points in the United States so far as danger is concerned, not only from water but from land approaches as well. We felt that rather than spend more money there we should establish another storage place or perhaps two manufacturing units so that in case of emergency, should one be put out of commission, we would still have the other to rely on. The same reasoning applies in the case of other equipment. I am more convinced of the soundness of this theory each day, especially as we see what happens across the seas. We do not know what is going to happen in the next day or month, but God forbid that as much can happen as is anticipated by some of our pessimists.

It is just as I have talked to you about our airports. We cannot consider our present airport facilities sufficient in case of emergency, but we must have a very great many fields that can be used for emergency landings and take-offs. So with reference to the location of these strategic industries, they should be at a number of places. They should not all be put in Pennsylvania, they should not all be put in Illinois, they should not all be put in the New England States, the Southern States, or on the west coast. I wish they were scattered, but you are not to blame, as I see it, and I do not know of any Army or Navy man to blame. I do not blame any President, I do not blame any Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy, or Chief of Staff. It is just a combination of circumstances that kept growing and growing. But now that we are looking at the picture as a whole I am sure the gentleman agrees with me that these adjustments ought to be made.

After 40 years of American possession we have suddenly realized what the Spaniards learned 400 years ago, that Puerto Rico is of vital military importance to the security of the New World. The Caribbean is the strategic area of the Western Hemisphere, and Puerto Rico is in the key position of that region. This is especially true in these days of aerial and submarine warfare. Puerto Rico is the vital outpost to the defense of the Panama Canal and the entire Gulf of Mexico. The President recently directed that a military department be established there. On my visit to that interesting island in December, I was greatly impressed with the rapid progress that has been made in installing the land and air defenses and with the highly efficient staff which had been so quickly created.

Steps are being taken to establish an air base in Alaska to supplement our protection of the northwestern area of the United States and to support the Navy along the Aleutian Islands.

At the same time, our harbor defenses have been strengthened and modernized.

The housing situation, so depressing in 1933, has been materially improved. Comfortable barracks and quarters have replaced dilapidated, expensive to maintain, wartime structures.

While this tremendous progress in strengthening our national defense is highly satisfactory, much remains to be done. However, if the same attention is given to this important problem in the future, as in the recent past, we may feel certain that our defense program will be complete within the next few years. From then on the question will be one of maintenance, not augmentation.

Never again should we permit economy or neglect to emasculate our Army. So long as we consider this country to be a world power we must maintain, year in and year out, on a sound basis, a reasonable posture of national defense. Due economy is only possible if we follow a well-thought-out plan, follow it consistently through the years, and not involve ourselves in the necessity of the sudden and therefore unduly expensive business of rehabilitating that which we have permitted to fall into disrepair, if not decay.

In 1920 the Congress enacted the National Defense Act, the finest piece of military legislation in our history. It provided for a peace strength of 18,000 officers and 280,000 enlisted men for the Regular Army and approximately 435,000 men for the National Guard. It likewise established a comprehensive organization and system for our Army, sufficiently elastic to cover all contingencies. The ink was scarcely dry on the new statute when the Congress started on the emasculation of the military system it had just created. The size and effectiveness of the Army progressively declined each year until the low ebb of 1933 was reached. Congressional economy was translated into disarmament. Lack of funds forced the Army to eliminate from its rolls 17 Infantry regiments, 12 Field Artillery regiments, and 4 Coast Artillery regiments, as well as numerous auxiliary units in 1921. The following year a further reduction of 4 Infantry regiments, 2 Field Artillery regiments, 4 Air Corps squadrons, and a tank company was made. Existing units were reduced in strength to skeleton size. At the same time hundreds of Army officers were discharged or retired and several hundred others were demoted in the interest of economy. In 1926, 4 more regiments of Infantry and 2 Field Artillery battalions were dropped. The remaining regiments were further skeletonized and numerous smaller units were made inactive. A belated increase was made in the Air Corps without, however, increasing the Army as a whole. This necessitated the transfer of 6,000 enlisted men from the ground troops to the air arm, thus further depleting the already emaciated regiments.

Practically nothing was done during this period to provide modern equipment for the Army. War surpluses were being consumed without replacement. Reserves were used up. Little or no consideration was given to the maintenance or improvement of our military plant.

Faced with such a situation, President Roosevelt took resolute action. Despite the fact that we were in the midst of a tremendous depression, he courageously approved increases in expenditures to strengthen our defense. Acting on the recommendations of two great Secretaries of War, the late Honorable George H. Dern, and our present Secretary, the Honorable Harry H. Woodring, the President initiated a progressive improvement of our land and air defenses.

The four-army organization was perfected. A system of army maneuvers was inaugurated. The commissioned and enlisted strength of our Regular Army and National Guard was gradually augmented. The enrollment at the West Point Military Academy was increased.

Additional training was provided for our National Guard, our Reserve officers, and for our R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. students. The Regular Army Reserve was established. The President approved the splendid bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], under which several hundred young Reserve officers receive a year's training with the Regular Army. Some 65 or more of these young officers are now commissioned annually in the Regular Army.

New and improved weapons were provided. Coast defenses were modernized. Provision was made for trebling our fighting planes. Our skeletonized divisions were reorganized and reequipped.

New impetus was given our program of industrial preparedness.

I need not remind you, gentlemen, that all this was expensive—tremendously expensive—the more so because of the extent of the damage that had been done the military machine.

While pay and allowances of American soldiers are small compared with salaries in civil life, they are large in comparison with the pittance received by soldiers in the large foreign conscript armies. The American standard affects Army costs as it does all others. Subsistence, clothing, shelter, and most of the labor and materials entering into the fabrication of military supplies all cost more here than in any other part of the globe.

But, granting the cost, I maintain that our land and air defense is the cheapest possible insurance for the maintenance of this democracy in peaceful tranquillity.

A year ago the President called attention to "the old, old lesson that the probability of attack is mightily decreased by the assurance of an ever-ready defense." The late Col.

Edwin M. House, closely associated with the Wilson administration prior to and during the World War—perhaps we should say the first World War—declared:

I am sure, given a large army and navy, that the United States would have become the arbiter of peace, and probably without the loss of a single life.

In other words, the expenditure of a moderate amount for peacetime defense would probably have kept us out of war and saved us from the staggering cost of blood and treasure that we experienced in the tragic years of 1917 and 1918. What could be better and cheaper insurance against disaster?

We can readily understand the need of a police force and a fire department for the protection of a large city. If a mayor or a city council should propose, in the name of economy, to abolish or seriously to curtail the police and fire departments, irate property owners would be quick to protest. Our National Government is in many aspects an extension of our municipal governments. As the existence of a strong police department operates to discourage crime, so the provision for adequate national defense in a democracy discourages bellicose nations and thus tends to preserve the peace for which we all hope and pray.

The peoples of the world may eventually dwell in peace and amity; national boundaries may again be held sacred; international obligations may come to be scrupulously observed; and the call to arms may some day be a forgotten signal; but, unfortunately, current history gives no indication that the hoped-for millennium is at hand.

We must therefore vigilantly guard our great democracy. We must adopt a program for the maintenance of adequate defenses, based, as the President has stated, not on panic but on common sense.

The President has submitted to the Congress a national-defense budget that, in my judgment, represents the minimum of our requirements. You will note that for the coming fiscal year the President asks for a Regular Army of 227,000 men, instead of the authorized peace strength of 280,000 men. While I am in accord with this figure at the moment, I believe that we should look toward the attainment of full peace strength for both the Regular Army and the National Guard within the next few years. An addition of perhaps the equivalent of a full division each year should be made.

Our initial protective force consists of our Regular Army and National Guard. It should be complete in numbers and well rounded in organization. It ought to be fully supplied with modern equipment, backed by adequate reserves of ammunition. It must be as efficient as peacetime training can make it.

The training of our Army should never cease. Field exercises should not be limited to a few weeks in the summer for a few troops, but for the Regular Establishment there should be annual maneuvers in the winter season.

Every effort should be made to provide our National Guard with the maximum amount of instruction consistent with its personnel of citizen-soldiers. It is not a reserve force. With our Regular Army, the National Guard constitutes our first line of defense. In addition to increased training for our Regular Army and National Guard, provision should be made for more training for our Reserve officers.

Modern arms and equipment should be speedily provided for all existing military organizations, with ample reserve stocks for units to be formed at the outbreak of hostilities. We should continue our experimental work with a view to developing the most effective military equipment in the world.

Especially should we continue to keep abreast of the rapidly changing developments in aircraft and in protection against air attacks. At present our military airplanes are probably superior to those of every other country. Let us maintain that superiority. In my judgment we should increase our quota of fast pursuit planes and of the improved and powerful long-range bombers of the flying-fortress type.

We are still lacking in adequate antiaircraft protection for the Panama Canal Zone, for Hawaii, for Puerto Rico, and for our metropolitan cities located on the seaboard. An early increase in this protection through the installation of modern antiaircraft artillery is highly important.

No discussion of our Military Establishment is complete without a recognition of the vision, the judgment, and the courage of our President, who, years ago, reversed the descending course of our preparedness and began the process of securing for our country a genuine national defense.

We must recognize, too, the splendid ability of his civilian and military advisers, the Secretary of War, the Honorable Harry H. Woodring; the Assistant Secretary of War, the Honorable Louis Johnson; and the unusually able group of officers of the War Department. The country is singularly fortunate in having had at this crucial period the services of these brilliant officers.

In my judgment, the present session of the Congress is charged with no more important duty than that of providing for the common defense. Let us approach this task in a spirit of national unity, guided by no interest other than that of serving our country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALTER). Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I am considerably concerned with the forest-purchasing program for national forests because of the status of the service in Indiana. When the national forest purchase units were established in Indiana a total purchase unit was set up, of which a net of 638,000 acres is considered purchasable.

When the land-acquisition program was halted in 1936 the Federal Government had acquired 35,000 acres. They also had options on an additional 65,000 acres.

The understanding was at the time this service was started in Indiana that it would be a continued agency. People who were sent in to take options were not instructed to consolidate them, but were sent out to get options where they could within the area. Accordingly the Government-owned land is not in one bloc, but is widely scattered and intermingled with private lands. The result is some farmers have sold and moved away. Others have been left entirely isolated from their friends and neighbors. The work has been practically at a standstill in Indiana for the past 3 years. The office and the skeleton organization must be maintained, even though a small fractional part of the purchases have been made. This, of course, increases the expense per acre tremendously.

Three million dollars was appropriated last year for the further purchase of forest lands, of which $100,000 has been set aside for Indiana. Options are again being taken, and it is expected to buy approximately 20,000 acres with this amount. At that rate it would take many years to completely consolidate and take over this area. It occurs to me that even $3,000,000, which was appropriated this year, is a very nominal, small sum for this service of the Government; but to reduce that to $1,000,000, which is contemplated in the present Budget, is unreasonable if we consider conservation of our natural resources is a worth-while function of the Government.

In 1 city alone in Indiana, with a population of 4,800, a total of 1,350 employees have steady employment with an annual consumption of 21,000,000 board-feet of lumber. The timber, however, in Indiana is now largely depleted. Many factories in small towns have folded up and quit because they could not afford to ship logs from long distances, and immediate lumber is not available. I am interested in a thing which is not alone for the immediate but looking to the future and future conservation of natural resources, of which timber is the greatest of any natural resource that can be augmented, built up, and increased. Let us not take the cramps in spending to the extent that we eliminate one of the most worth-while agencies of our Government. When the Budget reduces money for this purpose to $1,000,000, they entirely lose sight of any value of natural resources for the future, and they live only in the immediate today.

Mine seems to be a lone voice crying in the wilderness on this subject at this session of Congress. A number of years ago, in fact, under the administration of President Taft, a policy was established by the Federal Government of purchasing forest lands, lands for the most part that had been cut over, from which the valuable timber had been removed, lands which had been left to the destructive forces of erosion and fire. In my State of Indiana we have such lands the same as are found in many other States. In fact, this service of reforestation and rehabilitation of these lands has been established in 29 of the 48 States—yes; in a way in 31, but 2 have been used only as nurseries for growing millions of saplings to be used in the reforestation work.

There is quite an area in the southern part of the State of Indiana which has been denuded and much of which has been burned over. In a great amount of it, although not all, the undergrowth has been constantly destroyed.

That is true to a great extent all over the United States, as I understand it. The thing I am attempting to bring to the attention of the House and to the country, as far as possible, and to the Congress of the United States, is the value of continuing this program which has been in effect now since about the year 1909. Valuable lands have been bought and reforested. After a number of years valuable timber, saw logs, and saw timber can be taken out if the land is properly taken care of. It is one of the cheapest crops to grow that there is. Of course, it is not a crop that you can plant today and reap tomorrow. I think that is the reason the Congress and the Government at this time are entirely overlooking it. I think we take certain steps and go a long way with them, then we suddenly develop another line of thought and spend money as a nation for something else. I believe a good businessman, a good industrialist, or a good man in any line of thought, if he expects to do a thing worth while and pursue it to completion, will set himself on a straightforward course and pursue that course year after year. If the course is good, it will ultimately succeed, but if it is not worth pursuing, if it is not worth continuing, if conservation of the national resources of this country is not worth pursuing and following up year after year, then I should say any department of the Government that that is not true of should be entirely discontinued. I am not for discontinuing the Forest Service of the United States and the growth of timber. It is one of the greatest industries we have. Timber will grow on land that is not valuable and which will not produce any other crop; so we might put our waste land to use by the Federal Government in the growing of timber. On those lands we might put the poor people in position to live; they might get a few hundred dollars from these lands with which to go to better land. They could buy a few acres of the better land and maintain themselves and make a living for their families.

Mr. Speaker, instead of the $1,000,000 which is to be appropriated according to the Budget this year, I ask that the Members seriously consider the bill I have introduced which asks for $15,000,000 for that purpose. The appropriation should not be less in the coming year than it was for the year which will close on June 30 this year, which was $3,000,000. I think my request is for a very nominal sum and should be granted by the Congress of the United States. I believe the bill should be approved and signed by the President of the United States. Fifteen million dollars is not a large sum to spend in a year for the conservation of one of our country's greatest asset—timber—a natural resource which grows while you sleep.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. First, I want to thank the gentleman from Indiana for the splendid statement he has made and to assure him quickly that he will receive my wholehearted support in this worthy endeavor. I think there are few dollars spent by the Government that yield a larger return than those spent for reforestation work, not only in providing timber on our submarginal lands, but it also aids in flood control, the promotion of wildlife, and the conservation of our national resources.

Mr. CROWE. I thank the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

LXXXVI—21

Mr. CROWE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have just come from a hearing before the Appropriations Committee, and I am doing the best I can to accomplish what the gentleman is recommending. Last year several of us appeared before the Appropriations Committee, and only by reason of the very merit of our proposition were we able to raise the appropriation a million dollars. The Senate increased it $2,000,000, but it was cut back. I do not know whether the gentleman has stressed this point or not, but for the benefit of those who might be listening, may I say that in the gentleman's section and in my section of Ohio we can grow the finest walnut, hickory, white oak, and poplar that is grown anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SHORT. Except in the Seventh District of Missouri.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I was just coming to that. That territory runs across southern Ohio, over into Indiana and into Missouri. All of that seems to be the same sort of territory, and it grows the most valuable timber, as I have just indicated, and I hope everyone will join with the gentleman from Indiana and the rest of us in bringing this about.

Mr. CROWE. I thank the gentleman from Ohio.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I want to augment what the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Missouri said about the value of the timber in their two States. May I say that the same strata, the same quality of lumber, seems to run through the States of Missouri, Indiana, and Ohio, and on to the Atlantic coast. We in Indiana have a very fine, high-grade quality of hardwood of various kinds and of about the same quality grown in the two States mentioned. Throughout that section of the country hundreds of millions of board feet of lumber can be produced within the next 10 to 20 years if this program is continued. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. PAGÁN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. PAGÁN. I yield to the gentleman.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence may be extended our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON] for the next week because of serious illness in the family.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]?

There was no objection.

THE LATE SANTIAGO IGLESIAS

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I hope I will not take all the time that has been granted me, but I feel that I have to take some of the time of the House to speak about a matter which may not be important to all of the Members. However, I do not wish to defer any longer complying with my duty.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it is my first duty in Congress to make some remarks about my illustrious predecessor as Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

About a month ago, on the dawn of a sad morning, unforgettable to his people, my predecessor, the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, passed to the Great Beyond.

A hard worker, a bold fighter, and a beloved leader for my land on the seas, he had devoted more than 40 years to the awakening, to the betterment, to the welfare, and to the social and economic freedom of our common people.

The terrific news of his sudden death in a Washington hospital was a thunderstroke to us all over there. He was rather an aged man, but he had been always moderate and austere in his personal habits, simply devoted to his family and to his public task, he was in sound health and in a very good shape. A malarious mosquito bite while he was in Mexico on public duty carried him away in a few days. During more than 30 years he often came to Washington as unofficial spokesman of the working classes and the common people, and during the last 7 years he had been the official representative of Puerto Rico in Washington, elected by unprecedented majority of the popular vote.

He was so sincere, so upright and honest, gifted with a broad understanding of human nature and always meaning good, with a feeling and desire to be helpful to his people and to everyone. I know that he had many good friends among the Members of this House and that his unexpected passing was heartfelt by us over there as well as by his friends over here. As his successor, as head of his party, and as Congressman from Puerto Rico, I want to make this public acknowledgment, voicing the gratitude of his people for the public and private remarks made by his friends of Congress praising his character and expressing their feelings of sorrow for the passing of the good man and of sympathy toward his family and his people.

To this great democratic gathering of Congress usually come, elected by their States and Districts, very distinguished citizens and very able leaders of their constituencies and States. With the exception of those who rise to national renown, many Members' background and broad abilities are somewhat unknown to their fellow Members from other States. It often happens that among those who do not rise or do not care to rise to national renown come men from many congressional districts who are very high-type citizens, endowed with wide learning and abilities, the stories of whose lives are captivating and inspiring, who have had a long record of public life and achievements in their own States, really models of the best citizenry, born leaders of men, fathers of their people, of high goals and sterling character, who would shine with the selected others in the roll of honor and fame of the whole country of these United States.

Among those, one was the late Honorable SANTIAGO IGLESIAS. Born in Spain 67 years ago, under the rule of monarchy, he, with an innate longing for freedom and democracy, fled as a very young man to America. In Cuba, under the military ruthlessness of the Spanish generalships, he, a liberal and lover of freedom, pleaded and fought for the Cuban patriots and made common cause against the military clique of his own countrymen who misruled Cuba. Banished from Cuba by the oppressors of that brave people, he came to Puerto Rico, yet a young man in his twenties. He married a Puerto Rican lady and became a tender father of and fostered up 11 Puerto Rican children.

When SANTIAGO IGLESIAS came to Puerto Rico, at the last days of Spanish rule in my island, he at once, soldier of liberty and democracy, gave up himself to awaken the Puerto Rican workingmen and all the common people to his modern ideas of civil rights, social equality, and economic freedom. His word was a bold, new, and enlightening message to Puerto Rico. Our workingmen at that period were practically feudal serfs, poverty stricken, economically and politically oppressed, and were mere forgotten and downtrodden peons, without any consciousness of citizenship and without any grasp of the future.

When the American flag came over to Puerto Rico after the Spanish-American War, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS hailed the new regime, and he made himself known to American officers and soldiers, spoke so enthusiastically of freedom, that he was nicknamed by Americans as "Mr. Liberty."

It had happened that when the guns of Admiral Sampson, of the American Fleet, bombarded the Morro Castle and the city of San Juan at the opening of the Spanish-American War, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS was in prison, due to his speeches and activities against misrule and oppression. One of the bombs penetrated through his cell in prison, fell so near SANTIAGO IGLESIAS that his life was close near to an end. Put free by the American officers, he helped out a lot to see that Puerto Ricans welcomed the new flag and came to admire and cherish American institutions of democracy and freedom. During the short American military rule in Puerto Rico, when the local government was practically given up to certain very illustrious Puerto Ricans, but who had been brought under former ideas and institutions, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS had to leave Puerto Rico, and came to continental United States, and had to earn a living as a common laborer in the works of the Brooklyn Bridge in New York that was then under construction. Here he became an American citizen, before any one of the Puerto Ricans, and 2 years later, when civil government was established, he returned back to Puerto Rico and began a life struggle for the awakening of our people, for the economic betterment of the workingmen, for the welfare of the island. His was the main voice heard in a 40-year fight to raise up conditions of labor, to make the common man be conscious of all the rights and privileges under American democratic institutions, and to put in the minds and in the hearts of Puerto Ricans the love for America and the aim and hope that the destiny of our island be united forever with the destiny of these great United States—striving that some time in the near future Puerto Rico may be admitted as a sister State in the Federal Union.

During his struggle for 40 years, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS had been a live wire, a human dynamo, an energetic, honest, and far-sighted statesman at the service of the people. He was a man of principles and always against all odds stood with courage and fearlessness by them. During his last election campaign, he was shot at by a fanatic while he was speaking at a mass meeting, and, wounded, he finished up his speech.

When SANTIAGO IGLESIAS died he had won his battle. He lived to see the workingmen and the common people recognized as citizens, with equal rights and with equal protection under the law and enjoying measures of social reform. He had been elected to the highest post to which a Puerto Rican may be chosen, as the Representative to this Congress of the United States. His death was a blow to all. While his body laid in state at the senate hall of our insular capitol about 200,000 of grateful Puerto Ricans who beloved him, from all cities and towns and mountains, came to give their last glance to the great man. Funeral ceremonies were held before his body and 17 speakers took part, on behalf of all the political parties of the island in united front of bereavement before his body, of the labor organizations, of the legislative, the judiciary, and the executive branches of our government, and sundry civic organizations, voicing the feeling of sorrow and paying tribute to the great leader. The learned and distinguished Member of this House, Hon. MARY T. NORTON, speaking on behalf of her fellow Members of Congress, delivered also a very nice, touching, and inspired oration. It was of significance that the kind and humane chairwoman of the Committee on Labor of this House just paid tribute to the pioneer, the crusader, the builder, and the forestanding leader of labor in Puerto Rico.

For me, especially, SANTIAGO IGLESIAS will have always a sanctuary in the bottom of my heart. He was my political tutor and I was his close associate and lieutenant for about 20 years. I stepped to his seat in the insular senate when he was elected to Congress in 1932, when for the first time his party won the overwhelming majority in the island. As floor leader of the insular senate that I was for several years, I followed him in the leadership of his party and did my best as sponsor of the American ideals and the measures of social justice that he had stood for.

SANTIAGO IGLESIAS should be remembered always as a great American, always loyal to this country and to its institutions of freedom and democracy. As the unworthy successor of him in this great representative body, I pray the Almighty God that always in spirit he will inspire me to do my best.

I thank you. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 15, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a hearing Monday, January 15, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., before the Committee on Naval Affairs, on H. R. 7665, to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on the following dates on the matters named:

Tuesday, January 16, 1940:

H. R. 6130, to provide for mandatory or compulsory inspection and permissive or voluntary grading of fish, fishery products, fishery byproducts, shellfish, crustacea, seaweeds, and all other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, and the products and byproducts thereof, and for other purposes.

Tuesday, January 23, 1940:

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, Lord of the land we love, who hast placed in the keeping of men and within the compass of justice, kindness, and religious trust the solemn hope of life and its permanent interests: Inspire our leaders with the spirit of those great-souled men who, with unsullied integrity, administered power as a sacred trust and preserved for us our priceless heritage of freedom and national ideals. Grant that we may never fail them and their hopes as we endeavor to hold fast that which they secured for us by the travail of their souls. Help us to go forward in their spirit that we may raise our Nation unto new heights of greatness, inspired by the knowledge that Thy mercy surrounds us all and that though at times we experience failure with its halting gloom, nevertheless we are sure of ultimate victory through Him who is the Comrade of the shadow as well as of the light, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY (H. DOC. NO. 565)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

So much publicity has been given by the press and in other ways to the power-development feature of the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority that it is fair to assume that many of our citizens and even Government officials hold a belief that the purpose of the act creating the Authority was primarily the development of electric power.

It is perhaps time to call attention to this utter fallacy.

The original legislation, based on my recommendation to the Congress in 1933, was intended—in part as an experimental project—to raise the standards of life by increasing social and economic advantages in a given area, in this case the whole of the watershed which runs into the Tennessee River and including portions of many States.

Part of this objective meant the elimination of very large annual damage to life and property as a result of floods; and therefore it was planned to build a series of dams in the Tennessee River and on some of its many tributaries. The building of such dams would, it was figured, reduce property damage, which had averaged $20,000,000 a year for a long time. The building of such dams would also make possible the production of a large amount of electric power and would also afford barge navigation for many hundreds of miles up the river.

Furthermore, the original objective of the law included many other things, such as the planting of water-retaining forests near the headwaters of the many rivers and streams, the terracing of farm hillsides, the building of small check-dams, the development of fertilizer, the diversification of crops and other soil-building methods, the improvement of highways and other forms of transportation, the bringing in of small industries, the extension of rural electric lines, and many other similar activities.

In other words, it is time that people should understand that power development was only a part—and ultimately only a relatively small part—of a great social and economic experiment in one of our major watersheds.

From time to time I have transmitted to the Congress special reports from the Tennessee Valley Authority relating to special subjects in the progress of this great task. I am transmitting herewith the latest of these reports, a monograph on the Recreation Development of the Tennessee River System. This summarizes "the results that have been accomplished through certain experiments and demonstrations in this field and contains specific conclusions and recommendations with respect to additional legislation on this subject." It is coming to be realized more and more that in the improvement of our American civilization we cannot stop at hospitals and schools any more than we can confine ourselves to strictly economic subjects. Recreation in its broad sense is a definite factor in the improvement of the bodies and minds of our future citizens.

I hope that this report, which is only one of many which the Tennessee Valley Authority has made from time to time, will dispel any erroneous impression that the Tennessee Valley Authority's work is concerned principally with the mere development of electric power.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1940.

[NOTE: Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

CONTROL OR ERADICATION OF THE PINK BOLLWORM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

To the Congress of the United States:

There is transmitted herewith a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a report in response to the act—Public, No. 351—passed at the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, instructing the Secretary of Agriculture, with the assistance of the Secretary of State, to carry on discussions with responsible officials of the Republic of Mexico and if he deemed it necessary with the States of the United States concerned with respect to the control or eradication of the insect pest of cotton known as the pink bollworm.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEVY OF TAXES IN CERTAIN GOVERNMENT RESERVATIONS

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6687) to authorize the levy of State, Territory, and District of Columbia taxes upon, with respect to, or measured by sales, purchases, or use of tangible personal property or upon sellers, purchasers, or users of such property measured by sales, purchases, or use thereof occurring in United States national parks, military and other reservations, or sites over which the United States Government may have jurisdiction, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY AND NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHEELER also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 8, after line 14, insert the following:

"CUSTER HISTORICAL MUSEUM

"To enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Montana, approved August 10, 1939, $25,000, to remain available until expended."

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. KING submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to Interior Department appropriation bill, fiscal year 1941, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper places insert the following:

"Construction of water-conservation and utilization projects in Utah: For the construction of water-conservation and utilization projects in the State of Utah in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States,' approved August 11, 1939, $10,000,000."

"Facilities for water storage and utilization in Utah: For construction of facilities for water storage and utilization in the State of Utah in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes,' approved August 28, 1937, $10,000,000."

AIR CARRIER STOPS AT NEWARK AND NEW YORK CITY

Mr. BARBOUR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 215), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Commerce is authorized to make a full and complete study and investigation as to whether the currently effective designation of points at which air carriers are required to make stops in the vicinity of Newark, N. J., and New York, N. Y., and the policy and decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Authority with respect to the designation of such points, are in conformity with the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1939 and adequately serve the public interest.

TRANSFER OF VESSELS TO NORWEGIAN REGISTRY

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 216), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the United States Maritime Commission is requested to transmit to the Senate as soon as practicable the following information in connection with the transfer of vessels owned by the United States Lines to Norwegian registry: (a) the date of construction of such vessels and the cost thereof; (b) the date they were purchased by the United States Lines or any predecessor in interest, and the price paid therefor; (c) the amount of mail pay received for the operation of such vessels by the United States Lines or any predecessor in interest; (d) a complete recitation of the financial transactions involved in the transfer of the vessels; (e) a recitation of the facts, showing what control or interest is held by any American citizen in the Norwegian company to which such transfer was made; and (f) in general, all the information which would go to the bona fides of the transaction.

JACKSON DAY ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the Jackson Day address delivered by the President of the United States, at Washington, D. C., January 8, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR KING BEFORE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITED PALESTINE APPEAL

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator KING on January 7, 1940, before the National Conference of the United Palestine Appeal at Washington, D. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

PROPOSED FORTIFICATION OF GUAM

[Mr. BORAH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of today relative to the proposed fortification of the island of Guam, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMPETITIVE BIDDING FOR RAILROAD-BOND ISSUES

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a remark or two on a proposed bond issue of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, application for which is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Some time ago an effort was made by the committee investigating railroad finance to have all railroad-bond issues and borrowings made on competitive bidding. In times past it has been customary for Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Morgan, Stanley & Co., and a clique of New York bankers who have controlled the railroads to buy such bonds without competitive bids. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad now has pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission application for authority to sell some $60,000,000 of bonds. Morgan, Stanley & Co. have created a syndicate of some 70 or 80 bankers in the United States to prevent competition on bids for these bonds.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, the Cincinnati Terminal Co., and the Terminal Co. of St. Louis recently sold their borrowings on competitive bids and received a much better price than the New York bankers wanted to pay for them. Specifically, Morgan, Stanley & Co. offered 95½ for the Chesapeake & Ohio bonds; that is, they told the Chesapeake & Ohio that 95½ would probably be what they would offer. Those bonds were sold at par to competing bankers on competitive bids and are now selling for 107.

I should like to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part of my remarks an article by Jay Franklin, which was published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer of the 13th of January; and I earnestly urge the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission to require all offerings of railroad bonds to be made on competitive bids.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE THE PEOPLE—FINANCING RAILROADS; CASE OF THE L. & N.; COMPETITIVE BIDDING

(By Jay Franklin)

(Released by Consolidated News Features, Inc.)

A little cloud no bigger than a man's pocketbook has appeared on the political horizon in cases before the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is expected to blow into a typhoon of tycoons in the next few years.

This is the question of whether the financing of railroads and public utilities should be thrown open to competitive bidding or remain, as in the past, part of the patronage of the New York bankers. Since, in the long run, railway and utility rates are determined by the financial structure, the trend of public policy is to insist that financial costs shall be regulated by competition rather than fixed by privilege.

It is this issue which caused the recent furor over the Securities and Exchange Commission's decision in the Michigan Consumers Power deal involving Wendell L. Willkie's Commonwealth & Southern. It is this issue which underlies the Government's gingerly approach to the costs of the telephone company as affected by the charges of American Telephone & Telegraph's Western Electric for equipment. It is this issue which is attracting a flock of high-priced legal ravens to the Louisville & Nashville Railway case which is about to come up before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

MERELY A SYMPTOM OF THE TREND

In the case of L. & N., as with the Consumers Power case, a banking syndicate in which Otis & Co., of Cleveland, and Halsey, Stuart & Co., of Chicago, are associated, it is the agency which is raising the issue of competitive finance. This, however, is merely a symptom of the trend toward real financial decentralization in the United States and the transfer from New York to rising financial communities in the West and South of some of the unified business controls traditionally exercised by such firms as J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

The L. & N. has pending before the I. C. C. an application for approval of $60,000,000 bonds which were tentatively awarded without competition to Morgan, Stanley & Co. on terms which are said to be disadvantageous to the railway and designed to facilitate monopolistic control of railway finance. Offering of these bonds was hurried through between the Christmas and New Year's holidays without time for adequate preliminary discussion with the I. C. C. or with the officials of the 14 States served by the railroad.

The Otis group is understood to take the position that it will not make the case a banker's squabble, but will rely on the I. C. C. to do its "duty" to the public in establishing the competitive principle in railway finance. Since this is a world in which major decisions are taken chiefly under pressure, this position is expected to lead to an I. C. C. approval of the original Morgan-L. & N. deal.

TREMENDOUS SAVINGS MADE BY C. & O.

However, the trend is away from this sort of financial preference, whether achieved by contract, usage, or packing boards of directors with banking-house nominees. Competition initiated by one railway group recently resulted in tremendous savings to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, the Cincinnati Union Terminal Co., and the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis. Similar savings also have been made by six railroads through the competitive sale, under I. C. C. requirements, of their equipment trusts.

Justice William O. Douglas, of the Supreme Court, when chairman of the S. E. C., made a speech in 1937 in which he said there should be bona fide competitive bidding in cases where the bankers are dispensing themselves the patronage of a monopoly, whether by reason of directorship, voting trusteeships, strategic investment positions, or otherwise.

In 1925, Chairman Eastman of the I. C. C. said, in a dissenting opinion on a New York Central case: "An unhealthy situation exists with respect to the marketing of railroad securities. * * * I am convinced that competitive bidding would tend to bring about healthier financial conditions."

ORDER TO DISPENSE WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair). The routine morning business is closed. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 15, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Bless the Lord, O my soul and all that is within me, bless His holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits. It is He that hath made us and not we ourselves. We are His people and the sheep of His pasture. Behold, now are we the sons of God. Our Heavenly Father, hold to our lips the Holy Grail and from that blessed cup may we drink deep of the water of life. We pray Thee to take out of our hearts all bitterness and may a grave be dug deep enough to bury all wrongs. We thank Thee for our glorious country; help us to stress our problems and think more of our privileges; give us a larger sympathy for all men and a holy ambition to be of service in a needy world. In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 12, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by Commissioner Max O'Rell Truitt in New York on January 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered before the National Aeronautic Association, at New Orleans, relative to the development of aviation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

DANIEL W. BELL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, 28 years ago Dan Bell, of the Treasury Department, came here at a salary of $700 a year. He has now been advanced to the highest grade it is possible for a civil-service employee to attain. This has been done without any political influence.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks concerning Mr. Bell and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very brief editorial from the Dallas News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Wellsburg Herald, and I also submit a second request to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include another short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter in this morning's mail from a friend in Minneapolis named J. T. Miller, in which he calls attention to an article by a writer up in New York, named James McMullin, who states that we are accepting British and French paper currency at this time through the Federal Reserve banks. I want to read a part of the article. It is very important, it seems to me, in view of what happened to us in the way of extension of credit to Europe willy-nilly during the World War period:

An example of effective though unadvertised cooperation is found in the fact that the New York Federal Reserve Bank is accepting British and French paper currency—on order from Washington—at the pegged rate of 176½ francs to the pound sterling. Significantly, the Federal Reserve refuses to give out any information about the pounds and francs it has acquired. Insiders are convinced that the amount is already substantial and steadily increasing.

The vital point is that this currency is nonredeemable. Therefore we are in effect accepting large quantities of paper of dubious future worth at a valuation set by the nations that issue it. This is just dandy from the British and French viewpoint.

But suppose the Allies lose the war, or that protracted hostilities force them to resort to internal inflation. In either event, the United States would be stuck with huge sums of virtually worthless pounds and francs. Such a development could do incalculable damage to our own economy—especially to bonds and other fixed obligations. So this form of support for the Allies involves plenty of risk for ourselves.

Why cannot we learn from past experience to do things in a businesslike way? If we are going to extend credit, why not get good security, not worthless paper?

Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and to include therein the article referred to by him.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the report is that the State Department has sent Mr. A. A. Berle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State, to Ottawa, Canada, to conclude a treaty with that country in reference to the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes waterway.

We have tried to establish a yardstick down in the South, using Muscle Shoals as the yardstick to determine whether power should be manufactured by the Government, and in this way put the Federal Government into business. We have also gone out to the Grand Coulee, in the State of Washington, with the idea of developing another great power project. Each one of these projects will require before conclusion of construction close to $1,000,000,000. Some yardsticks, I must admit. Billion-dollar yardsticks. Government money of the taxpayer yet to be paid for. Why start another at this time?

It seems to me that the State Department and this administration should find out whether these yardsticks are going to be workable yardsticks and in the best interests of the American people before we start with another billion-dollar yardstick. It seems to me Congress should not permit any treaty to be concluded that will establish the St. Lawrence waterway project in the manner contemplated by this administration until we determine by actual operation whether these projects are going to be feasible and practicable, and also whether they are going to be in the best interest of the American people. Why, Mr. Speaker, we have put the Government into more business, competing with private citizens and private business, since March 4, 1933, under the New Deal Roosevelt administration than during any previous period in the history of America. Why should we be a communistic Government? Mr. Speaker, your party promised in 1932 in your platform that you were for the elimination of Government in business. But instead you have just done the opposite. Why not stop now before you wreck the Nation? You are on the verge of it now, and yet you go on and on. The people of America should wake up and repudiate the New Deal this November at the polls. It is too late if you think you can stand this wild orgy of spending any longer. America, wake up. South, West, North, and East.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Boston Christian Science Monitor commenting on the traffic safety record of Providence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a report upon the export of agricultural products, and also unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Jeffersonville (Ohio) Citizen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

STUDY OF SOCIAL-SECURITY PROBLEM

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a House concurrent resolution authorizing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to appoint a committee of 10 members for a special study of our social-security problems. This committee shall consist of 5 members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and 5 members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. Six of these members are from the majority party and 4 from the minority party. This committee would be authorized to study every possible phase of our social-security problem and report recommendations to Congress at the earliest possible date.

The extended hearings held last year by the Ways and Means Committee of the House under the able leadership of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], convinces me that committee would be given a real assignment, but I sincerely believe that Congress has not as yet met its responsibility in dealing with this problem. It means so much to the future of our national welfare and well-being that it may easily affect our very form of government. We must not evade our responsibility.

Under our present social-security program it is expected that 900,000 citizens who have made a small contribution will receive old-age insurance checks totaling about $114,000,000 this year. These pensions are payable only to citizens who have been fortunate enough to have had employment and met the other retirement qualifications of our present act.

This phase of protection for old age is not open to farmers, farm workers, to a large number of self-employed persons, to domestic workers, and a large number of Government workers. This means that about one-third of our Nation's workers cannot qualify for benefits; their future is not protected by our present national plan. They have but one recourse, and that is to prove destitution as the basis of charity for old-age assistance. The millions of citizens who cannot qualify but must assist indirectly to support our present national social-security program have some rights.

In this session of Congress a determined effort will be made to increase Federal contributions from one-half to two-thirds for title I of the present Social-Security Act. We must again meet the problem of a 100-percent Federal, self-supporting, or pay-as-you-go pension. We should study realistically the present social-security program, which many of us believe will impair the credit of our National Treasury if plans are not made to care for the ever-increasing liability of the millions of annuitants. Certainly no one who has had any business experience believes that business and industry can or will assume the proposed 9-percent tax that must be levied in 1949 to carry the present program.

The problem is here now, and it will not be solved until it is solved correctly. It is our problem. It will grow instead of diminish, and the sooner we meet it squarely the better for our Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial appearing in the Washington Post on Saturday last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a copy of a radio broadcast made by me Saturday evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1554) may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district judge, authorized to be appointed for the western district of Washington under the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges for certain United States district courts, circuit courts of appeals, and certain courts of the United States for the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1938 (Public Act No. 555, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 11, after the word "Washington", insert the following proviso: "Provided, however, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of district judge appointed pursuant to the authority granted by this section such vacancy shall not be filled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 6167) was laid on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6972, to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

OSAGE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6314, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Indian Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT COURT, DISTRICT OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1335, relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the district court for the District of Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 707, chapter 70, of title II of the act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as amended (sec. 3305 of the Compiled Laws of the Territory of Alaska, 1933), is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph "Fourth" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"Fifth. Whenever any party, or an attorney for any party, to any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, shall make and file an affidavit that the judge before whom the action or proceeding is to be tried or heard has a personal bias or prejudice either against him or his attorney or in favor of any opposite party, or attorney for an opposite party, to the suit, and that it is made in good faith and not for the purpose of delay. Every such affidavit shall state the facts and the reasons for the relief that such bias or prejudice exists, and shall be filed within 1 day after such action, suit, or proceeding is at issue upon a question of fact, or good cause shall be shown for the failure to file it within such time. No party or attorney shall be entitled to file more than one such affidavit in any case."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 2, line 4, after the period, insert: "The provisions of this subdivision shall apply only to the district court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OSAGE PRODUCTION TAX

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 289, to amend section 5 of Public Law No. 360, Sixty-sixth Congress.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Osage Act (S. 4039, Public No. 360, 66th Cong.; 41 Stat. 1249) be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5. That the State of Oklahoma is authorized from and after the passage of this act to levy and collect a gross production tax, not to exceed the existing rate, upon all oil and gas produced in Osage County, Okla., except as herein otherwise provided, and all taxes so collected shall be paid and distributed, and in lieu of all other State and county taxes levied upon the production of oil and gas as provided by the laws of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma, from the amount received by the Osage Tribe of Indians as royalties from production of oil and gas, 3 percent, upon the condition that one-third of such sums as received from time to time by said State shall be paid over to Osage County, Okla., the remaining two-thirds to be distributed in like manner as gross production tax under the laws of said State."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after line 5 and substitute:

"Sec. 5. That the State of Oklahoma is authorized from and after the passage of this act to levy and collect a gross-production tax, not to exceed the existing rate, upon all oil and gas produced in Osage County, Okla., except as herein otherwise provided, and all taxes so collected shall be paid and distributed, and shall be in lieu of all other State and county taxes levied upon the production of oil and gas as provided by the laws of Oklahoma. The gross-production tax on the royalty interests of the Osage Indians shall be at the rate of 3 percent, and said tax shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, through the proper officers of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma from the amount received by the Osage Indians from the production of oil and gas upon the condition that one-third of such sums as received from time to time by said State shall be paid over to Osage County, Okla., the remaining two-thirds to be distributed in like manner as gross-production tax under the laws of said State."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS IN OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7135, to authorize the leasing of the undeveloped coal and asphalt deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

LIMITATION OF COST OF BUILDINGS IN NATIONAL PARKS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2624, to amend the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 460), as amended, with regard to the limitation of cost upon the construction of buildings in national parks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

STATE OF NEVADA—PARKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6692, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain land to the State of Nevada to be used for the purposes of a public park and recreational site and other public purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that an identical bill (S. 2) passed both the Senate and the House but was vetoed by the President.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain a motion to strike the bill from the calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7079, to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FACILITATING THE PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7267, to facilitate the procurement of aircraft for the national defense.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMPACTS OR AGREEMENTS AMONG STATES BORDERING ON ATLANTIC OCEAN WITH RESPECT TO FISHING

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 302, to authorize compacts or agreements between or among the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean with respect to fishing in the territorial waters and bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States border, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement before consideration of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is identical in its present form with a Senate bill that passed the last session of Congress but received a Presidential veto. At the time this joint resolution was reported I thought it contained the proper language that the President stated ought to be in there, but through an oversight of mine it was not included. Unquestionably that language ought to be in, and an amendment which will be offered to this joint resolution will strike out section 4 and provide that the compact must receive the consent of Congress. There is a committee amendment which will have to be adopted, and then the amendment I shall offer is on page 2, line 15, to strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Any such compact or agreement shall not be obligatory on the signatory States unless it has been approved by the legislatures of such States and by the Congress of the United States.

In answer to an inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, when the Senate bill was up for consideration, I think I said that language was in there, and I thought it was at the time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, will establish a precedent in this respect. I want to commend the gentleman for creating a situation which I think is a very healthy one indeed, because I have always objected to the ratification of compacts by Congress between States before the compact was entered into.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman asked me if the language was in there, and I thought it was. In fact, I think I said it was. I stated it was in the form in which the Great Lakes compact passed and was signed by the President. This language is the language that was in the Great Lakes compact, which has received the approval of the President.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Insofar as I know, there will be no objection to the joint resolution with the amendment which the gentleman will offer.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Michigan has stated he is glad to see these compacts between States ratified. This morning I called attention to the fact that Mr. Berle was sent up to Canada to ratify a compact for the St. Lawrence waterway. It seems to me the House ought to vote on a project of that kind so that the Congress knows what is going on in this country without giving the power to the President and the Secretary of State.

Mr. BLAND. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman on that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida to enter into compacts or agreements, not in conflict with any law of the United States, for cooperative effort and mutual assistance for the uniform, common, or mutual regulation of fishing or of any species of fish, mollusks, or crustacea in the territorial waters and bays and inlets of the Atlantic Ocean on which such States border or to which their jurisdiction otherwise extends and of anadromous fish spawning in the inland waters of those States.

SEC. 2. The consent of Congress is hereby granted to States other than those specified but which have jurisdiction over inland waters frequented by anadromous fish of the sea to enter into compacts or agreements authorized by this act.

SEC. 3. The consent of Congress is hereby given to any of the aforementioned States to establish such agencies or authorities, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective compacts or agreements herein authorized.

Sec. 4. Any compact or agreement herein authorized shall become binding or obligatory only upon those signatory States whose legislatures shall have approved such compact or agreement.

Sec. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 15, strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 4. Any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon the signatory States unless it has been approved by the legislatures of such States and by the Congress of the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL MISSISSIPPI PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3759, to authorize a national Mississippi River Parkway, and matters relating thereto. (By Mr. DeROUEN.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an address delivered by George N. Peck, at the Denver meeting of the Livestock Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the speech of Dr. Coulter, the economist, on that same occasion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL LAND POLICY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1675, to establish a national land policy, and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott]?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF THE KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES OF INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 290) referring the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and report to Congress.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT OF 1933, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7342, to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not press his request. The time for making these mortgages expires on February 1, and there are about 10,000 applications pending. This program is working very well. This bill simply extends the present method for another 2-year period. The refinancing of these farm mortgages is a program that has saved many of the farms. The moneys are available already for continuing this program and pending applications for refinancing farm mortgages should be acted upon and the program should be continued.

Mr. TABER. Is this the Commissioner-loan section?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. This bill just extends for 2 years the period within which these loans may be made. I hope the gentleman will let the bill go through, because there are some really important applications pending.

Mr. TABER. Very well.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What proportionate number of the mortgages that have already been made does the gentleman believe will have to be foreclosed by the Federal Government?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe a very small percentage of them will have to be foreclosed; as a matter of fact, the foreclosures under the land-bank system have been less than half the percentage of foreclosures of outside mortgages. The delinquencies are comparatively small. I have not the latest figures on them, but a few months ago less than 15 percent were delinquent in the entire system.

Mr. RICH. From the reports we have had from a number of the Federal agencies, these agencies have had to take over many, many farms, which they are unable to get rid of.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There have been quite a few farms returned, but the gentleman must remember that more than a third of the farm mortgages of the Nation are in this land-bank system, and it is tremendously important. This bill will enable a great many farms to be saved that would otherwise be lost.

Mr. RICH. There will be 10,000 applications if this power is extended for another year?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There are that many applications pending. Whether that number of applications will be accepted I do not know, but 16,000 mortgages were refinanced last year.

Mr. RICH. How long will this privilege be extended?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Two years.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman contemplate any larger number next year than the 16,000 applications there were last year?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; I believe there will probably be fewer than there were last year, because the situation is getting in somewhat better shape. However, this cannot be forecast definitely.

Mr. RICH. I thought that after 5 or 6 years of giving the farmers of this country the handouts that you have there would be no necessity for further ones. You gave $41,000,000 last year to the farmers of Texas and only $1,000,000 to the farmers of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that this is a business institution which makes loans of money. These loans are made to farmers all over the Nation. The gentleman is talking about another program. At the proper time I shall be glad to discuss the merits of that program in connection with the tariff program in which his people are so much interested. I hope the gentleman will not object to the extension of this program, because he should approve of it.

Mr. RICH. If you are trying to help the farmers, I want you to help the farmers of Pennsylvania just as you are helping the farmers of Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The farmers of Pennsylvania have the same privileges in connection with this institution as the farmers of Texas or any other State.

Mr. RICH. I am speaking not only of this institution but of all institutions, and in connection with these handouts I want to be sure you will look out for the Pennsylvania farmer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We have tried to be fair to all of them.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws his request.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Farm Credit Act of 1939."

Sec. 2. The tenth sentence of section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1016), is further amended by striking out "February 1, 1940," in the two places in which it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "June 1, 1942."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out lines 3 and 4, and in line 5 strike out "Sec. 2. The" and insert "That the."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OR FERRY ACROSS RIO GRANDE AT BOCO CHICA, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3138, authorizing J. E. Pate, his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or ferry across the Rio Grande River at Boco Chica, Tex.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEVILS DEN SPRINGS, IN DECATUR COUNTY, GA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4040, declaring Devils Den Springs, in Decatur County, Ga., to be nonnavigable.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER IN THE CITY OF OMAHA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7069, authorizing Douglas County, Nebr., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence Station, in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF THE STATUE OF JOHN MARSHALL

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 260, authorizing the removal of the statue of John Marshall from its present site on the Capitol Grounds to a new site in proximity to the Supreme Court Building.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much will this joint resolution cost?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman that when this joint resolution was on the calendar previously I asked that it be passed over, due to the fact the joint resolution did not provide for any site to which the statue of John Marshall would be removed. However, since that time I have been given information that the Fine Arts Commission and the Supreme Court Justices have agreed upon a definite location to which the statue would be removed, and now it is agreed that the statue of John Marshall would be placed in the rotunda of the Supreme Court Building. The cost would be approximately $10,000 for the construction of a new base, I believe.

Mr. BREWSTER. Four thousand.

Mr. COSTELLO. It would cost $4,000 to construct a new base on which the statue would be placed in the Supreme Court Building, and, in view of the fact that a definite location is assured, I have no objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. There is not any possibility that any land will be purchased if this joint resolution is passed, and we are to understand it will be placed in the Supreme Court Building and at no other place?

Mr. COSTELLO. I understand definitely that is the fact. I have a letter here which is apparently a copy of a letter from Justice Stone regarding the location of the statue in the Supreme Court Building. In view of the fact we have been given assurance as to where the statue will be located, I have no objection; but I agree with the gentleman we should not approve bills of this character that do not specify a location for statues of this kind.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed to move the statue of John Marshall from its present site on the Capitol Grounds to a new site either on the grounds of the Supreme Court Building or on the Capitol Grounds between the Capitol and the Supreme Court Building. Such new site shall be selected by the United States Supreme Court Building Commission.

Sec. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "Building Commission."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN NATIONAL PARK, KY., AND FORT M'HENRY NATIONAL PARK, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5573, to change the designation of Abraham Lincoln National Park, in the State of Kentucky, and the Fort McHenry National Park, in the State of Maryland.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHOPAWAMSIK RECREATIONAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5638) to provide for the operation of the recreational facilities within the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project, near Dumfries, Va., by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4282) to amend the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7252) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain lands in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CESSION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6813) to accept the cession by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6658) to authorize the lease or sale of certain public lands in Alaska, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ACQUISITION OF THE ESTATE OF PATRICK HENRY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1919) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what will be the cost of the acquisition of Red Hill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for a cost not to exceed $125,000. I do not know how much land is included in the proposed amendment.

Mr. BURCH. Approximately 1,000 acres. There are certain buildings and also beautiful boxwood.

Mr. SCHAFFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that our Federal Treasury is almost bankrupt, I shall object to the consideration of this bill.

SECOND ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act—

(a) the term "regulatory order" means an order, marketing agreement, standard, permit, license, registration, suspension, or revocation of a permit, license, or registration, certificate, award, rule, or regulation, if it has the force and effect of law, and if it may be made, prescribed, issued, or promulgated only after notice and hearing or opportunity for hearing have been given; and

(b) the term "regulatory function" means the making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating of a regulatory order; and includes (1) determining whether such making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating is authorized or required by law, and (2) any action which is required or authorized to be performed before, after, or in connection with, such determining, making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating.

Sec. 2. There is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The compensation of the said Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate not to exceed $9,000 per annum commensurate with the duties of the position created but in no event to exceed the compensation of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to perform only such duties in the conduct of the business of the Department of Agriculture as may be delegated to him by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 3 of this act.

Sec. 3. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture deems that the delegation of the whole or any part of any regulatory functions which the Secretary is, now or hereafter, required or authorized to perform will result in the more expeditious discharge of the duties of the Department of Agriculture, he is authorized to make such delegation to the Under Secretary of Agriculture or to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture or to the Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary may at any time revoke the whole or any part of a delegation made by him under this section.

Sec. 4. Whenever a delegation is made under section 3, all provisions of law shall be construed as if the regulatory function or the part thereof delegated had (to the extent of the delegation) been vested by law in the individual to whom the delegation is made, instead of in the Secretary of Agriculture. A revocation of delegation shall not be retroactive, and each regulatory function or part thereof performed (within the scope of the delegation) by such individual prior to the revocation shall be considered as having been performed by the Secretary.

With the following Committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That as used in this act—

"(a) the term 'regulatory order' means an order, marketing agreement, standard, permit, license, registration, suspension or revocation of a permit, license, or registration, certificate, award, rule, or regulation, if it has the force and effect of law, and if it may be made, prescribed, issued, or promulgated only after notice and hearing or opportunity for hearing have been given; and

"(b) the term 'regulatory function' means the making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating, of a regulatory order; and includes (1) determining whether such making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating is authorized or required by law, and (2) any action which is required or authorized to be performed before, after, or in connection with, such determining, making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating.

"Sec. 2. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture deems that the delegation of the whole or any part of any regulatory functions which the Secretary is, now or hereafter, required or authorized to perform will result in the more expeditious discharge of the duties of the Department of Agriculture, he is authorized to make such delegation to any one or two, but not exceeding two, employees of the Department of Agriculture whom the Secretary may designate for this purpose: Provided, That such designation shall be limited to persons holding positions not below the equivalent of two top grades in the classified service. In the event that delegations are made to two such employees the Secretary may divide the functions to be delegated hereunder between the employees so designated in such manner as he deems will best enable expeditious discharge of the duties to be performed. The Secretary shall assign to the position or positions thus created a title or titles appropriate to the functions to be delegated. The Secretary may at any time revoke the whole or any part of a delegation made by him under this section.

"Sec. 3. Whenever a delegation is made under section 2, all provisions of law shall be construed as if the regulatory function or the part thereof delegated had (to the extent of the delegation) been vested by law in the individual to whom the delegation is made, instead of in the Secretary of Agriculture. A revocation of delegation shall not be retroactive, and each regulatory function or part thereof performed (within the scope of the delegation) by such individual prior to the revocation shall be considered as having been performed by the Secretary.

"Sec. 4. The authorizations contained in section 2 shall not be deemed to prohibit the delegation to the employee or employees designated by the Secretary under section 2, of such other functions as the Secretary may be authorized by law to delegate to employees of the Department of Agriculture.

"Sec. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions."

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF LAND-GRANT COLLEGES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1850, to aid the States and Territories in making provisions for the retirement of employees of the land-grant colleges.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BANDMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3840, to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"In addition there shall be created a new rank of bandmaster in the United States Army and National Guard in lieu of the present warrant officer band leaders, who shall be appointed and commissioned bandmasters by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"Sec. 6. Bandmasters: Bandmasters hereafter commissioned shall be entitled to the same benefits in respect to pay, allowances, and retirements as are applicable to commissioned officers of the various grades of the Army, which said pay, benefits, allowances, and retirements shall be as follows: Bandmasters with less than 5 years' service to rank with second lieutenants; bandmasters with service of 5 years or over to rank with first lieutenants. All prior active band-leader service as chief musician, master sergeant, warrant officer, commissioned and enlisted, in Regular Army or National Guard, shall be credited toward computing the rank present band leaders shall receive on first appointment. There shall be one bandmaster for each band of the Army. First, appointments as bandmasters shall be made from band leaders now in the service who are found to be physically qualified; second, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe, from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least 1 year of service in a Regular Army or National Guard band: Provided, That band leaders now in the service who fail to pass the prescribed physical examination because of physical disability incident to the service shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army with 75 percent of the pay to which they would have been entitled if appointed bandmasters as hereinbefore prescribed: Provided further, That no bandmaster shall suffer the loss of pay by reason of the provisions of this act."

Sec. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, is hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of band leaders receiving commissions in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. Wherever the word "Army" or "service" appears herein, it shall be construed to include the Regular Army, National Guard, and Organized Reserves.

Sec. 4. This act shall take effect immediately following its enactment.

Sec. 5. This act may be cited as the "Army Bandmasters' Act."

STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6158, authorizing the selection of a site in the District of Columbia and the erection thereon of a statue of George Washington.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed to select a suitable site within the Capitol grounds of the United States in the District of Columbia for the erection of a statue of George Washington, and to erect thereon the replica in bronze, cast by the Gorham Co. and now in its possession, of the statue by J. Q. A. Ward, which stands on the steps of the Subtreasury Building in the city of New York. Such statue shall be erected upon a suitable granite pedestal, the design of which shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts.

Sec. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. It is hereby authorized and directed that the statue of John Marshall, now on the west terrace of the Capitol Grounds, shall be relocated and reerected on John Marshall Place at the direction of the Commission of Fine Arts.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, strike out all of section 3.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 288, authorizing the Osage Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], a moment ago, in objecting to a bill, said he did so in view of the fact that the Federal Treasury was almost bankrupt. As this joint resolution will probably cost the Government several millions of dollars, and it is reported by the same gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], I am going to object, not solely because of the condition of the Treasury but because I do not feel after careful consideration there is any merit to the claim.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This joint resolution does not provide for a raid on the Federal Treasury. It simply provides that these Indians shall have their day in court, and it is not on all fours with the bill to which I objected. This joint resolution was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported by the unanimous vote of the Republican and Democratic members of the committee. If the gentleman is going to object, I hope he will have some valid objection to the joint resolution which would justify him in denying these Indians the right to have a court consider the merit of their claims.

Mr. COCHRAN. In response to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will give him valid objections. In the first place, this joint resolution sends the case to the Court of Claims "to determine and render judgment, not only on all legal, but also on equitable claims" growing out of an act of Congress that we passed nearly 20 years ago. If I am not badly mistaken, the attorney, who will probably receive a large amount of the fees if the objective is ever obtained, was a Member of the United States Senate at the time the legislation now complained of was passed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a moment. If the legislation was unconstitutional, why did not one of the Senators from the State or one of the Representatives raise the question then?

Then again, even after it became law, they had an opportunity to test its constitutionality but did not do so.

Now, nearly 20 years after all this money has been paid in and after all the benefits for which it was spent have been received, you want to place the burden on the United States Treasury, which is the taxpayers' pocketbook.

If that is not a Treasury raid, I do not know what is. This joint resolution provides that, notwithstanding the statute of limitations, the Court of Claims is given jurisdiction. If judgment is given, the joint resolution further provides for all back interest to be paid at the rate paid under Federal income-tax laws, which is 6 percent. In the original language $1,200,000 is mentioned as the approximate amount that can be recovered. This, with 6 percent, is a tidy sum. As much as 10 percent of the amount recovered can go to the attorneys.

Mr. Speaker, we owe something to the taxpayers of this country and I do not feel it is fair to them to set aside the statute of limitations at this late date.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIMITING THE OPERATION OF PRESENT LAWS WITH RESPECT TO COUNSEL IN CERTAIN CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7032, to limit the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF INDIANS WHO HAVE PAID TAXES ON ALLOTTED LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 952, for the relief of Indians who have paid taxes on allotted lands for which patents in fee were issued without application by or consent of the allottees and subsequently canceled, and for the reimbursement of public subdivisions by whom judgments for such claims have been paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4989, to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases," approved April 22, 1908, as amended (U. S. C., title 45, ch. 2).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the subject matter of this bill is contained in a bill passed at the last session of the Congress, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF INDIANS—PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 793, authorizing payment to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians for certain lands ceded by them to the United States by treaty of July 23, 1851.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it would be well for the Members to read the report on this bill and also read the letter from the Attorney General of the United States. Talk about your Treasury raids! Here is a bill that comes out of the committee of which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is a member. The gentleman objected to my action on a previous bill. The Attorney General said that this amount has been paid several times and it will cost the Government over $4,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this bill, including about 150-percent interest.

The Attorney General's language, in part, follows:

An act approved on April 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 47), conferred jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on claims of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians against the United States. Pursuant to the authority so granted, suit was filed by the Indians in the Court of Claims on March 17, 1917, in which one of the claims asserted was for the principal of the aforesaid sum of $1,472,000. The Court of Claims determined the matter on the merits and held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. The decision of the Court of Claims was affirmed by the Supreme Court (Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians v. United States, 58 Ct. Cls. 302; affirmed, 227 U. S. 424).

The purpose of the bill under consideration is to provide for the payment of this principal, with interest at 5 percent since 1901. This would require the payment of 190-percent interest, or $2,796,800, thus extending the total amount to be appropriated to $4,268,800 in satisfaction of a claim the principal amount of which has already been paid two and a half times, and which the courts have held the Indians are not entitled to recover.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I am unable to recommend the enactment of the bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

PUBLISHER'S NAME AND ADDRESS ON PUBLICATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5757, to require that periodicals sent through the mails or introduced into interstate commerce contain the name of the publisher, the place of publication, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to deposit for conveyance in the United States mail, or to introduce into commerce by any means, any magazine, periodical, or other publication, published at regular intervals, unless such publication contains conspicuously printed on one of the first five pages the name and address of the publisher thereof, the place of publication, and the names of the editor, managing editor, business manager, and owner or owners thereof, and if such publication is published by a corporation, the name of each officer of the corporation.

Sec. 2. Any individual, partnership, or corporation violating any provision of section 1 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 3. As used in this act the term "commerce" means commerce between any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia and any place outside thereof.

Sec. 4. Section 1 shall not apply to (1) any newspaper published at regular intervals of not longer than 1 week, (2) any copy of any publication after the first retail sale thereof or after delivery to any subscriber, or (3) any issue of any publication published prior to the effective date of this act.

Sec. 5. This act shall take effect 90 days after the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "published at regular intervals." Page 1, line 7, strike out "the first five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "its."

Page 2, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,500."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN INDIAN AGENCY, N. DAK.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1036, to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire, by the method most advantageous to the United States and within the limits of the funds herein authorized to be appropriated, land adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Reservation in the State of North Dakota, such land to become a part of such reservation and to be used for the benefit of the Turtle Mountain Indians.

Sec. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike all matter after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to purchase privately owned lands and improvements within and adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Reservation, N. Dak., title to be taken in the United States of America in trust for the Indians of the Turtle Mountain Reservation. For the purpose of making the purchases herein authorized, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use any available funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated pursuant to the authority contained in section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984): Provided, That title to the land so purchased may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be taken for the surface only: Provided further, That lands purchased under this authority shall not be allotted in severalty.

"Sec. 2. For the purpose of this act, the Indians of the Turtle Mountain Reservation shall include the following: (1) All Indians carried on the official census of the Turtle Mountain Reservation as of the date of this act; (2) all unenrolled Indians who were members of the band or bands which constituted the Turtle Mountain Tribe prior to October 8, 1904, but who failed to apply for enrollment on the roll closed on that date, and their descendants of one-half or more Indian blood. The roll of Turtle Mountain Indians as defined in this act shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and shall be kept current by striking the names of deceased persons and adding the names of Indians of one-fourth or more Indian blood who are descendants of persons enrolled on said roll: Provided, That Turtle Mountain Indians domiciled in Canada shall not be included."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

FISH HATCHERY, PUT IN BAY, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6481, to authorize the conveyance of the United States Fish Hatchery property at Put in Bay, Ohio, to the State of Ohio.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Ohio, for the use of the Ohio State University in its research program, what is known as the United States Fish Hatchery property at Put in Bay, in Ottawa County, Ohio, consisting of 1.69 acres, more or less, of land, together with the improvements thereon, said hatchery being no longer maintained and operated by the United States Bureau of Fisheries.

With the following committee amendments:

(1) Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "Commerce" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Interior."

(2) Page 1, line 4, following the word "convey", insert the words "at any time within 3 years of the effective date of this act."

(3) Page 1, following line 10, insert a new section as follows: "Sec. 2. Such conveyance shall contain the express condition that if the State of Ohio shall at any time cease to use the property as above prescribed, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such property, or shall fail to perform any contract entered into with the United States for the transfer of the property, title thereto shall revert to the United States for the use of the Department of the Interior, or other agencies of the United States, or for disposal under the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 885; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 40, sec. 304a), or under the act of August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 40, sec. 345b).

The committee amendments were agreed to.

ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1975, to amend the Annual and Sick Leave Acts of March 14, 1936.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have not the bill before me. Can the gentleman from Georgia give us some information regarding it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. If no objection is made, it is my purpose to ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill one that has already passed the Senate. The purpose of the bill is to correct a ruling made by the Comptroller General in which he held that employees on annual leave on a day which included a holiday should be charged with the holiday; in other words, if they were taking leave and a holiday came along, they were to be charged with it. This, we think, is erroneous. We do not feel that an employee ought to lose the benefit of his holiday simply because it occurs when he is taking annual leave.

Mr. KRAMER. I think they should be charged with the holiday. They have too much leave now.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I would not argue at this time with the gentleman from California, but I do not agree with him. There is a question about this matter of leave. We thrashed it out when this act was passed.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does this bill refer to Saturday afternoons as well as holidays?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; it relates to that also, because the Comptroller ruled that if they took leave for the half day Saturday they had to take it for the full day even though they do not work a full day on Saturday.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I approve the bill as the gentleman from Georgia wishes to amend it. It seeks to clarify the law and correct it in justice to employees.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The bill has the approval of the Budget Bureau, the Civil Service Commission. As far as I know, there is no objection to it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is rather unusual and sometimes embarrassing to have these bills called up which have not been on the calendar 3 legislative days. I am sure I do not know that I would have any objection to the bill in view of the explanation given by the gentleman from Georgia; in fact, it sounds as if the bill might be very desirable; but I do not believe we should break a precedent which we have established and maintained for several years of not calling bills up out of order on the Consent Calendar. For this reason I hope the gentleman will not insist on bringing it up, because otherwise it will have to be brought up under the rules.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have no desire to violate the rules. I thought it had been on the calendar long enough to be called today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It was put on the calendar last Friday, I believe, the 12th. Under the rules it must be on the calendar 3 legislative days to be eligible to be called.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman wants to have it go over without prejudice, I certainly will not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish the gentleman would withdraw his request, because I do not believe under the rules we can consider it, and I would have to make a point of order against it, but do not want to be in the position of objecting to it because I do not believe it is objectionable.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT JUDGE, WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 344, and to vacate the proceedings whereby S. 1554, to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington, was amended and substituted for H. R. 6167.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Washington the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. LEAVY. It is Calendar No. 344 and has to do with a judicial position in the State of Washington. The purpose was to make it a permanent position but under the amendment that was adopted it has been made a temporary position.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the bill been passed?

The SPEAKER. The bill has been passed. The Chair understands there was some misapprehension as to the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment makes the appointment merely temporary, not permanent?

Mr. LEAVY. No; the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from California makes a temporary position out of a position that is now permanent.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that this judgeship was created in 1938 and was a permanent position. Since the Judiciary Committee considered this bill the need for an additional judge has increased, due to the fact one of the judges has resigned and a second one died.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I understand the amendment which was agreed to as a committee amendment was done through inadvertence?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] that the proceedings by which the Senate bill was read a third time and passed be vacated?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill, S. 1554, to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district judge, authorized to be appointed for the western district of Washington under the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges for certain United States district courts, circuit courts of appeals, and certain courts of the United States for the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1938 (Public Act No. 555, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand now that the bill which we have just had under consideration, H. R. 6167, has had stricken from it the committee amendment as contained in lines 2 to 5, page 2 of the bill, in addition to any amendment offered by the gentleman from California?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that the amendment I offered carried that particular provision, but my amendment was offered to the Senate bill. The Senate bill did not carry the temporary proviso which which was in the House bill. After talking with the gentleman from Washington, it is my understanding that the need for that position is a permanent one, not temporary. The reason the temporary clause was put in the House bill was because at that time there was contemplated creating an additional judgeship through another bill, which would have created five additional judgeships. They do not now intend to do that, the idea being merely to create this one judgeship.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is understood that the Senate amendment is not a part of the bill and the proceedings by which that amendment or any other amendment has been adopted are vacated?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that the amendment is not now a part of the Senate bill just passed.

ACQUISITION OF THE ESTATE OF PATRICK HENRY

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 475 and consider the bill (S. 1919) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill, to which I previously objected.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, on behalf of the United States, at a cost not to exceed $125,000, the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill.

Sec. 2. The property acquired under the provisions of this act shall be a permanent public memorial to Patrick Henry, and shall be administered as the Patrick Henry National Monument, as provided in the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Red Hill, estate of Patrick Henry," approved August 15, 1935.

Sec. 3. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I objected to the consideration of the pending bill because it provided for an appropriation of $125,000. I was greatly surprised to find that an objection to the consideration of this bill would cause a vitriolic condemnation of the Committee on Indian Affairs for reporting bills which would merely give American Indians their day in court. The Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member, has spent many days considering the merits of these Indian bills, and almost every bill reported by that committee has been reported by a unanimous vote. This bill, S. 1919, honors the memory of Patrick Henry, a noble American patriot, who said, "Give me liberty or give me death." The record of America insofar as the Indians are concerned is a denial of liberty and the giving of death. In view of the fact that my opposition to this Patrick Henry bill has apparently denied American Indians the opportunity of having their day in court in order to determine the merits of their claims, and in the hope that the objector might change his mind in order that these Indians might have justice, I shall withdraw my objection. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the consideration of S. 1919, to acquire the estate of Patrick Henry, provided the committee reporting the bill will offer an amendment which was adopted in the committee by unanimous vote, an amendment which reduces the authorized expenditure from $125,000 to $100,000. I shall be happy to withdraw my objection if that amendment is offered, in the hope that many American Indians might have an opportunity to obtain justice. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 5, after "hereby", insert the words "authorized to be."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 1, line 5, after the word "exceed", strike out "$125,000" and insert "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—CONTROL OR ERADICATION OF THE PINK BOLLWORM (H. DOC. NO. 564)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

There is transmitted herewith a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a report in response to the act, Public, No. 351, passed at the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, instructing the Secretary of Agriculture, with the assistance of the Secretary of State, to carry on discussions with responsible officials of the Republic of Mexico, and if he deemed it necessary with the States of the United States concerned, with respect to the control or eradication of the insect pest of cotton known as the pink bollworm.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM (H. DOC. NO. 563)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931, as amended by the acts of April 24, 1939, July 19, 1939, and August 5, 1939.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY (H. DOC. NO. 565)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

So much publicity has been given by the press and in other ways to the power-development feature of the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority that it is fair to assume that many of our citizens and even Government officials hold a belief that the purpose of the act creating the Authority was primarily the development of electric power.

It is perhaps time to call attention to this utter fallacy.

The original legislation, based on my recommendation to the Congress in 1933 was intended—in part as a experimental project—to raise the standards of life by increasing social and economic advantages in a given area, in this case the whole of the watershed which runs into the Tennessee River and including portions of many States.

Part of this objective meant the elimination of very large annual damage to life and property as a result of floods; and, therefore, it was planned to build a series of dams in the Tennessee River and on some of its many tributaries. The building of such dams would, it was figured, reduce property damage which had averaged $20,000,000 a year for a long time. The building of such dams would also make possible the production of a large amount of electric power and would also afford barge navigation for many hundreds of miles up the river.

Furthermore, the original objective of the law included many other things, such as the planting of water-retaining forests near the headwaters of the many rivers and streams, the terracing of farm hillsides, the building of small check dams, the development of fertilizer, the diversification of crops and other soil-building methods, the improvement of highways and other forms of transportation, the bringing in of small industries, the extension of rural electric lines, and many other similar activities.

In other words, it is time that people should understand that power development was only a part—and ultimately only a relatively small part—of a great social and economic experiment in one of our major watersheds.

From time to time I have transmitted to the Congress special reports from the Tennessee Valley Authority relating to special subjects in the progress of this great task. I am transmitting herewith the latest of these reports, a monograph on the Recreation Development of the Tennessee River System. This summarizes "the results that have been accomplished through certain experiments and demonstrations in this field and contains specific conclusions and recommendations with respect to additional legislation on this subject." It is coming to be realized more and more that in the improvement of our American civilization we cannot stop at hospitals and schools any more than we can confine ourselves to strictly economic subjects. Recreation in its broad sense is a definite factor in the improvement of the bodies and minds of our future citizens.

I hope that this report, which is only one of many which the Tennessee Valley Authority has made from time to time will dispel any erroneous impression that the Tennessee Valley Authority's work is concerned principally with the mere development of electric power.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—OPERATIONS UNDER EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION ACTS OF 1938 AND 1939

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts of 1938 and 1939, I present herewith a report of the operations under these acts to the end of the calendar year 1939.

This report contains detailed and summary statements of the Treasury Department reflecting expenditures made, obligations incurred by classes and amounts, and the status of funds under each of the above-mentioned acts. In addition thereto, similar information is presented for the Relief Acts of 1935, 1936, and 1937. These statements have been compiled as of December 31, 1939.

Reports of operations of the Work Projects Administration, the National Youth Administration, the Farm Security Administration, the Public Works Administration, and other agencies receiving funds under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938, and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939 are also included.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein comments on the citrus district of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Evening Star, of Washington, D. C., on Friday, January 12, entitled "Mr. Hull's Statement."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made, the Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6183, for the relief of sundry aliens.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title I—(H. R. 1163. For the relief of Jacob Labovitz)

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the warrant of arrest and the order of deportation against Jacob Labovitz heretofore issued on the grounds that on February 9, 1926, admission to the United States had been fraudulently gained pursuant to the commission of a passport or visa offense which, subsequent to such admission, has heretofore been held by the Attorney General of the United States to be within the purview of "crimes involving moral turpitude," and thereupon Jacob Labovitz shall hereafter be deemed to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence at New York, N. Y., on February 9, 1926. Any declaration of intention to become a citizen or any petition for citizenship heretofore filed by or any admission to citizenship ordered and certificate of naturalization heretofore issued to Jacob Labovitz which were predicated upon the claim of lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence on February 9, 1926, shall hereafter be deemed valid unless the original 7-year period of validity of such declaration of intention has heretofore expired or Jacob Labovitz has heretofore been found otherwise not eligible to such benefit under the naturalization laws.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: On page 1, beginning in line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is the first of 40 or 50 similar bills scheduled to come up for consideration today. Practically all of them relate to cases involving fraudulent entry; that is, the aliens came here under forged passports, or something of that sort. In nearly every case the alien has managed to avoid the immigration authorities for 10 or 12 years, has married, and has had children born in America. It is claimed that to deport the alien now would cause a great deal of human suffering and hardship. I have no doubt that is true in a great many instances. In some cases it would be a very cruel and inhuman thing to deport the alien. I do not wish to deport them under such circumstances, but we should not confer the honor of American citizenship upon them.

Having this situation in mind, several Members, after consulting with the authorities on immigration, prepared a bill which was passed by this House as an amendment to the Smith bill last summer. The bill sets up a board in the Department of Labor with discretion to suspend or cancel the deportation orders where undue hardship would result. I believe we should withhold action on bills of the kind now under consideration until the Senate has had an opportunity to pass on that bill. There are two or three thousand similar cases pending before the Department of Labor. If we are going to consider them all in the committee and in the House, we will be busy all summer on immigration bills and will not have time to do anything else.

No harm will be done by withholding action on these bills today. Most of these cases have been pending from 3 to 6 years. We know the Department of Labor has no intention of deporting the persons involved. If you agree with me, I hope you will delete this first item. We might better know the mind of the House at the beginning than at the end of the session on this proposition. If the first item is killed, I shall move that we dispense with further proceedings under the call of the Private Calendar today. The leaders inform me that it is the intention to confine ourselves entirely to deportation cases.

I have no prejudice whatever in this matter, but I do believe it is unfair and improper for us to confer upon the aliens who came in here fraudulently, and deliberately so, all the rights and privileges of the honest aliens who complied with our laws in entering this country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sure the gentleman is very familiar with the fact, but I do not know whether he has accented it enough—in the last session of Congress this House passed a bill to change the reference of these cases, the bill providing that a board shall be set up in the Department of Labor which shall consist of 3 members, and this board shall have the right to go into all these cases, sorting out the cases which have some merit in them. The board may then recommend certain cases favorably to the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, that committee will then bring in here a clean bill. The 40 or 50 cases which are up for consideration today were knocked off the calendar twice in recent sessions. Some of these cases have been pending 5 or 6 years. There may be 1 case out of 50 which has merit, but I am informed by a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization that practically every one of these bills represents a case of fraud of some kind. Why should we pass 50 or 60 of these bills today when, in the Senate, there is pending a bill providing for the setting up of the board to which I have referred? When that is done, everybody ought to be satisfied. We ought to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I am not in favor of working any hardship on anybody. There is not much danger of deporting any of them. They have not been deported. There is a lot of sob stuff about that. Do not be misled. Vote for this motion, and then the next step will be to put all these bills over until the new board is set up. For years I have opposed this business of passing private bills in cases of this kind. It only means that the fellow who has a criminal record has the nerve to bombard his Congressman to introduce a bill for him, while many a poor fellow who is not used to the ways of the world cannot get anybody to speak for him. Nobody will go further to help a poor deserving alien than I will. The fact that practically every one of these in this list of 50 or so is here fraudulently proves my contention that these crooked fellows are the ones who want special bills passed for them.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KRAMER. I think there is some truth in what both the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New York have just said, but their statement does not apply to all the bills before this committee. I have been a member of this committee ever since I have been a Member of the House and I have taken a great deal of interest in the hearings we have held, and all the persons named in these cases have had a hearing before the committee. A great deal of time has been devoted to the hearings before the committee, and there have been a great many questions asked, and while there are some trivial cases of what you might call a violation of law, there are other cases that have been pending for some time, which both of the gentlemen say ought to be knocked out. I agree that some of the cases should be knocked out, because we do not want any such bills to pass, but as a general rule, every one of these cases is a meritorious case. I am in favor of some commission being formed, but at the same time the Committee on Immigration has done the work with respect to these particular cases. They have been doing this work for the almost 8 years that I have been on the committee, and if you are going to ask the committee to do the work all over again and make a report on these parties, it will be a duplication of effort.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made here that most of these cases are cases of fraudulent entries. The gentleman from New York said "all of them," and that is not true.

Mr. HANCOCK. I did not mean to say all of them. I thought I said the vast majority of them.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman is again wrong. To begin with, let me make this statement. It is no easy task to serve as a member of the Immigration Committee. It is a difficult assignment. Of course, it is very popular in some sections of the country to try to annihilate the alien because of the fact he is an immigrant, and most of the immigrants are in the heavily populated sections of the country, and, therefore, find themselves without a friend a great many times, and especially so in some sections. Irrespective of the merits of his case, and very few times that is taken into consideration, but it seems to be popular in certain sections of the country for the Representatives to go back and tell their constituents that they helped to send all the foreigners out of the country, but at the same time that is not fair to the alien. After all, we were all aliens to the shores of this country at one time. Certainly all of our forefathers did not come over on the Mayflower. A great many of us are sons of immigrants. We have all contributed our proportionate share to the well-being and the welfare of this Nation, and certainly none of us are over two or three generations removed from the alien class.

Now, let us be fair to the alien. A committee of this House has gone into this bill very thoroughly. I have the pleasure of being one of the ranking members of this committee. We have gone into each and every one of these so-called alien bills with respect to their merits or demerits. There are a great many bills, I will say to my friend, that we have turned down in spite of the pleadings of the Members of Congress who introduced them. Every one of these bills has been introduced by a Member of the Congress trying to protect his constituents, and when they come before our committee they do so with the thought in mind that they are doing their just duty and exercising their rights in protecting their constituents. Certainly there is not a Member of this House who would introduce such a bill and try to protect an alien who has no right to be here. I do not believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] would do that, and certainly he has sufficient regard and respect for his fellow Members to believe that they would not do such a thing either. The result is that every one of these bills, as I have said, has been judged on its merit, and if these bills were not meritorious, I will say to my good friend that we would not be here pleading for them now.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. May I remind the gentleman that in the Seventy-fifth Congress many of these bills—I will not say all of them—were defeated by a vote of this House.

Mr. SCHULTE. And may I say to my good friend that it is easier to get into heaven than it is to pass an immigration bill through this House because of the temper of the House.

Mr. HANCOCK. I am confining my opposition to the fraudulent cases and that is the nature of the first one of these bills. The man was a Lithuanian by birth. The Lithuanian quota was filled and he went to Germany, obtained a false birth certificate, and came in as a German, which was a plain, bare-faced, and deliberate fraud.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, that happens to be my bill and I will give you the facts about it. This man was born in Germany. His father died and when he was 2 years old his mother went back to Lithuania. Then she married again. Then this man wanted to come into the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK. I suggest to the gentleman from California that he is talking about another bill.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Very well, if I am mistaken about the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. We will reach the gentleman's bill at some other time.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, that is just an example of what the House has been in favor of—that is, just what my good friend from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] has been trying to tell us.

Mr. HANCOCK. But the gentleman from California has been talking about another case.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman from New York said that they were all fraudulent or that a majority of them were. He names one such case, and they are all similar. Each and every one is similar to the bill mentioned by the gentleman from California, and I say that there is a lot of merit in each and every one of these cases. Think of the hardship involved. Men have been in the United States for 10 or 15 or 20 years, they own their homes and have made this possible through hard work and self-denial. They have been married to American citizens, and have raised American children, and sent them to American schools. They have paid their taxes, and are doing everything that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], as well as every other American is doing, to make this a great nation, and then when he wants to do the right thing by applying for citizenship they find out that he entered the country illegally, and because of that unforgivable sin of coming into this great land without having a passport, he is politely and firmly told by this Congress that he must leave the country immediately because he is here illegally, and that they will deport him, that we care nothing about his family or his property or anything else, it is just "out with you" and that is all there is to it. My friends, let me make this appeal to you. In deporting 90 percent of these mothers and fathers of whom a great many of us are anxious to keep here, it will be like death entering that home to separate that family, because we realize that after spending 10, 15, or 20 years of their lives in this country they have lost all contact with the land of their birth, and in addition to that their family will never have funds enough to follow him or her back to their native land. That is what I mean when I say you have allowed a thing as sad as death to enter that home. I appeal to you to consider these bills on their merits.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title II—H. R. 745. For the relief of Soterios G. Stamoulis

That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the order of deportation against Soterios G. Stamoulis, heretofore issued on the grounds that on June 15, 1925, admission to the United States had been fraudulently gained pursuant to the commission of a passport or visa offense which, subsequent to such admission, has heretofore been held by the Attorney General of the United States to be within the purview of "crimes involving moral turpitude," and thereupon Soterios G. Stamoulis shall hereafter be deemed to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence at Detroit, Mich., on June 15, 1925. Any declaration of intention to become a citizen or any petition for citizenship heretofore filed by or any admission to citizenship ordered and certificate of naturalization heretofore issued to Soterios G. Stamoulis, which were predicated upon the claim of lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence on June 15, 1925, shall hereafter be deemed valid unless the original 7-year period of validity of such declaration of intention has heretofore expired or Soterios G. Stamoulis has heretofore been found otherwise not eligible to such benefit under the naturalization laws.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHULTE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we continue with the Private Calendar, starting with No. 518.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed with the calendar, starting with No. 518.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The request to call the Private Calendar was limited to immigration omnibus bills today. For that reason it is not in order to call up other bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the proposal is a request for unanimous consent merely. Therefore, the point of order is not well taken. Anyone can object.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The committee on this side of the House has not had opportunity to go into these other bills and did not expect the matter to come up today. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made today, and quote briefly from the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Charles A. Beard and another article by Prof. Harold M. Vianacke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have a very interesting report here from one of the departments of Ohio with reference to a certain tract of land in Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to that at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics at the Ohio State University in Columbus has recently issued a news release that is very interesting. It sets forth that Mr. Albert B. Gatch, who lives at Milford, Ohio, has a field of blue grass on his farm that has not been plowed for 140 years. The following is what this news release has to say:

CLERMONT COUNTY FIELD UNPLOWED IN 140 YEARS

COLUMBUS, Ohio.—An Ohio farmer looking at his land in 1799, the year that George Washington died, was pleased to find a thrifty growth of bluegrass among the stumps in one field. His great-grandson, Albert B. Gatch, Milford, in 1939 saw his cattle in that field which has not been plowed in the intervening 140 years.

Four generations of the Gatch family have so managed this and other pastures on the farm that they furnish cheap forage for livestock year after year. One of their management principles has been to keep livestock off the pasture in winter to prevent holes being punched in the turf to permit the start of erosion.

There may be older pieces of unplowed bluegrass sod on Ohio farms but the 20-acre field is the oldest which the men on the Soil Conservation Service staff at Dayton have been able to find. The agronomists in the Dayton office claim the field on the Gatch farm is an answer to the theory that bluegrass sod must be plowed periodically or the quality of the forage will deteriorate.

D. R. Dodd, extension agronomist, Ohio State University, has maintained for years that the judicious use of lime and fertilizer on Ohio pasture lands will earn farmers some of the best returns on the amount of money invested that can be obtained from farm enterprises. Bluegrass sod not only provides milk and meat efficiently and economically but is a safe deposit vault for the productivity of the soil beneath it.

Clermont County has many formerly fertile fields which are now useless for agriculture. The county also has one field which has produced a crop each year for 140 years without losing the ability to continue that production.

I hope that many other farmers whose farms are adapted to growing bluegrass will read this article.

COMMITTEE ON ADEQUACY OF PHOSPHATE

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Joint Committee on Adequacy of Phosphate be allowed until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the conclusion of the legislative business and the special orders already made, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE 1941 BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, two things stand out prominently in this Budget: First, it is exceedingly labile—that is, highly plastic and unpredictable, and adaptable to wide changes and modifications, all in the direction of unlimited increases in expenditures. Indeed, it is not a Budget in a true sense.

Second, it is an admission that the Federal finances are now out of control. The President has in his last so-called Budget message finally admitted his complete inability to lead the way to a balanced Budget. Disregarding the big hole he has left, through which he can plunge for billions more to spend, and after some very doubtful and tentative estimates of receipts, he still has a deficit of $1,716,000,000, in defense of which he says:

Blue-pencil inroads are not easy to make. * * * I have carefully checked the individual estimates under these broad categories, and I am satisfied that no lower figures can be obtained except at the expense of impairing the efficiency with which laws are administered or of working undue hardship on individuals and economic groups. I refuse to accept the responsibility of adopting either alternative.

Therefore, those who call for further cuts should have the courage and honesty to specify where they should be made.

And then the climax—

I constantly marvel at glib generalities to the effect that if one has but the will to do so anybody can reduce Government expenditures by vast sums sufficient immediately to "balance the Budget."

"Sufficient immediately," indeed. After 8 years, the maximum of time fixed by the Father of our Country that a President should serve, which precedent has been scrupulously followed by all of our Presidents up to now, at least; after 8 long years, with regular annual deficits of billions of dollars, we are told that we should not expect results immediately.

After stating to the Nation in his Pittsburgh, October 1932, speech—

If Government lives beyond its income for a year or two, it can usually borrow temporarily at reasonable rates, but if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds and is willing to make no sacrifices at all in spending; if it extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, then it is on the road to bankruptcy—

And accusing the previous administration of—spending altogether too much money for Government services that are neither practical nor necessary—

And further accusing it of being—the greatest spending administration in peacetimes in all history. * * * piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs and earning powers of the people.

And saying:

Bureaucrats, commissions, and commissioners have been retained at the expense of the taxpayer.

Then suddenly turning a complete somersault after elected, he increased all these evils, adding hundreds of thousands of new political jobs, a multitude of boards, bureaus, and commissions, billions in taxes, and more than twenty billions of Federal debt. Now, at the wind-up of his second term, after he has had all the time ever given any other President to make good, with no signs of any abatement in spending, we are told it is too much for us to expect a reduction of "sums sufficient immediately to 'balance the Budget.'"

After all this disastrous failure, 8 long years after stating to Congress (March 10, 1933)—

I ask you very simply to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of our National Government. We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now—

The President now deliberately throws up his hands and says to the country, "I can't do it; if anybody else can, let him show the way."

In other words, we are now baldly told by the President that, as he sees it, the Frankenstein is out of control; that the spending cannot be stopped; that our Nation is doomed to go the way of European totalitarianism.

Our country never witnessed anything like this before. I believe this to be an expression of the greatest defeatism that has ever taken place in our country or any other.

Notwithstanding, the President, as usual, extols the virtues of the revolutionary remedies applied to cure our sick economy, and also makes the usual apologies for the unconscionable spending, blaming it to some esoteric change in our economic life, to "changing attitudes," international conditions, and so forth.

He still persists in defending the most fallacious idea that the depression was brought on by too little political regulation and control of the affairs of men; that it can be cured if only enough of these are instituted, if only enough political machinery can be created to sufficiently regiment and coerce our people.

I do not believe, of course, that all of our present plight can be blamed to this administration. Far from it. The trouble we are in has been developing for many years. The point I am making now is that the remedies which have been applied in the last few years to cure the disease are false and vicious remedies, and instead of relieving are aggravating the disease.

Our distress may be seen by examining a few figures and observing some important facts in our present situation. Estimated expenditures are given in the Executive's Budget message as $8,424,000,000 and the deficit as $1,716,000,000. This supposes the raising of $460,000,000 in new taxes.

Judging from past Budget estimates made by the President his last can, of course, have little value. Nineteen hundred and thirty-six expenditures exceeded his original estimate by $360,000,000 (all figures relating to actual estimates of expenditures taken from the regular annual Budgets); those of 1937 by $1,353,000,000; those of 1938 by $1,468,000,000; those of 1939 by $1,637,000,000; and those of 1940 will exceed his original estimate by several hundred million.

Revised estimate of expenditures for relief and recovery in 1935 was overestimated by $2,561,000,000 and for 1936 by $1,806,000,000. Estimate for relief and recovery funds for 1937 was underestimated by $1,912,000,000, for 1938 by $1,920,000,000, and for 1939 by $1,472,000,000.

On the receipts' side of the Budget is shown $700,000,000, which is to be "recovered from excess capital funds of Government corporations."

As I indicated in my remarks last Friday, the item of $700,000,000 which is to be recovered from excess capital funds of Government corporations and added to receipts is of doubtful value until something is known about these corporations, their assets, liabilities, losses, and so forth. Congress now knows nothing about these corporations. Nothing in the Budget indicates from which Government corporations this is to be taken. I have tried to get some information about it but have failed. It appears even the Budget Commission does not know. The only information I have been able to obtain is that the $700,000,000 is an "over-all guess by the Executive department." No capital budget is set up for these corporations. Practically nothing is known of their true condition. We do know, however, that many of them have suffered heavy losses. Until all the losses, including depreciation charges, of all of these corporations—not merely of the ones from which the $700,000,000 may be taken—are known and properly charged against their capital, it cannot be determined what part of this amount could be considered as real receipts and what part is already incumbered. The losses of the Government corporations are now mounting into the hundreds of millions. The last report of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board shows a loss to date of about $60,000,000 of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation alone. Up to June 1939 approximately $2,709,450,000 of the obligations of the R. F. C. were canceled (1941 Budget, p. 897).

The Budget is further vitiated by wholly false entries. On page 898, under receipts for the U. S. H. A., are listed "Principal maturities on investments" and "Interest on loans," actual for 1939 and estimated for 1940 and 1941, totaling $12,-111,218. Under expenditures are listed "Loans to public-housing agencies," similarly totaling $310,112,177, and "Contributions to public-housing agencies," likewise totaling $20,-000,000. It has now been conclusively proven by the provisions of the Housing Act itself that the U. S. H. A. makes no loans whatever to any public-housing agencies, that the latter are merely dummies of the U. S. H. A., set up by it to carry on its financial manipulations; that no part of the rents goes to pay any interest or retire any part of the capital cost; that the annual Federal contributions completely amortize these false loans and, in addition, pay to the U. S. H. A. the handsome fabricated housing profit of 30 percent.

The money for these spurious loans is obtained by Federal borrowing. The annual Federal contributions are obtained either in the same manner or by taxation. Can there be any question therefore that this schedule represents a false entry, that it is plain deception?

Under "Contingent liabilities" is listed $114,157,000 already spent and $314,157,000 to be spent in 1940 and 1941. There is no question that these amounts should be listed as direct liabilities and added to the Federal debt. Thus the present estimated expenditures will, by this one item alone, exceed the debt limit in 1941 by $473,000,000, even if $460,000,000 of new taxes are provided.

Approximate expenditures for work-relief programs are given in his message as $1,300,000,000, though the sums involved total in the Budget itself $1,440,000,000.

Two billion fourteen million dollars were appropriated for these programs last year, as follows: W. P. A., $1,477,000,000; N. Y. A., $99,979,240; C. C. C., $294,955,000; Farm Security Administration, $143,000,000. Presumably, 1941 allocations for these agencies are: W. P. A., $1,000,000,000; N. Y. A., $85,000,000; C. C. C., $230,000,000; Farm Security Administration, $125,000,000.

But in giving this estimate for W. P. A. the President is careful to say:

If conditions fail to meet our hopes, additional funds may be necessary. I may, therefore, submit revised estimates later in the session.

Nine hundred million dollars for agricultural programs is estimated, parity payments excluded. But, the President adds:

I do not suggest in any way abandonment of the policy of parity payments heretofore adopted, and future events may call for some appropriations to this end.

He also reminds Congress, "in passing," that it failed to provide funds for "parity payments already made or obligated for 1938 and 1939." The latter is $212,000,000.

Therefore, the Budget is so beclouded with uncertainty as to make it practically useless for the purpose of arriving at even an approximate figure for 1941 expenditures. To make matters worse, the President renews his request for the lend-spend legislation that was defeated last summer. He speaks of—

* * * capitalizing certain capital expenditures of the Government that have proved to be self-liquidating.

What the term "self-liquidating" means is anybody's guess. In trying to make a good case for the spending policy and to make the Federal debt look as small as possible, he says:

The Government has $7,000,000,000 of cash, gold available for debt retirements, and proprietary interest in Government corporations, which reduces the net debt to $35,000,000,000.

We suppose he refers in part to the $2,000,000,000 unexpended portion of the so-called profit derived from the debasement of the gold dollar. Certainly, should this be used to retire debt it would be repudiation. If repudiation of that amount, why not of more, or of all?

Large claims are made for offsets in the Federal debt by "recovery loans and investments," without saying anything about the heavy losses in loans, depreciation, and so forth, that are being suffered, nor that practically all of these so-called investments are in either nonproductive things or are merely replacements of self-sustaining private enterprise with non-self-sustaining Government projects, which latter must be fed by tax money to keep them going.

Just a little looking under the surface of things will reveal some important evidence to indicate that our sick economic body is not improving as is being so volubly proclaimed. There is, in fact, abundant evidence to prove that the Nation is much more ill basically than it has been at any time since 1929 and that it is continually growing worse. Let us examine just a little of this evidence.

Following 1933—

Said the President—

the fiscal policy of the Government was more realistically adapted to the needs of the people. All about were idle men, idle factories, and idle funds.

IDLE MEN

National Industrial Conference Board figures show the annual number of unemployed from 1930 to April 1, 1933, 1 month after the present administration came into power, was 8,488,000.

The annual number of unemployed from April 1, 1933, to the end of 1939, 81 months, was 9,319,000.

Therefore, the annual number of unemployed since the incumbency of the present administration has been about 821,000, 9 percent, higher than during the years of the depression preceding.

Of even more importance, the proportion of unemployed to the total labor force in the 81 months of the present administration was 4 percent higher than in the previous 39 months.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has incorporated the unemployment statistics from the beginning of the present New Deal administration?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. From March 4, 1933?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In order to obtain a correct comparison between the New Deal and the anti-New Deal administrations, should you not show the unemployment figures in 1932 and 1931, because at the 1930 election the New Deal acquired complete control of the House of Representatives, elected its Speaker, and had a working majority in the Senate? The New Deal, therefore, has been in control of the policies of the Federal Government since the 1930 election.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is more or less correct.

The unemployment figures of the Department of Labor show even a worse picture. These give the average annual number unemployed in the first 39 months of the depression the incumbency of the present administration has been as 9,074,000 and in the 81 months following as 10,518,000. Therefore, the average annual number of unemployed since 1,444,000, or 16 percent greater than in the depression period preceding.

Has the actual income of the people been improved since 1933? The real test is a comparison between the average annual per capita income adjusted by the cost of living, or the general price level, since April 1933, with that of the period of the depression preceding.

Adjusted by the general price level, which shows most accurately the general well-being of the people, the average annual income from 1930 to April 1, 1933, was $539 as against $530 in the period following through 1938, which is $9, or about 1 percent less in the latter than the former.

But what may be considerably more significant is the annual per capita realized private-production income of the two periods. In the depression period up to April 1, 1933, the annual per capita realized private-production income, adjusted by the general price level, was $446 as compared with $411 in the period from April 1, 1933, through 1938. Thus the private-production income in the former period was $35—8½ percent—more than in the latter.

These figures tend to show what was to be expected; that the present program of the Government is destroying private industry. If in connection with these unemployment and income figures are considered the hundreds of thousands of new Federal and State nonproductive political jobs that have been created by national legislation in the past few years, the more than twenty billions of debt added; the more than four billions in taxes and debts such legislation forced on the States; and the more than five billions of Federal taxes exacted from the people, all for stimulating employment and increasing the purchasing power of the people, certainly there is no ground for claiming anything has been done since 1933 either to solve unemployment or to increase the real purchasing power of the people. All evidence indicates the contrary and that these problems are more grave now than at any time hitherto. So far, only the means of the totalitarian governments have been applied to solve them; namely, the confiscation and consumption of savings and capital by taxation and forced loans.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. In speaking of repudiation of the debt, the President has always been so jolly about it. I would like to insert here when he said—

If we pay interest don't we pay it to ourselves?

Does the gentleman recall that?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And further, I should like to interject at this point a little ditty:

And should you hint that I am heaping up a debt and expense account with nothing to defray it and the bill is growing bigger, cease to fret, for I merely need assess myself to pay it. If I borrow, don't I borrow from myself? If that threatened day of reckoning ever comes, I shall tax myself and pay myself a pension.

[Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

IDLE FACTORIES

Today, the machines which do the greater part of the work performed in modern industry stand idle about one-fourth of the time they were used in 1929. (Industrial Conference Board.)

IDLE FUNDS

In 1933 reserves in member Federal Reserve banks stood at $2,343,000,000, and excess reserves at $528,000,000 (Federal Reserve Rept., 1937). At present these reserves stand at the colossal figures of $11,720,000,000 and $5,300,000,000 respectively. Without resort to borrowing, member Reserve banks today have available more than thirty billions of credit. The additional bank credit that could be made available for lending is so colossal as to be beyond all comprehension. All informed persons recognize it as a dire threat to our entire economy.

If "idle funds" was a cause of the depression in 1933, then nothing has been done to mitigate the evil, for not only is the available bank credit much larger now than it was then, but the amount of loans outstanding has actually been continuously less since. The June 1939 Federal Reserve Report shows loans of all banks outstanding about $5,000,000,000 less than at the end of 1932.

Loans outstanding now are about twenty billions less than in 1929. On the other hand, the banks' investment portfolios are bulging larger and larger with Government securities, thus indicating the draining away of capital from private productive enterprise into nonproductive Government projects. The reason for this shift is not greater confidence in Government credit but less in the future value of the dollar.

Irredeemable paper money destroyed the capital investment market, and hence the future of our youth.

The President states the interest charge on the Federal debt for 1941 will be $1,100,000,000. With apparent satisfaction, he points out that the average interest rate paid on public debt in 1929 was 3.9 percent, while the present computed rate is 2.6 percent.

The total interest charge on the debt for 1932 was $672,000,000 and the rate 3.5 percent (annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, June 30, 1933). Therefore, even though there has been a reduction in interest rate—22 percent—since 1932, there has been an absolute increase of interest cost of 88 percent.

It may be true that the easy-money policy forcing low interest rates, the lowest in our history, is a temporary blessing to the Government. It probably also serves momentarily as an important political expedient. It should not be overlooked, however, that this interest rate is wholly artificial. It results not from excess savings but from the heavy deficit financing which, at bottom, is forced Government borrowing.

Against the temporary and evanescent benefits flowing to the Government from the easy-money policy are the injurious effects on trust and savings accounts, on life-insurance premiums and dividends, and other savings and investments. It has raised insurance premiums and decreased dividends. It has literally robbed the endowment funds of our hospitals and higher institutions of learning. Depositors in mutual savings banks alone are losing approximately $200,000,000 a year because of the easy-money policy of the Government.

With the average account in mutual savings banks standing at $625, the easy-money policy has in effect pilfered the pennies of the modest-income groups in our country. (The Effects of Easy-Money Policies on Savings Institutions, etc., by Winthrop W. Aldrich, Chase National Bank.)

Indeed, the easy-money policy of the Government, along with other programs, is destroying the fruits of industry and thrift, the real and only lasting guaranty man has yet found, to provide for the exigencies incident to sickness and old age, which have not been and cannot be replaced in value by legislative machinery, however ingeniously devised.

Of course, we all want adequate defense. But what protection to us will our Army and Navy be, however well equipped, if the Nation breaks down financially? The very sinews of war depend on the state of health of our money and finances. With the President already committed to repudiation, who can deny that our national finances are already in the process of breaking down?

The answer to all this failure and defeatism is for Congress and our whole Nation to wake up and see the real foe that now threatens our people, which is not Hitler or Stalin, but our own program of self-destruction. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEONARD W. HALL, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MALONEY, for 10 days, on account of public business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 5118. An act for the relief of the State of Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if no one else desires to enlighten this large and enthusiastic audience at this time, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 16, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1264. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Navy Department, for the fiscal year 1940, amounting to $31,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 562); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1265. A letter from the Secretary, United States Maritime Commission, transmitting the report of the United States Maritime Commission for the period ended October 25, 1939; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1266. A letter from the president, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to amend section 1262 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1267. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill relating to the citizenship and compensation of employees on certain War Department construction work in the Panama Canal Zone; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1268. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Roy F. Lassly, former acting chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Claims.

1269. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated January 6, 1940, transmitting report of the withdrawals and restorations contemplated by the statute; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1270. A letter from the Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, transmitting the Fifth Annual Report of the Federal Communications Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Special Joint Committee on Phosphate. House Joint Resolution 425. Joint resolution to amend Public Resolution 112 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and Senate Joint Resolution 182 of the Seventy-sixth Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 1514). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7828) granting a pension to John S. Martin; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7860) granting an increase of pension to Mary Merrill Scott; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOEHNE:

H. R. 7890. A bill to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the owners of Cut-Off Island, Posey County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge or causeway across the old channel of the Wabash River," approved April 30, 1934; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CARTWRIGHT:

H. R. 7891. A bill to assist the States in the improvement of highways; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. HARTER of Ohio:

H. R. 7892. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of the Cuyahoga River and its tributaries in the State of Ohio for flood control, for run-off, and water-flow retardation, and for soil-erosion prevention; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. FULMER:

H. R. 7893. A bill to provide that Federal grants for old-age assistance shall match State contributions two for one up to $10 and equal State contributions in excess of $10; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ALEXANDER:

H. R. 7894. A bill to amend Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (a), section 1, paragraph VI, defining the term "child"; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 7895. A bill to authorize waiver of recovery of payments under Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H. R. 7896. A bill to amend Veterans' Regulation No. 10, paragraph VII, to define the term "parent"; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. SCRUGHAM:

H. R. 7897. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes," approved March 31, 1933; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. THOMASON:

H. R. 7898. A bill providing compensation for overtime service rendered by officers and employees in the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. R. 7899. A bill extending the provisions of pension laws relating to Indian war veterans to members of Companies E and F, Frontier Battalion, Texas Rangers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLEOD:

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God whose sovereign power brings Thee from the unsearchable depths of eternity: We beseech Thee to reveal Thyself unto us as the life of our life, the love of our love, and the soul of our soul.

Give us not only the courage to meet the challenge of our high vocation but also the patience to fulfill the tender obligations of every day's most quiet need. Help us to realize as never before that the fruitful things of life do not come from the abundance of our possessions but from the spirit of understanding of our fellow men; from the sacrament of our friendship for the lonely and distressed; and from the divine quality of our mercy shown to those estranged from life, its beauty, and its holiness. So may we find Thy perfect law of goodness; so may the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts become acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our Strength and our Redeemer. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 15, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the City Council of Chicago, Ill., with reference to the reciprocal-trade policy of the Government, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas in the present session of Congress, there is contemplated legislation to renew the authority of reciprocal-trade agreements; and

Whereas it is in the best interests of the people of the United States to further these trade agreements for the benefit of increased trade and prosperity; and

Whereas under the leadership of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, these trade agreements, during the past year, have encouraged the sale of American goods abroad and have brought about a closer union of the nations that participated in the agreement, especially the pan-American republics; and

Whereas the preservation of a free economy is of fundamental importance to all nations; and

Whereas industrial communities, and especially the city of Chicago, will continue to find a wide foreign market for their commodities by reason of our present trade program: Therefore be it hereby

Resolved, That the City Council of Chicago express its approval of the reciprocal-trade policy of our Government and go on record favoring the continuance thereof.

LXXXVI—23

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON EMPLOYMENT SECURITY

Mr. WAGNER. I submit a concurrent resolution, together with an explanatory statement, and ask that the explanatory statement, together with two editorials, may be printed in the RECORD following the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 34) was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby authorized to be established by the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, in cooperation with the Social Security Board, an Advisory Council on Employment Security, representing employers, employees, and the general public, to study and report to said committees on the following matters:

1. Scope and coverage of unemployment insurance laws.
2. Amount, character, and duration of, and eligibility and disqualification for, unemployment insurance benefits.
3. Advisability and nature of individual employer and State unemployment experience ratings for tax purposes.
4. Size, character, adequacy, and disposition of unemployment insurance reserves.
5. Source, character, and method of financing unemployment insurance and placement activities.
6. Coordination of unemployment insurance with other forms of social insurance, and with relief, work relief, and other programs for alleviating economic distress and promoting job opportunities among the unemployed.
7. Pertinent experience in the operation and administration of existing laws.
8. Any other matters which either of the above-mentioned committees or the Social Security Board may deem relevant to the inquiry.

Sec. 2. The Social Security Board shall furnish all necessary technical assistance in connection with such study.

Sec. 3. The council shall file the first preliminary report of its findings and recommendations on or before January 1, 1941, and shall file its final report not later than January 1, 1942.

The explanatory statement and editorials submitted by Mr. WAGNER are as follows:

RESOLUTION TO ESTABLISH ADVISORY COUNCIL ON EMPLOYMENT SECURITY

Since the enactment of the Social Security Act in 1935 public discussion of amendments has been concerned almost exclusively with old-age security. Gratifying and far-reaching improvements in our old-age insurance system were enacted last year and are now being put in operation, following the report of the Advisory Council established in 1937. The time is clearly at hand for the consideration of other social-security problems of equally pressing national concern.

While old-age insurance looks largely to the long future, the Federal Government's stake in the effective functioning of unemployment insurance, in diminishing the relief load and cushioning national purchasing power, is immediate and substantial. About 27,000,000 wage earners are covered under the present Federal-State unemployment insurance program. In 1939, although industrial production mounted to 1929 levels, between nine and ten million workers searched in vain for gainful employment in private industry. Unemployment insurance payments were made to 4,500,000 unemployed workers in an amount exceeding $425,000,000. The average duration of benefits among the totally unemployed was 9½ weeks.

The Social Security Board and the States, in their respective spheres, have launched the unemployment-insurance program under particularly trying circumstances, and benefits are now payable in every State. Notwithstanding present accomplishments, increasing administrative experience and changing economic conditions have presented many knotty problems in administration, tax rates, reserves, and benefit payments. These problems must be solved if unemployment insurance is to become a truly effective first line of defense against the economic hazards of unemployment.

A Nation-wide advisory council on employment security would give proper perspective to various efforts for amendment and achieve for the entire system that expert guidance and progressive development which characterized the old-age-insurance amendments. In so doing we would be following the example of Great Britain, where the Ministry of Labor is assisted by an unemployment-insurance statutory committee, which acts in an advisory capacity on questions relating to the operation of the program.

The proposed advisory council will be established by the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee, in cooperation with the Social Security Board. It would consist of experts representing employers, employees, and the general public. No appropriation is authorized; the Social Security Board, as in the case of the former Advisory Council, would render all necessary technical assistance.

The council is directed to study and report to the above-named committees on the following aspects of the problem:

1. Scope and coverage of unemployment-insurance laws.
2. Amount, character, and duration of, and eligibility and disqualification for, unemployment-insurance benefits.

3. Advisability and nature of individual employer and State unemployment-experience ratings for tax purposes.

4. Size, character, adequacy, and disposition of unemployment-insurance reserves.

5. Source, character, and method of financing unemployment-insurance and placement activities.

6. Coordination of unemployment insurance with other forms of social insurance, and with relief, work relief, and other programs for alleviating economic distress and promoting job opportunities among the unemployed.

7. Pertinent experience in the operation and administration of existing laws.

8. Any other matters which either of the above-mentioned committees or the Social Security Board may deem relevant to the inquiry.

These specifications cover in broad outline the manifold problems which could properly be considered by the advisory council. Following the example set by the memorandum under which the Advisory Council on Old Age was established, these authorizations are stated in broad terms in order that the council may not be unduly restricted in following lines of study which may seem to it advisable.

The council is directed to make its first preliminary report not later than January 1, 1941, and its final report not later than January 1, 1942.

A similar proposal was offered by me at the close of the last regular session as an amendment to the revised social-security bill providing for an unemployment insurance advisory council. It passed the Senate by unanimous vote, but failed of adoption because, I am informed, the conferees believed the matter should be dealt with in a separate resolution such as I am now offering.

This resolution proposes a sound mechanism for constructive advances toward the solution of our foremost domestic problem—full employment security.

[From the New York Times of July 28, 1939]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

It would be deeply regrettable if the House and Senate conferees did not retain the amendment to the revised social-security bill providing for an unemployment insurance advisory council. Such a body is clearly needed to give the problem of unemployment insurance the same careful study that the Social Security Advisory Council was able to give to the problem of old-age insurance. No one can doubt the great value of the work done by the latter body. Congress acknowledged that value in the handsomest way by adopting the substance of the Council's suggestions in the new bill, even though these differed very sharply in principle as well as detail from the provisions of the present law.

Unemployment insurance is not a simple but a difficult problem. We have never recognized clearly, for example, what its relations are or ought to be to the whole broad problem of relief. As a result, our State unemployment insurance laws contain some very dubious provisions which the unemployment-insurance section of the new bill will make worse rather than better.

If the conferees do not see fit to retain the Wagner amendment in the new bill, then certainly Congress should act to establish an unemployment insurance advisory council by passing a joint resolution to that effect.

[From Social Security (published by the American Association for Social Security) for June-July 1939]

URGENTLY NEEDED—A COMMISSION TO STUDY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The amended Social Security Act, as passed by the House of Representatives, strikingly reveals a most profound contrast between the changes in the old-age-insurance system and those in the unemployment-insurance program. Whereas the changes in the old-age-insurance system are constructive, realistic, and in line with the principles of social insurance, the unemployment-insurance amendments not only continue all the incorporated fallacies but may even make confusion worse confounded.

The explanation is not far to seek. The changes in the old-age-insurance program are wise because some 2 years ago the Senate Finance Committee and the Social Security Board created an Advisory Council to study this question. This Council, composed of outstanding representatives of employers, labor, and the public, did what harassed congressional committees cannot possibly do—it spent nearly 18 months carefully and deliberately studying the various issues involved. When its recommendations were made, Congress was only too glad to follow most of them.

The association is convinced that constructive changes in the unemployment-insurance program will come only after thorough study by a similar group. The problems involved here are too intricate and complex for overburdened congressional committees. The creation of a committee or council, similar to the Advisory Council set up 2 years ago for old-age insurance, to study the various problems of unemployment insurance is therefore urgently needed. Only such a group will be able to give the question thorough consideration and shed the necessary light on this problem. The Senate Finance Committee should not delay in creating such a body or in recreating the old Council for the study of unemployment-insurance problems as well as the problems of old-age assistance.

RECOGNITION OF STATE OF WAR BETWEEN RUSSIA AND FINLAND

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution and respectfully ask unanimous consent that it be read forthwith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) was read as follows:

Whereas for these last many weeks the world, including the United States, has unhappily been advised of the existence of war between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Republic of Finland; and

Whereas daily intelligence from abroad has moved our people to deepest sympathy for those who, through no fault of their own, find themselves embroiled in such war; and

Whereas the daily press is replete with accounts of the battles between vast armies of said nations and of bombing attacks and reprisals therefor upon the part of the said belligerents; and

Whereas notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of the joint resolution of Congress approved November 4, 1939, the President of the United States has failed to "find that there exists a state of war" or "that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States," or any of such facts; and

Whereas pursuant to said section 1 of said joint resolution "the Congress by concurrent resolution" may find that there exists such a state of war between said foreign states and that it is necessary to promote the security of the United States or to preserve the peace of the United States; and

Whereas the United States desires to preserve its neutrality in said war and desires also to avoid involvement therein: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representative concurring),

1. There exists a state of war between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Republic of Finland.

2. The westward movement of the armies of said Union of Soviet Socialist Republics threatens to result in the conquest of the Republic of Finland and in other and grave threats to the peace and security of nations other than those already proclaimed at war by the President of the United States in his proclamation dated November 4, 1939.

3. It is necessary to promote the security of the United States.

4. It is necessary to preserve the peace of the United States.

5. Because of the existence of said state of war and because of the necessity to promote the security of the United States it is imperative that the President issue a proclamation naming the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Republic of Finland as the states involved in said war.

6. Because of the existence of said state of war and because of the necessity to preserve the peace of the United States it is imperative that the President issue a proclamation naming the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Republic of Finland as the states involved in said war.

7. The United States reaffirms its asserted neutrality in wars between all foreign states and between the aforesaid states in particular, and desires to maintain its integrity as a neutral nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the concurrent resolution referred to a committee?

Mr. DANAHER. I respectfully ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

LOANS TO FINLAND

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am advised that there has been introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] a bill, which is pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, the purpose of which is to extend credit, directly or indirectly—I am not sufficiently conversant with it to determine as to that—to the Republic of Finland. I express no opinion as to whether that bill should be enacted into law. I believe, however, that it should receive consideration at the hands of the Congress.

I have been repeatedly asked to introduce, for the consideration of the Senate, a bill for the extension of credit to agencies of Finland, primarily to enable them to obtain food supplies in the United States. In view of the concurrent resolution just submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], which will undoubtedly receive consideration by the appropriate committee, I invite attention to the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan; and, at the request of a number of citizens, I now introduce a bill to enable Finland to finance the purchase of articles and materials grown or manufactured in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3132) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make certain loans to the Republic of Finland, was read twice by its title.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I express no opinion as to what course our Government should pursue in giving aid to the heroic people of Finland, who are fighting against a powerful foe for the preservation of their liberty. Finland is not a belligerent in the sense that she engaged in military activities. Finland is being invaded by the army of one of the most powerful governments of the world. Her towns, cities, and hamlets are being bombed and destroyed, and men, women, and children—noncombatants—are the victims of a most fiendish war of extermination being carried on by Stalin and his army.

As I stated, I make no suggestion as to what course should be pursued in extending loans and credits; but the concurrent resolution which was submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHY], together with the bill introduced recently by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], will be considered by the appropriate committees. I ask that the bill which I have been requested to introduce be referred to the same committee to which the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan has been referred, so that the entire matter may be considered at the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RECOGNITION OF STATE OF WAR BETWEEN JAPAN AND CHINA

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas section 1 (a) of the Neutrality Act of 1939 provides:

"That whenever the President, or the Congress by concurrent resolution, shall find that there exists a state of war between foreign states, and that it is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States, the President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved; and he shall, from time to time, by proclamation, name other states as and when they may become involved in the war": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress (1) hereby finds that a state of war exists between the Empire of Japan and the Republic of China and that it is necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace of the United States and to protect the lives of citizens of the United States; and (2) requests the President to issue a proclamation in accordance with the provisions of section 1 (a) of the Neutrality Act of 1939.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in connection with the concurrent resolution submitted by me, let me say that it proposes a finding on the part of Congress that a state of war exists between the Empire of Japan and the Republic of China.

Mr. President, I did not take this action without long and careful consideration, and my hesitation was influenced by two important factors. One was that I feel, and have always felt, that the line of demarcation between any two of the coordinate branches of Government should be strongly marked. I was also impressed, as I am sure every other American has been impressed, with the superb way in which the State Department has handled our international relations, and particularly with reference to the continued state of affairs in the Far East, consistently maintaining a position on the part of the United States which cannot be misunderstood by any nation.

In addition to this consideration, I realized that it would be a step toward putting into effect the present neutrality law, with its consequent restrictions on American commerce, which is a very serious factor, and one which should not be taken lightly in determining our course with reference to a matter of this kind. However, after weighing these considerations, I decided to offer the concurrent resolution because the present law, in section 1 (a), places on the Congress a responsibility corresponding with that which has been placed on the President in the matter of finding a condition of war to exist if and when it does exist throughout the world.

I wish to take just a few minutes of the time of the Senate to read into the RECORD two excerpts which I feel will be of intense interest to every Member of the Senate. First, I wish to read from an address delivered by Admiral H. E. Yarnell, retired, who from July 1936 to July 25, 1939, handled the affairs of this country as Commander of the Asiatic Fleet in a way which elicited, and justified, I am sure, the complimentary opinion of the world. In an address in New York last month Admiral Yarnell said, in part:

There is taking place in the Far East a war that has caused in the 2 years and more of its duration more death, destruction, misery, and suffering than resulted from the Great World War of 25 years ago. This is a statement that may be challenged, but I believe it is true.

Forty million people in China have been driven from their homes to far distant areas. Of these 40,000,000, it is a conservative estimate that from five to ten millions have died of disease, privation, and starvation.

Over 2,000,000 Chinese soldiers have been killed in battle and four or five millions have been wounded.

Two million people were driven from their homes in the fighting that took place in the vicinity of Shanghai. Most of their homes were destroyed. * * *

In April of this year, I made a cruise up the Yangtze as far as Hankow. The river, this great artery of central China, was devoid of life except for Japanese transports and men-of-war. Not a sign of life could be seen in many of the towns and villages. * * * Canton was a city of 1,000,000 population, and less than 100,000 remained when it was occupied by the Japanese.

Let me add further for the RECORD an excerpt from a statement made last month by Dr. Walter H. Judd, who also appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body. Dr. Judd said, in part:

Japan's Premier officially announced that her objective was to "beat China to her knees until there can no longer be any spirit of resistance." The methods used for accomplishing that end, ranging from terrorism and bombs to narcotics and economic enslavement, have been observed and reported by hundreds of absolutely dependable American witnesses. They have set an all-time high for barbarity and ruthlessness.

Despite the revulsion of American citizens at Japan's conduct, and our numerous notes and speeches protesting Japan's more than 600 violations of American rights under the treaties, we have been, and still are, allowing Japan unlimited access to our markets and materials. We are the unofficial but indispensable partners in Japan's crime. We are furnishing a steadily increasing percentage of the essential war materials which Japan herself does not have, and which alone enable her to destroy China—in violation of the very treaty we sponsored and persuaded China to accept. In 1937 we supplied 54 percent; in 1938, 56 percent. Since war broke out in Europe, and England cannot supply her 21 percent, or Germany her 8 percent, Japan's purchases from us jumped 21 percent between last August and October. Was there ever a time in the world's history when a single nation had such gigantic power over the destinies of one-fourth of all the human beings in the world as our country has today through its financial, industrial, and material strength alone? And with that kind of power goes terrific responsibility.

For example, over 90 percent of Japan's aviation gasoline is American. The largest shipment in 2 years left last month from San Pedro harbor—almost 2,000,000 gallons of 92-octane-rating gasoline in one vessel. An embargo on this one item alone could practically stop the bombings of open cities which we so piously condemn.

If I may interpolate there, he is referring again to the effect it might have on our legitimate trade. Let me quote further:

Over 90 percent of Japan's scrap iron and steel and copper she gets from the United States. Special steels and alloys, trucks, lumber, lubricating oils, leather, go from our ports every week. As Japan's purchases of war materials have risen to 71 percent of her imports from us, she must buy that much less of our more stable peacetime exports, which causes corresponding suffering to the Americans in those industries. Our sales of other than war materials to Japan have fallen off disastrously in the last 2 years. For instance, Japan was the largest foreign buyer of our most depressed commodity—cotton. From $56,000,000 worth in the first 8 months of 1937, our exports of cotton to Japan have fallen off to $22,000,000 worth in the same period of 1939—a loss of 61 percent.

Having in mind these various factors, Mr. President, I felt justified in submitting a concurrent resolution on which the Congress of the United States could base its responsibility under the peace act of 1939.

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 217), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-seventh and succeeding Congresses.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE UNITED STATES HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a brief letter from Prof. Charles W. Killam, of Harvard University, relating to the United States Housing Administration. Professor Killam was chairman of the Cambridge Housing Authority, and I think his letter will be of great interest to all the Members of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., January 13, 1940.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As former chairman of the Cambridge Housing Authority and for many years interested and active in matters of building codes, tenement-house legislation, zoning codes, city planning, and low-cost housing, I respectfully urge careful consideration of the bases upon which the United States Housing Authority should be given more money.

I believe that it should be made perfectly clear by the wording of the act and by all publicity of the Authority that the amortization and interest of loans is not paid from income from the project but from the "annual contributions" from the Government; that is, the Government taxes the people as a whole to pay principal and interest on its own loans to house a relatively small part of the people.

Slum clearances in cities are made difficult by the high land costs; therefore, that land should not be limited in its economical development by undue restrictions on the land coverage and building heights.

New Towne Court in Cambridge is an example of only 20 percent coverage and three-story buildings on an area costing about $2.88 per square foot for land, exclusive of streets given by the city. This coverage and this height limit are grotesquely out of line with Cambridge apartment-house practice in general. New Towne Court was a Public Works Administration project, but the United States Housing Authority regulations, as published in Summary of General Requirements and Minimum Standards for United States Housing Authority-Aided Projects, United States Housing Authority, 699, July 13, 1939, though less extravagant, are still so severe that they are likely to make subsidy costs so high that the benefits of low-cost housing will not be extended to as many people as would be possible by a more realistic and economical use of these great sums.

Land coverage is limited to a maximum of 35 percent by the printed regulations of the United States Housing Authority, but the enforcement is evidently keeping the coverage still less. The average coverage of high-grade apartment houses in Cambridge is about 57 percent and these apartment districts have not become slums. There is no reason why poor people, housed in very large part by public grants, should have so much more light and air than the self-supporting taxpayers who supply the public grants.

If poor people insist upon living close in to metropolitan centers, they should not expect the Federal Government to supply them with wide open spaces, playgrounds, swimming and wading pools, recreation buildings, and other amenities which apartment-house dwellers cannot afford and which large areas of adjacent remaining slums cannot afford.

These facilities should be provided by the municipality in any neighborhood where there are children, rich or poor, and they should be open freely to the whole neighborhood, not to tenants of the project alone. Playgrounds for small children can be provided on roofs or in basements; larger children and adults should go to the same playgrounds and neighborhood centers as the rest of the population. If the municipality refuses to provide these municipal needs for the neighborhood as a whole, the United States Housing Authority should refuse to pay for a project which provides only for its own lucky group.

The regulations and standards issued by the Administrator should be studied by Congress before granting additional millions. Standards should not be set altogether by starry-eyed reformers, but the point of view of people who have had practical and responsible experience in these matters should be incorporated. The oft-repeated statements by United States Housing Authority employees that housing is allowed to be a local matter should be checked up to see how much the local authorities are limited by the regulations of the Administrator.

The United States Housing Authority Act, section 7 (a), states that "the Authority may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of housing." This dissemination has been entirely inadequate in proportion to the $800,000,000 appropriated to the Authority. We are told that funds requested for research were refused by Congress. If the Government is to continue to give away great sums of money for low-cost housing, it may well authorize substantial sums for research. The $198,000 appropriated for the National Bureau of Standards for research in materials and methods suitable for use in low-cost housing is entirely inadequate. Economies in building construction, as well as in standards and use of land, can only be discovered by thorough research concentrated on that subject, and the benefits of low-cost housing can reach large numbers of those most in need only on the basis of much more economical results than at present possible.

Much more technical information should be available from the experience and research of the Public Works Administration and the United States Housing Authority, and this information should be made available as freely as practicable, not only to local authorities but to the whole building industry, private as well as public. There ought to be valuable technical information available as a byproduct of the billion-dollar expenditures already appropriated for housing. Too much of the information disseminated by the United States Housing Authority is propaganda to persuade localities into asking for new projects. Localities ought to be free to make up their minds with the aid of information furnished from Washington, but the United States Housing Authority employees should not take sides in the local discussion.

Publications and speeches of the Administrator and his traveling subordinates spend too much time and money in urging more housing and too little time and money in finding out what the localities actually need and how that need can be most economically met.

Subsidized low-cost housing suffers from immoderate friends and immoderate enemies. It needs friendly and constructive critics.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES W. KILLAM.

TREND OF LABOR DISPUTES UNDER NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by him to the New York Herald Tribune with reference to the National Labor Relations Act, an editorial by Bernarr Macfadden published in Liberty magazine on the same subject, and a reply thereto, also published in Liberty magazine, which appear in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN ON RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by former Senator Augustine Lonergan made at a meeting of New England businessmen at Greenfield, Mass., in February 1938, relative to the reciprocal-trade agreements, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY MISS JEANNETTE RANKIN FOR THE BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUB, HELENA, MONT.

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune of January 8, 1940, relative to the Federal Housing Administration, which appears in the Appendix.]

CITIZENSHIP FOR PEOPLE OF GUAM

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Young Men's League of Guam on October 23, 1939, relative to citizenship for the people of Guam, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the large number of nominations in which Senators are interested, and their desire to dispose of them promptly, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business, at the conclusion of which the Senate will automatically resume the consideration of legislative business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several judicial nominations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the following nominations:

Lawrence Westbrook, of Texas, to be regional director, region VI, Work Projects Administration, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate; and

Harry Slattery, of South Carolina, to be Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration for a term of 10 years, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

ROUTINE ARMY NOMINATIONS—REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs, I report favorably all Army nominations which were referred to the Committee on the 4th and 8th instants. These reports contain over 1,100 nominations of routine character; and because of the expense of printing the names on the Executive Calendar, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in order to effect a further saving in printing, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD shall not contain the printed names of the officers but shall refer to them as having been nominated by the President on a particular date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank Murphy, of Michigan, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have been requested by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to announce that if he were present he would vote for the confirmation of this nomination; and the Senator from Wisconsin wishes the same statement to be made relative to the nomination following, that of Mr. Jackson to be Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if there is to be no roll call, I wish the RECORD to show that I would vote in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Murphy.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. MEAD] is unavoidably absent today. He desired to have the fact recorded that if he were present, he would vote for the confirmation of this nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the action of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not rise to object; but I think I ought to say to the Senate that the Committee on the Judiciary yesterday adopted a rule which I believe to be a wise one; that is to say, that whenever a nomination is reported to the Senate, favorably or unfavorably, no Member, at least of the Judiciary Committee, will ask for immediate consideration of the nomination, so that all judicial nominations shall go to the Executive Calendar and there remain for at least a day.

This request, as I understand, does not fall within that rule. Therefore, of course, I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to state to the able Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that it has been my policy for several years that unless there is a very great emergency no nomination shall be confirmed without first going to the Executive Calendar and having its status developed.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say that the Senator's example in that behalf, and his stand on that rule, are what converted me to its wisdom.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert H. Jackson, of New York, to be Attorney General of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. As previously stated, my colleague [Mr. MEAD] is unavoidably absent. He desires to have the RECORD show that if present he would vote for the confirmation of Mr. Jackson.

Mr. McNARY. As I have heretofore stated, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has requested me to announce that if he were present he would vote for the confirmation of Mr. Jackson.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the President will be immediately notified.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis Biddle, of Pennsylvania, to be Solicitor General of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified of the confirmation.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alvin J. Wirtz, of Texas, to be Under Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George A. Lingo, of Alaska, to be register of the land office at Anchorage, Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of R. L. MacDougall, of Georgia, to be administrator for Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dean W. Miller, of Idaho, to be administrator for Idaho.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that all the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc, with the exception of the nomination of Jessie B. Searle to be postmaster at Redrock, Okla. The Senators from the State of Oklahoma desire that this nomination be passed over, and I ask that the nomination be passed over, and that all the other nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc, with the exception noted.

That completes the nominations on the Executive Calendar. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will immediately resolve itself into legislative session, and under a previous notice given by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that he desired to address the Senate today, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Texas.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, failure continues to be written across the pathway of repeal.

In 1936 I pointed out that there were at that time 200,000 places for sale of beverage alcohol, as against 177,791 saloons before national prohibition. Today the number of retail outlets is estimated to be over 400,000.

The Federal Alcohol Administrator, W. S. Alexander, tells us in his report for 1939 that, as of June 30, 1939, the inventories of whisky in bond reached an all-time high of approximately 478,000,000 gallons, in comparison with the highest preprohibition inventory of about 278,000,000 gallons in 1914.

One of the most alarming developments of 1939 was the Nation-wide invasion of the highways by drink joints that are luring multitudes of boys and girls in America to ruin.

Observe also the many news items about popular campaigns against roadhouses—many of them licensed outside incorporated towns where no police protection is provided.

Apparently drinking conditions in America have not ceased to provide a lucrative field for the bootlegger, who violates the laws relating to legalized liquor with the same impunity with which he violated the laws prohibiting liquor.

Government officials were locating illicit stills in 1939 at the rate of 200 a week, according to a report by the Federal Alcohol Tax Unit at congressional hearings last year.

A bootleg ring was uncovered within the last year or so in the city of New York involving more than a hundred individuals, among whom were city police and Federal investigators. Prohibition can well say, "Thou canst not say I did it."

This New York City ring was indicted for conspiring to defraud the United States Government of $3,000,000 in liquor taxes. Of the 106 men indicted, 84 received sentences on April 1, 1939.

A little later a smaller gang was found guilty of defrauding the United States Government of two and a half million dollars in taxes through the operation of 11 illicit liquor stills in Dutchess County, N. Y. Earlier in the year 68 men were indicted in up-State New York on the charge of defrauding the United States Government of $5,000,000 in liquor taxes, involving the possession of 28 unregistered stills.

In Ohio an examiner for the State bureau of liquor control was quoted in the newspapers as declaring on January 3, 1939, that a half dozen bootlegging gangs were depriving Cincinnati of $300,000 in liquor taxes. The Federal Alcohol Administrator says that bootlegging activities were depriving the State liquor stores and the State of Ohio itself of a substantial amount of legal revenues, that five other States had appealed to him for aid in repelling similar incursions by bootleg organizations. The Administrator also states in his last annual report that the business of bootlegging tax-paid liquor across State lines is extremely lucrative; that an illicit liquor dealer in the State of Iowa, where liquor sales are handled by the State, was found to be importing $30,000 worth of liquor per month from wet States; that the Kentucky-Tennessee border had five wholesalers whose sales were almost exclusively to bootleggers; that approximately a million gallons of distilled spirits were sold by 8 wet State wholesalers to Mississippi bootleggers during the first 10 months of 1939; that a Maryland concern sold $100,000 worth of liquor per month during the year to North Carolina and Virginia bootleggers.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make an observation for the benefit of the Members of the Senate and my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Texas. The Senator from Texas just mentioned a situation which was the cause of considerable complaint, arising from certain illegal movements of liquor from the States of Tennessee and Kentucky into other States, including Texas. I am sure the Senator from Texas will be very much pleased to know that the situation concerning which such complaint was made has been entirely corrected. My reason for making that statement is that on July 1, last year, when the border wholesalers involved in the transactions complained of, who formerly had been licensed by the tax commissioner of Kentucky, applied for new licenses, the issuance of new licenses was denied by the tax commissioner, and those wholesalers are not now in business. I know the Senator from Texas will be pleased to hear that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am delighted to hear that, Mr. President; but, judging from what has happened in the past, it is my opinion that it will only be a short time until they or others will be back doing the same thing again.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I will say that I hope not. As Governor of Kentucky, I had the pleasure of sitting in at the conference and agreeing to the order which was issued denying the relicensing of those border wholesalers who were, as the Senator said quite correctly, at that time engaged in bootlegging liquor, thus depriving the National Government and the various States of proper taxes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator, and I congratulate him on his vigilance. The nature of the liquor traffic, however, is such that it defies regulation.

Add to these specific cases taken at random the testimony of the director of the Distilled Spirits Institute, Dr. Wesley A. Sturges, at a meeting of the United Restaurant Liquor Dealers of Manhattan in New York City last February as reported by the press. At that time Dr. Sturges said that every legal distiller in the United States has at least 100 illegal competitors, who can market their liquor for $3.25 per gallon less than legal producers. The Bureau of Internal Revenue tells us that there are now in operation 284 legal distillers. On the basis of the statement of Dr. Sturges, these legal distillers have 28,400 illegal competitors.

There is another kind of bootlegging which may be even more demoralizing to our democracy than that illustrated by these examples. It is the regular violations of law by licensed liquor dealers—the beer taverns which sell hard liquor, and the retail outlets which sell to drunkards and minors—even to children of tender years.

Listen to the testimony of Dr. Sturges, on March 17, 1939, when he told the Temporary National Economic Committee what he had heard about young people's cocktail parties. He said that complaints had been coming to him all the time of young people's cocktail parties in hotels and tap-rooms and the like, of sales after hours, of sales to drunks contrary to law, and that the whole thing was bringing an unfavorable reputation to the industry and its composite set-up.

However serious bootlegging may be as operated by rings and gangs, the violation of law by licensed dealers is much more appalling. Reports of such violations constitute some of the most sinister chapters in the tragedy of repeal. Rural communities, as well as city districts, are feeling the impact of the liquor scourge.

Orrin De Mass, chairman of the Michigan license board is quoted as saying, according to the Detroit News of July 7, 1939, that Michigan is advancing toward prohibition because of three groups: First, the low, rotten type of law-violating licensees; second, the men who voted wet and now forget to protect what they fought for, who want to buy their liquor after hours and help the violator in place of helping the State; third, the class whose duty it is to enforce the liquor laws, and who are failing in that duty.

Joseph Lawrence, director of the Bond and Spirits Division of the Department of Justice, said before the Appropriations Committee of the House last April that there appeared to be something about the liquor traffic that continued to make people violate the law regulating it; that in current criminal compromises in connection with the liquor traffic could be observed the names of former bootleggers; that hundreds of regularly operating liquor concerns had also been reported to the Department of Justice for criminal violations since repeal.

In this statement Joseph Lawrence presented a large part of the case against the liquor traffic, the chief source of the existence and the spread of alcoholic drink.

The influence to which he alluded emanates from the subtle, devastating, habit-forming drug named alcohol; destructive of mental, moral, and physical strength; possessing such power over such numbers of mankind as to create a source of enormous profit on the one hand, a mass of human wrecks and weaklings on the other, the former a temptation to illegal gain, the latter an invitation to addictions that impair vital relationships of society, both breeders of corruption and of crime, twin threats to individual well-being and to the education and restraint essential to democracy.

America's crime record is a national disgrace. The most serious phase of the crime situation is the proportion of youthful criminals. So long as the greatest single crime cause—intoxicating liquor—is permitted, protected, and to a great extent promoted by government, crime in this country will continue to be as deadly and as costly as war.

Since repeal a wave of gambling has swept over America which threatens the economic and moral fabric of the Nation. The affinity between liquor and gambling is well known. Drinkers are most easily influenced to gamble, and gamblers, as a rule, are most easily influenced to drink. The effect of the combination of liquor and gambling, especially among the poorer classes, is already most deplorable and rapidly growing worse.

At a time when democracy is being upheld as an ideal before the world it is well to consider the relationship of a protected and promoted liquor traffic to political corruption.

Not only are the material and moral values of the Nation imperiled by a promoted liquor interest, but the very machinery of democracy for the expression of the will of the people is too often dominated by those whose power is derived from a commercialized traffic in intoxicating liquors.

One of the most glaring inconsistencies of our modern American civilization is the promotion of extensive and intensive safety campaigns while the attitude of government is favorable toward the greatest single cause of accidents that cripple and kill. Our people are urged to drive safely, and at the same time the attitude of government toward liquor permits the erection of huge signs along our highways to urge the consumption of something that is responsible for more traffic mishaps than any other single cause. Newspapers and magazines often publish liquor advertisements in the same issue with safety appeals. In one breath radio announcers often urge care in driving, and in the next urge the use of something that makes care unlikely, if not impossible. The expenditure of millions for safer highways, while permitting the advertisement of intoxicants along the highways themselves, can hardly be considered as intelligent education, intelligent engineering, or intelligent enforcement in the interest of safety.

Our Government is struggling with the problem of providing employment for youth. At the same time, an attitude of government favorable to liquor so weakens our basic economic structure that the chances for gainful employment are vastly decreased. Furthermore, an attitude of government favorable to liquor induces many of our young men and women to become addicted to a habit which hinders them in their efforts to obtain and to hold jobs. Employers hesitate to hire young men and women whose drinking habits are certain to destroy their reliability and efficiency.

One of the major concerns of the people of the United States is the problem of national defense. An attitude of government which permits and encourages the expenditure of billions for useless intoxicants impairs the greatest material and moral resource of the Nation, a resource most vital in time of war—its man power. No one, wet or dry, will argue that either the physical or mental well being of men is increased by indulgence in intoxicants. And yet the strength, endurance, intelligence, and alertness of our forces on land and at sea are even more important than the ships they sail, the airplanes they fly, or the guns they fire.

The United Brewers' Industrial Foundation has made great promises to clean house. They established a code of self-regulation and instituted a clean-up campaign, inviting all good citizens to help. Although the campaign has not advanced far enough to prove its value, there is little evidence that it will be successful.

Of a similar pattern was the promotion of citizens' committees by the Distilled Spirits Institute last year to center public opinion on the conduct of the alcoholic-beverage industry and the enforcement of liquor-control laws. The organization of such a committee in Connecticut was reported by the Hartford Courant of December 28, 1938. The same story was carried by the Washington Star of December 21, 1938, from which we learned that the Distilled Spirits Institute had encouraged the movement and had given financial aid to the creation of the citizens' committee in Connecticut. Later news dispatches mention similar activities in Maryland.

Such movements are doomed to fail. There is no modern Hercules to divert the cleansing flood of some modern river Alpheus into the Augean stables of the liquor traffic.

One of the biggest medical and health problems of 1939 was what to do with the increasing number of alcoholic addicts. Alcoholism has been growing at an alarming rate year by year since repeal. Medical authorities are alive to the seriousness of the situation. The medical journals attest this fact.

Dr. Merrill Moore, in the Boston City Hospital, has made a study of the strides of alcoholism over a period of years. That study is described in the New England Journal of Medicine of July 13, 1939. As a result of that study, Dr. Moore came to the conclusion that, along with tuberculosis and syphilis, alcoholism can today be classed among the major problems in public health.

Editorial comments in the same issue of the New England Medical Journal stress the same fact. The editor says that tuberculosis, syphilis, and alcoholism are three of the major problems in public health; that tuberculosis has long received the most attention both from the public-health agencies and the public; that the attacks on syphilis are now being pushed at an accelerated pace, thanks to the work of the United States Public Health Service, the State and local agencies, the newspapers, and the public; but that the treatment of alcoholism as a public-health problem has fallen far behind the other two.

What alcohol needs is another torpedo from the good ship Constitution of the United States.

In my address of a year ago before this body I mentioned the fact that the American Association for the Advancement of Science had set up a research council on alcoholism. This council made an active search in 1939 to find approaches to the problem of alcohol addiction, but no new approaches have been announced.

Many who oppose prohibition as a method urge temperance as a solution of the problem. The nature of beverage alcohol makes impossible such a solution.

Private institutions for cure of addicts are springing up in all localities. Right here in Washington one has opened its doors within the year. What are we doing to arrest this growing evil?

Prevention is the only cure, and prevention means prohibition.

Democracy is a popular theme in these times of stress and strain. Daily we grow increasingly anxious that our country and our form of government may be preserved as it was conceived in 1787. That this may be done we renew our strength by calling again to mind the great purposes of our democracy, among which are the promotion of the general welfare and the preservation of the blessings of liberty. Unless we promote constantly these two purposes our democracy will fail in fact if not in name. In counting the dangers that threaten the fruits of a free life in a free land no danger can be reckoned more formidable than legalization of alcoholic beverages.

How long will men in places of public responsibility ignore the existence of this danger? How long will we, the representatives of the people in Congress assembled, who are charged with the advancement of the general welfare, refuse to assume responsibility?

Our form of government is not a pure democracy where a direct vote of the people is called on all the issues to be settled. It is a democracy in which the people delegate authority to representatives chosen by them at the polls, and no authority delegated is more impelling than that of preserving the general good. How are we using that authority?

The promise by those favoring repeal that there would never be a reestablishment of saloons certainly implied an attitude of government in the interest of sobriety rather than an attitude of government that permits, if it does not actually approve, practices that can only result in a constant increase in the drinking of intoxicants, with all the accompanying evils.

The ultimate solution of the liquor problem is the restoration of an attitude and policy of government that completely withdraws the sanction of Government from the liquor trade.

Meanwhile the Government should withdraw the privilege from the liquor traffic of using inherently legitimate influences and facilities in the promotion of the profits from the trade in habit-forming alcoholic beverages.

The person who wishes to read about intoxicating liquor should be compelled to search for the special information he desires and not be privileged to turn conveniently to newspapers and periodicals devoted to general information and literature.

The person who wishes to purchase intoxicating liquors should be compelled to search for the supply in some place devoted exclusively to the distribution of this dangerous commodity and not be privileged to obtain his supplies in merchandising establishments which deal in inherently legitimate commodities.

The person who wishes to hear about beer, wine, or whisky should be compelled to listen to voices that speak only of intoxicants with facilities used exclusively for that purpose.

The publication of liquor advertisements in newspapers and magazines where they cannot well be ignored by young or old, the radio broadcasting of appeals in the interest of beer and other intoxicants, subjecting millions of women and children to alcoholic beverage salesmanship, and the display of intoxicants among necessities and harmless luxuries in stores frequented by multitudes of women and children all represent a fraud on those who trusted the Government to protect the people instead of promoting liquor by the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

In the language of Bishop Hughes, this is the time for the lifted voice and the sounding trumpet.

One thing is certain:

We cannot continue to pour nearly two billion gallons of alcoholic drink every year into the veins of our democracy and expect it to retain the vitality essential to its protection and its progress. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

PROPOSED LOAN TO FINLAND

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I inquire if the Chair has received a letter from the President in connection with the proposed loan to Finland?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has received such a letter.

Mr. McNARY. Before it is read, then, by the clerk, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	Lucas	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gibson	Lundeen	Slattery
Barbour	Gillette	McKellar	Smathers
Barkley	Glass	McNary	Stewart
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Taft
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Tobey
Burke	Hale	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Truman
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Tydings
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Chandler	Herring	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Danaher	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds
Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 16, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Last month when the Republic of Finland paid the regular installment on her debt to the United States, I directed the Secretary of the Treasury to place the money in a separate account pending such action, if any, as the Congress might desire to take with respect to it.

There is without doubt in the United States a great desire for some action to assist Finland to finance the purchase of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products, not including implements of war. There is at the same time undoubted opposition to the creation of precedents which might lead to large credits to nations in Europe, either belligerents or neutrals. No one desires a return to such a status.

The facts in regard to Finland are just as fully in the possession of every Member of the Congress as they are in the executive branch of the Government. There is no hidden information; and the matter of credits to that Republic is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

This Government will have early occasion to consider a number of applications for loans to citizens and small countries abroad, especially in Scandinavia and South America. That raises the question for the determination of the Congress as to whether my recommendation made to the Congress some months ago, for enlarging the revolving fund in a relatively small sum, for relatively small loans, should be considered. It goes without saying that if the applications for loans can be acted upon favorably by the Congress, this matter will be kept within the realm of our neutrality laws and our neutrality policies.

An extension of credit at this time does not in any way constitute or threaten any so-called involvement in European wars. That much can be taken for granted.

It seems to me that the most reasonable approach would be action by the Congress authorizing an increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank and authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase loans and securities from the Export-Import Bank to enable it to finance exportation of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products, not including implements of war.

It is wholly within the discretion of the Congress to place a ceiling on the amount of such loans. Whether this legislation should include an additional increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank, in order to provide for additional loans to increase our trade with South and Central America, is also within the discretion of the Congress.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

HON. JOHN N. GARNER,
President of the Senate of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the communication will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the letter relates to the foreign relations of the United States. Why should it not go to the Committee on Foreign Relations? Why should it go to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Texas, that measures proposing to increase the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank, which is a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, have, from the very beginning, been considered and acted upon by the Banking and Currency Committee. I happen to be a member of both that committee and the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it seems to me it would be a mistake to break the chain of jurisdiction which the Banking and Currency Committee has always had with respect to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Export-Import Bank, which was created under a law reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

This increase in the revolving fund, if it is authorized, not only involves a loan to Finland or any other foreign country, but, as a matter of fact, the recommendation has already been made that for the general purposes involved in the creation of the Export-Import Bank its revolving fund be increased by seventy-five or one hundred million dollars. Of course that involves not only possible loans to corporations for the benefit of foreign countries but loans to corporations for the benefit of our trade and the exportation of our products; so it seems to me that the reference to the Banking and Currency Committee is the proper reference.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the original act creating the Export-Import Bank authorize that institution to make any loans to governments as such?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall that it does; but heretofore, as the Senator knows, a loan of $25,000,000 was made for the benefit of China. It was made by the Export-Import Bank, but it was made to an American corporation; and there is no intention to depart from that procedure. There is no suggestion in the letter of the President that a direct loan be made by the Government of the United States to the Government of Finland, or any other government.

As a matter of fact, as the Senator knows, there has been discussed in the press and in conferences the question of the wisdom of making a direct loan out of the Treasury of the United States, by the Government of the United States, to the Government of Finland; and I think the consensus of opinion is that it is better to pursue the same policy we have heretofore pursued—that is, to make such loans to American corporations for the purpose of facilitating the exportation of American products, although the loans may be guaranteed by financial institutions in foreign countries, as in the case of China, when the loan was guaranteed by the Bank of China. So, I do not think there is any circumstance or any condition that would justify a change of reference of a bill of this sort, which really only suggests an increase in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank, which, so far as legislation is concerned, was originally a creature of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. WAGNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor. Does the Senator from Texas yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished Senator from Texas. I have no interest in the reference of this letter to either of the committees involved; but the jurisdiction of matters pertaining to foreign relations has always been in the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. I recall that all matters appertaining to the foreign debts and their cancelation or reduction have been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee; and this letter does involve a policy of this country in the matter of assisting other countries in distress. I also realize that the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction over the bill which is the subject matter of the President's letter; namely, a bill increasing the structure of the Export-Import Bank.

Occasionally it occurs here that there is a conflict in jurisdiction, or jurisdictions may run parallel. As I feel deeply in the matter, I was about to suggest that this communication should be referred to both committees. I think it first should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and then I think it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Oregon and to the Senate that several days ago the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] introduced a bill authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan $60,000,000 to Finland. The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as it should have been, I think; and the Committee on Banking and Currency has been called to meet tomorrow to consider not only that bill but any other measures on the same general subject that may be introduced, and, of course, presumably to consider any recommendation which the President may make with regard to the matter.

The letter of the President does not contemplate simply an increase in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank for the purpose of making a loan to Finland, directly or indirectly. It contemplates the possible increase of the fund for general purposes, one of which might be a loan for the benefit of Finland. It is difficult to refer a letter or a bill to two committees. I realize that the letter does involve indirectly, if not directly, a matter of our foreign policy; and yet heretofore, when loans have been made for the indirect benefit of a foreign country, the Foreign Relations Committee has not been invoked as a matter of jurisdiction to determine that matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the observation just made by the distinguished leader is a very sensible one, but I do not think it alters my position in any way whatever. The reference of the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan

[Mr. BROWN] was not brought to the attention of the Senate. Frankly, I did not know that the bill had been introduced until I saw it where I usually find information, in the press; so that matter cannot be used as a precedent at this time.

The letter of the President as read from the desk does involve the policy of this country in dealing not only with Finland but with the other nations to which the President refers. I am merely stating, as one who is interested in good legislation, that it might properly go to the committee of which the Senator from New York is chairman, and then, after a study there, it might be referred to the committee having jurisdiction of matters pertaining to our foreign policy, namely, the Committee on Foreign Relations. I offer the suggestion in the best of faith, without attempting in any way to slight the power or jurisdiction of any committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not actuated in this matter by any pride about committee membership. It is not a technical point I make merely to have the letter referred to a committee of which I happen to be a member. I suggest, however, that the original act creating the Export-Import Bank did not contemplate any direct loans to governments. It contemplated the lending of money to increase the foreign trade of the United States, the importing and the exporting of commodities, and the granting of credits. If the measure proposed goes no further than to provide for loans to private concerns to increase exportations, I have no objection to the matter going to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but there is a difference if it is now proposed to enlarge the authority of the Export-Import Bank whereby it can make loans of Government money. It is idle to talk about it not being Government money; it is Government money; whether it is in my hip pocket or in my front pocket it is all Government money. If it is proposed to enlarge the authority of the Export-Import Bank to make loans to foreign governments, directly, or under such a thinly veneered cover as to make it perfectly apparent that loans are to be made to such governments, I shall move to rerefer the bill, when it comes before us, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, I am not trying to hamper the activities of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The leader on this side, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is a member of both committees, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is a member of both committees, and I cannot see any real objection on their part, from that standpoint, to having the matter referred to either committee; but the Committee on Banking and Currency should stay within its jurisdiction. We all know that this proposal, no matter whether it be handled through the Export-Import Bank or by the Government directly, will affect our foreign relations. It may not affect them unfavorably, and I hope it will not, but certainly in every chancery in the world that cares anything at all about such matters, it will be viewed as a gesture of the United States in taking sides in a war already in existence in foreign countries.

The Committee on Foreign Relations held hearings for 3 or 4 months last spring on the subject of neutrality and the arms-embargo repeal. The Committee on Foreign Relations had the burden of helping draft the neutrality law which the extraordinary session was called to consider, and, with all due respect to the Committee on Banking and Currency, learned as it is in finance and in all of the ramifications of the banking laws—and I understand it has been engaged in a very exhaustive study of the whole banking structure since the last session, and as I recall, we gave them an appropriation in order to encourage their study, and to stimulate their activities—this is not a question of credit, it is a question of foreign policy.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I must first yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, last week a bill was introduced by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] which dealt with a proposed loan to Finland, and authorized the R. F. C. to make such a loan. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency had nothing at all to do with the reference of that particular bill, but the Presiding Officer at the time, I think properly, referred it to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which committee deals with all legislation having to do with the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, just as it has had to do with all the activities of the Export-Import Bank from its very inception.

The loan now proposed is similar to the loans which are now made in some instances by the Export-Import Bank. There is no legal prohibition against a loan to a foreign government, although as a matter of policy loans of that type have not heretofore been made.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to finish, because I think I will be able to satisfy the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to ask the Senator a question on the very point he is now bringing out.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says there is no prohibition against the Export-Import Bank making loans to governments. Could the Export-Import Bank make a loan to the German Government, now in a state of war, and would the Senator favor such a loan?

Mr. WAGNER. That is purely an academic question—

Mr. CONNALLY. It is academic, yes, but the Senator is dealing in abstractions.

Mr. WAGNER. The Export-Import Bank has the authority to help finance American producers and manufacturers in selling American commodities to foreign nationals, and in some instances the loans have been guaranteed by banks of foreign countries which are completely controlled by a foreign government. That is a mere technicality. But I think I will satisfy the Senator in what I propose to say.

So far as the activities of the Export-Import Bank, the limitation upon its jurisdiction, and the amounts in the revolving fund which may be utilized are concerned, that has always been a matter exclusively for study by the Banking and Currency Committee. Therefore I think it is proper that this subject should be considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, because that committee has more experience with that subject matter than has any other committee.

But I rather like the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon that at this time the President's letter be referred both to the Committee on Banking and Currency and to the Committee on Foreign Relations. After the Committee on Banking and Currency shall have concluded its deliberations, whatever it may do—and I am in no position to say what the conclusions of the committee will be with respect to the subject matter embodied in the letter—then it will be for the Senate to decide. There may be a recommendation from the committee—although I cannot speak for the committee—that if a question of foreign policy is involved, to which the Committee on Foreign Relations, of course, has given greater and more expert study than other committees, that committee should also consider the question of foreign-relations policy. Of course, there would be no objection upon my part, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, to the Committee on Foreign Relations also considering the other phase of this question. I should think that would satisfy the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, did the Senator from Maine desire to interrupt?

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will yield, I wanted to point out that, although this message makes reference to loans of money, although it refers to the Export-Import Bank as the agency through which loans have been made and may be made, the real crux of the message and the effect of the message is to raise a question of foreign policy, for the determination, first, of some committee of this body, and then of the body itself. That is the thing about which the people of the United States are talking at this time. I have no question that it was the purpose of the President in transmitting this message to us to present squarely to the Congress of the United States the question as to whether we were or were not to make a loan to Finland. References to the amount of loans and references to the agency are wholly servient and collateral and incidental to the main question of foreign policy. That being so, I agree with the Senator from Texas that the matter referred to should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield in a moment. Of course, the Senator from Maine is responsible for his own deductions and conclusions. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, perhaps I am trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Texas—

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all. It is not my time; it is the time of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I have long been impressed with fundamental objections to some things which have been carried on, and this is merely an occasion to express myself in that regard.

I do not think that any loan should be made to a foreign government or for the benefit of a foreign government by any mere creature of the Congress. I have all respect for and confidence in Mr. Jesse Jones, but I know, as everyone else knows, that the loan of $25,000,000 made by the Export-Import Bank to a corporation for the benefit of China was a loan made to China. China was not only a foreign nation, but it was a belligerent foreign nation, and I do not think that under any circumstances any loan whatsoever to a foreign government or for the benefit of a foreign government should be authorized by Congress through any mere agency such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Export-Import Bank. I think there is a very vital question of foreign policy here involved, and I think it is a question as to which sooner or later the Congress of the United States will be held to very strict accountability by the American people. They do not know why the loan was made to China, or what is meant by increasing the capacity or power of the Export-Import Bank to make loans to foreign governments. They simply interpret such loans as loans made to foreign governments, for when the loans are made for the benefit of foreign governments they are actually made to foreign governments, and the Congress should assume the responsibility.

Though I have every confidence in Mr. Jesse Jones, I am no longer willing to vote to give a single dollar of credit or power to Mr. Jones, or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or the Export-Import Bank, to be used for the benefit of any foreign nation. I may have the utmost sympathy for a certain foreign nation, I may have complete sympathy with the cause for which that nation finds itself for the moment involved in a struggle, but the Congress of the United States cannot permit any mere agency to exercise so vital a power as the one in question without utterly abrogating all the responsibility which the Constitution puts upon the House and the Senate, and which the American people, through the votes of their States, have put upon us here as Members of this body.

Mr. President, I know very well the purposes for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created. It was not created under the present administration. It was created under a former administration. When it was created it was never dreamed that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any of its subsidiaries should ever extend a dime of credit to any foreign government. That was never contemplated. But if such a thing is contemplated, let the Congress say whether the United States wishes to make a foreign loan. Let us not place the decision for such action in the hands of Mr. Jones, or the President of the Export-Import Bank, whoever he may be for the moment, or any other mere agency of the Government. Let the Congress say whether the Government shall make a loan to Finland or whether it shall make a loan to China, and let us state to the American people that we are making loans to these foreign countries.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. My suggestion is to let the Committee on Banking and Currency consider this subject matter, as it has always considered similar subject matters, and, in the event the Committee on Banking and Currency should report favorably a measure authorizing a loan, that measure should then be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for its report before being taken up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, I wish to say that I thoroughly concur in that suggestion. However, I think it is far more important, if loans are to be made to foreign governments, that the Senate should authorize the making of the loans.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senate would, of course, eventually decide whether or not the loan should be authorized.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but if the Senator from New York will excuse me, I wish to say that we have not been doing it that way. We made a loan to China through the Export-Import Bank. We have made loans to certain South American countries. Loans have been made to those countries under the mere guise of aiding them. The loans have been made for their benefit. I do not complain about the making of such a loan if we want to make it; but I say, Mr. President, that, in my humble judgment, the Congress of the United States, in a matter of such grave importance, should assume the full and complete responsibility for the act. As for myself, I do not hesitate to say, whatever respect I have for Mr. Jones and for those associated with him, that I do not want him to make loans to foreign governments under a corporate structure which primarily the Congress set up to aid and to handle the domestic affairs of the United States. It is no reflection on Mr. Jones, but Mr. Jones has not been commissioned by the American people to decide the important questions involved in a loan to Finland, for instance. We all sympathize with Finland, but Finland is simply a foreign country, fighting, let us say, for principles which we hold dear. She is, however, a belligerent, and under international law a loan to Finland would be an unneutral act. Of course, it would be, because the money would buy the things that a nation must have in order to wage war. Under the sound principles of international law, it could not well be differentiated from the act of sending an American battleship to Finland. If we wish to do that, let us do it. But let us stop this miserable program of whipping the devil around the stump, and letting Jesse Jones or anybody else associated with Jesse Jones fix the foreign policy of this Nation. It is not their responsibility. We have a responsibility here, and we have merely found some convenient ways in which to shirk that responsibility.

I apprehend, Mr. President, that the American people will hold us responsible for what we do now with respect to foreign loans. We labored here at an extraordinary session to pass a neutrality act. The very heart of that Neutrality Act is the imposition of restrictions upon credits to foreign governments and restrictions upon American shipping, and the important purpose was to free any foreign nation from the embargoes existing under the old laws so far as arms and munitions were concerned.

If we lift the restrictions on American shipping and lift the restrictions in the Neutrality Act on credit to foreign nations, it is easy to see that we destroy the very heart of that act. We cannot do it with any degree of safety, and there is no need to bring the hard case here which makes a bad law in a court, and makes a bad law in a legislative body. This is a hard case. Everyone sympathizes with Finland. Nearly everyone in the United States sympathizes with China. The hard case is presented, and a bad law follows, and a very fatal step is taken from which we cannot retrace our course.

Break down the restrictions on credit carried in the Neutrality Act in the case of Finland, or any other hard case, and the hour will soon approach, as the war between Germany and France and Great Britain becomes more acute, when the pressure will be doubled and redoubled to break down the restrictions upon credits to France and upon credits to Great Britain. Is there anyone who doubts that? That may not be the thought here in the Senate, but there is no one in the United States who intelligently observes what is going on who for a moment doubts or questions it.

Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the distinguished leader on the other side are entirely proper. It often happens that a matter is properly within the jurisdiction of two committees, which may have two different functions. The Committee on Foreign Relations is not sufficiently prepared, nor is it sufficiently familiar with the history of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and all the amendments to it to enable it to deal with more than the mere question of banking. I grant that properly the matter should be considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and undoubtedly it should then go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. But, Mr. President, the question which to me seems far more important, infinitely more important, is whether it is the sense of the Congress that the decision with respect to the question of loans to foreign governments, foreign governments now engaged in war to which we are not a party, shall be delegated to the Export-Import Bank, or some other subsidiary corporation, whatever we may think of those who manage such institutions. The important question is whether we should delegate to others the grave matter of deciding whether we should make loans to belligerent countries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Kansas. First I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. The bill on the subject now under discussion which is pending before his committee is the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]. I understand there is no other bill on the subject pending before his committee. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the view of the Senator from New York that there should be an agreement by which the bill and the letter from the President should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and then go to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill is now before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no other bill pending. I suggest that the bill and the letter first go to the Committee on Banking and Currency and then to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency reaches any conclusion which embodies an authorization for a loan, then, in view of the fact that the question of foreign policy is not one for consideration by our committee, the matter will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which will, of course, pass upon that question. Thus both committees will consider the proposed legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have before me a copy of the bill before the Banking and Currency Committee. I had understood—no doubt I was in error—from the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky that the bill before the Banking and Currency Committee was in the form of an amendment to the Export-Import Bank Act.

Mr. WAGNER. No; the Senator misunderstood me. The letter—

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about the bill before the committee. We all heard the letter read. We understand that. I am talking about the bill before the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make the loan. The letter proposes that the procedure we have adopted under the law to make loans to foreign nationals through the Export-Import Bank be pursued in this particular case. It would be a matter of study for the Banking and Currency Committee as to which agency should make the loan, if a loan were to be authorized at all. That matter having always been before the Banking and Currency Committee, it ought to be considered by that committee. Then the bill should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because it deals, of course, with the subject of our foreign policy.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know who was responsible for referring the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but I wish to suggest that the bill never had any business going to the Banking and Currency Committee to begin with.

The bill provides:

That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans—

In behalf of agriculture? No. In behalf of some American corporation in Finland? No—to the Republic of Finland—

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] is at least entitled to credit for coming out from behind the bushes and saying exactly what he means—to the Republic of Finland in an aggregate amount not exceeding $60,000,000, for the purpose of enabling the Republic of Finland to finance the purchase of—

Agricultural commodities? It may be that. It may be something else—such articles and materials (whether or not such articles and materials are the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States or any of its territories or possessions) as it deems necessary.

The bill provides funds to be used for the purchase of commodities, whether or not such commodities are produced in the United States. Under the provisions of the bill the Republic of Finland could purchase guns, airplanes, muskets, bayonets, high explosives, poison gas, and flame-throwers. They could buy anything for the purpose of carrying on the war, or for any other purpose.

All such loans shall be made on such terms and conditions as the Federal Loan Administrator shall prescribe.

As suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the bill turns over to the Loan Administrator the transaction of the loan. I make no reflections on Mr. Jones. When Congress says, "We will not do it; we want to sidestep it; we will give you the authority," we cannot blame the Administrator for exercising the authority, because he thinks we mean it when we pass a law and tell him to do something.

There is always pressure on administrators. Mr. Jones' position is somewhat like that of the Banking and Currency Committee. The Banking and Currency Committee is thinking only about banking and currency. It is not thinking about foreign relations, or neutrality, or involvement in a war, or getting in bad with all the other countries of the world, or sending somebody over to Europe, in the final analysis, to fight a war. It is thinking about banking and currency. It is asking, "Is this a good loan or a bad loan?" Of course, Mr. Jones is not responsible.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, the committee has not yet considered the details of the proposed legislation. We have only a proposal.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; but I have heard the chairman of the committee speak on the floor, and I have heard the majority leader speak. We know what is in their minds.

Mr. WAGNER. What is in my mind?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not know how the Senator knows that. I have not committed myself to any sort of loans, direct or indirect.

Mr. CONNALLY. I heard the Senator's explanation of what he thought ought to be done about this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I have not stated what I thought ought to be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the contrary, if the Senator will read a communication which I addressed to the editor of the Washington Star on the first day of this session in response to a telegram from the editor as to the making of a direct loan to Finland, and the editorial in that day's issue of the Washington Star, he will see that neither then nor since have I committed myself on a loan.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not wish to impute to the Senator any sentiments he does not entertain. I am sorry I did not read the articles about which he speaks. I withdraw all I have said in that connection.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are some questions which ought to be considered in regard to the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw all I said about the views of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure the Senator did not hear uttered from my lips a word of approval or disapproval of this particular proposed legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be frank, what I understood from the tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York was that so long as the loan was to be made by the Export-Import Bank to some foreign corporation, or to an American corporation in Finland, although the ultimate benefit of it might go to the Finnish Government, the transaction would be within the proper limits. If I am in error about that, I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WAGNER. I referred to some loans that have been made by the Export-Import Bank under the law as it now exists; and I gave the Senator an illustration of how those loans were made. I made no reference to the proposed loan, because I have not committed myself in any way on any kind of a loan to Finland, nor on the broad legislation here proposed; nor has the committee. I am only one member of the committee. The committee has not as yet considered the question of whether a loan is to be authorized, and, if so, how.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sorry that I left an erroneous impression on the Senator from Texas or any other Senator. I was arguing the point of jurisdiction of the committee. I was not committing myself. I do not know what sort of bill I shall vote for as a member of the committee. We are not responsible for the language of the bill offered by the Senator from Michigan, which provides a direct loan of $60,000,000. I have expressed myself publicly and privately, in terms which I think are not capable of misunderstanding, as to my attitude toward the Government of the United States, as a government, making the sort of loan to another government which may involve us in difficulties with foreign countries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator recognize that under the provisions of the bill a loan by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be a loan by the Government of the United States to Finland?

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be a direct loan to the Government of Finland. For the reasons which I have stated, I do not want to preclude myself from considering the merits of the bill. As to the machinery and terms of the loan and as to the amount, I certainly am free and not committed in any sense.

I will say to the Senator from Texas that I have no idea what kind of bill, if any, may be reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency. If a bill were reported making no reference to foreign loans, but simply increasing the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank for general purposes, I do not know whether or not it would be proper to refer such a bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because, so far as the bill itself would be concerned, it would have nothing to do with foreign relations, although there might be a possibility that the same type of loan could be made under an increase in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank, as has been made heretofore.

I also realize that a loan by the Government of the United States or any of its agencies to or for the benefit of a foreign country might involve us in diplomatic situations which would require the most careful consideration; and for that reason, when I was requested by the editor of the Washington Star, before the present session began, to express my deliberate reactions toward a direct loan to Finland before Congress met, without waiting for Congress to assemble, while the telegram was delayed in its receipt, I certainly took the position that the Government of the United States had no authority under the present law, without some sanction on the part of Congress, to make a direct loan out of the Treasury, in the name of the Government of the United States, to the Government of Finland; and that I thought that in considering all sorts of loans, or the possibility of loans, we must take into consideration the possibility of violating the spirit of our Neutrality Act, as well as the possibility of becoming so committed to such a policy that we might be embarrassed in the future in dealing with applications of other countries for similar loans.

All these matters involve the question of our foreign policy, and to that extent ought to be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. In agreement with the Senator from New York, I will say that if the Committee on Banking and Currency should report a bill under the terms of which our foreign relations were involved I certainly not only would not object to referring, but would be in favor of referring such a bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations. But if the Committee on Banking and Currency should report a bill merely providing for an increase in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank, without reference to foreign loans of any kind, I doubt very much whether it would serve any purpose to refer the bill to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator knew that the purpose of the bill was to make a loan, directly or otherwise, purely for the benefit of a foreign government, would he still feel the same way?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that in requesting an increase of $100,000,000 in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank I think neither Mr. Jones nor the President at that time contemplated such a loan as we are now discussing. As a matter of fact, during the last regular session of Congress, which adjourned early in August, Mr. Jones had asked for a larger increase than we gave him in the revolving fund or the capital stock of the Export-Import Bank. I think we reduced his request by $25,000,000. As I recall, he asked for $100,000,000 and we gave him $75,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The purpose of the $100,000,000 he then asked for was to finance the exportation of American products, just as they had been financed up to that time. I doubt not, even if there were now no war between Russia and Finland, that the Export-Import Bank and the President would be justified in asking for an increase in the capital stock in order that the exportation of American products might be facilitated. However, I have no desire, I will say to the Senator from Texas, to quibble over the jurisdiction of committees. I think this bill was properly referred, because it deals with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, although it authorizes direct loans to Finland. While the President discusses in his letter loans to Finland and possibly loans to other countries, the only recommendation he really makes is an increase in the revolving fund or the capital stock of the Export-Import Bank.

The Committee on Banking and Currency might take action to increase the capital stock of the Export-Import Bank and at the same time put a restriction upon the foreign loans. It can do that; it is within its jurisdiction; and if it did that, of course, there might be no occasion to rerefer the bill to any other committee. But I will say to the Senator that whatever the terms of the bill which may be reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency if it shall report a bill—and I have no assurance that it will report any bill of any sort—which in any way involves our fundamental relations and our diplomatic relations with foreign countries, I not only think that the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to be given an opportunity to consider it but that the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives, the two Houses forming the Congress of the United States, ought to consider most carefully where such a policy might lead us with respect to our neutrality and our commitments that may rise up or may not rise up to plague us in the future.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said if they reported a bill which did so and so that he would be willing that the course suggested be followed; but who is to determine that? Is the Committee on Banking and Currency to determine it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Any Senator here can move to rerefer a bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly the Senator from Texas knows that, but we want an agreement here, if we are going to make any agreement, that will bind both the Banking and Currency Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee. I am not going to be satisfied to refer it to the Banking and Currency Committee, and then if it decides that it wants the Committee on Foreign Relations to consider the matter, in that event to have the bill referred to that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I did not suggest any thing of that sort. I do not think the Committee on Banking and Currency ought to be the judge whether this bill shall go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the point exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I said whatever sort of bill the Committee on Banking and Currency may report to the Senate, then, it would be in order for the bill to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether or not the Banking and Currency Committee favored such action.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think I would be agreeable to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate is in complete control.

Mr. WAGNER. I inquire of the Senator from Texas if that is satisfactory.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not yet.

Mr. REED and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. For the time being, I yield to the Senator from Kansas; and then I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I find myself in complete concurrence with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very much gratified to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. REED. Well, it does not often happen.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I rather doubt my position.

Mr. REED. But I think we are dealing with two sets of circumstances. We sat here in extraordinary session for several weeks, during which the only matter discussed was foreign policy. I happened to be one of the Senators on this side of the aisle who voted for the neutrality bill in the end. By that bill we went a long way in restricting ourselves and our rights under so-called international law. What for? In order to keep us out of possible foreign entanglements. The war in Europe is probably going to spread, so far as any human being can now foresee. I share the universal admiration for Finland and my sympathies are completely with Finland. If there is any country in the world that has established a right to credit it is Finland. But that is not the question. The question is as to our own policy. The Export-Import Bank and the R. F. C. are governmental agencies through which financial transactions are conducted. If we should decide in this body that we were going to make loans to foreign governments, I agree with the Senator from Georgia that we ought to have the frankness and candor and the courage to take the responsibility for ourselves, and that we ought not to resort to the subterfuge of trying to make loans or making loans through a mere fiscal or financial agency of the Government. The thing that underlies this bill is our foreign policy and the relation any action which may be proposed will have to that policy which this body voted for just a few weeks ago. I think the Senator from Texas is correct; that the first question that ought to be settled in connection with this bill is its relation to our foreign policy. Therefore, in my opinion, it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Kansas. He has said that he rarely ever agrees with the Senator from Texas, but I think he really agrees with me oftener than he says so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I see it, there is no real fundamental difference here among us.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad there is not.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have confidence in all our committees; they are all creatures of the Senate; I certainly would be the last Member, in any way, to express any lack of confidence in any of the committees. I believe, as I said, that this bill ought to go first to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will ask the Senator to permit me to proceed a little further. I am going to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not going to permit the Senator to ask unanimous consent until he yields to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I certainly yield to the Senator, if I have the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said he thought this bill ought to have gone originally to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senator has already said that it proposes a direct loan to Finland. Under the present law that cannot be done. He has already said that it would affect or might affect or possibly could affect our foreign relations. That being the case, why should it not have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations to start with?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill proposes an increase in the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all legislation in the first instance creating that Corporation and amending its power has gone to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot loan now directly to any government, and the bill proposes to change the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well; let the Senator proceed. I think I will agree to what he is about to propose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was going to suggest, in the form of a unanimous-consent request, that this bill go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that whatever bill may be reported by that committee shall be then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations before any action is taken on it by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree to the proposition, the bill being now before the Banking and Currency Committee, that when that committee acts the bill shall then be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, my request includes the letter of the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. The letter ought to go to both committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well; let the Senator amend the request and provide that the letter shall go to both committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will restate my unanimous-consent request. The bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan now being before the Banking and Currency Committee, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the President be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and also to the Foreign Relations Committee; and if and when a bill shall be reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency as a result of the President's letter or as the result of its own initiative and deliberations, that before action is taken by the Senate on such bill it be then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. As that was my original proposition, of course, I shall concur in the request now made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to make an inquiry. If I interpret the request accurately, two committees will be considering the same issue at the same time, and one of them will be authorized to make a report before the other may take any action. Is that the meaning of the request?

Mr. BARKLEY. The request is that the letter of the President be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and also to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and if and when the Committee on Banking and Currency reports a bill, either as a result of the letter of the President or upon its own initiative, that the bill then be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations before the Senate shall take it up for action.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. The request contemplates a bill of some kind being reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency and then being referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations at a later stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SELECTION OF STATE EMPLOYEES UNDER JOINT FEDERAL AND STATE PROGRAMS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me invite Senators to transport themselves from foreign scenes of camps and sieges and battles to the United States, where they all will be more or less engaged in political warfare from now until sunset on the 5th day of next November.

Near the end of the first session of the present Congress the Committee on Civil Service approved, with amendments, a bill designed to place under strict civil-service law all State employees engaged in the execution of programs which are jointly financed by the State and Federal Government.

In pursuance of the instructions of the committee, I orally reported that bill to the Senate. I have since prepared a written report, which I now present as follows:

[Senate Rept. No. 1159, 76th Cong., 3d sess.]

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Civil Service, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 282):

The Committee on Civil Service, in pursuance of an order of reference made by the Senate during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, considered S. 282, a bill designed to require those employed by States in connection with cooperative Federal and State programs to be selected solely upon the basis of merit, and reported it on August 3, 1939, with amendments, with the recommendation that it be passed in its amended form. The committee now submits the following written report to accompany the said bill:

The numerous benefits which have accrued to all the people in general and the personnel employed in the service of the Federal Government in particular as a result of the Civil Service Act of 1883 are well known. The principle of selection of Federal employees upon the basis of merit is so generally approved that it is doubtful whether a single member of the Congress would vote for the repeal of the civil-service law. This Congress has twice clearly indicated that it favors the extension of the principles of the Civil Service Act.

The bill to prevent pernicious political activities was passed during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. The President, in the course of observations which he made at the time he approved that bill, referred to the fact that it made applicable to all employees of the Federal Government (with a few exceptions) the rules to which civil-service employees have been subject for many years.

The bill which was passed during the first session of this Congress and which is now known as the Social Security Act amendments of 1939 provides, among other things, that in the execution of the various programs under the act in which the Federal and State Governments cooperate the States must provide for the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis. The pending bill requires the States to select the employees on such programs upon a merit basis as a condition precedent to their receiving Federal funds for use in the carrying out of such programs.

In brief, the bill, in effect, requires the various State governments to use the Federal funds allotted to them for the benefit of all the people instead of for the benefit of a particular political party or faction. If passed, it will effectively protect all State employees, whose salaries or wages are wholly or partially paid with Federal funds, against the nefarious, disgraceful practice of certain State political machines by means of which those employed on cooperative State and Federal projects are compelled to contribute 2 percent or more of their salaries monthly to a political machine for alleged party or factional purposes.

In recent years the principle of Federal and State cooperation in the discharge of governmental functions has been widely extended. Among the more important of the programs prosecuted in this way are those which pertain to Federal aid to highways, social security, public health, agricultural extension service and agricultural experiment stations, public works, the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities, the establishment of public employment agencies, and the maintenance of agricultural colleges. The Federal Government extends its aid to the States in many different forms. In some cases, as, for example, in the provision for old-age assistance, the Federal contribution provides money not only to compensate the personnel necessary for administration but also to enable the States to make the payments to the beneficiaries. In other cases, as, for example, in the unemployment compensation program, the Federal aid is limited to the providing of funds necessary for the administration of the program. Another form of Federal aid is exemplified by the distribution of surplus agricultural commodities. Under this program the Federal Government provides the commodities and the States provide the personnel necessary for the distribution. The exact number of those employed by the States in connection with cooperative State and Federal programs is not, at present, ascertainable. But it is believed that those thus employed are more numerous than all those who are employed directly and exclusively by the Federal Government.

A few of the States select those who are employed on cooperative programs in pursuance of State civil-service systems. It is believed that the great majority of such cooperative employees are entirely destitute of the protection which the merit system of selection supplies. It is believed that few, if any, who are now selected upon the basis of merit under State law are either protected against political coercion or enforced contributions by their superiors or prohibited from participating actively in political management or political campaigns.

The reasons why those employed by the States on cooperative programs should be selected solely upon the basis of merit, be restrained from pernicious political activity, and be protected against the payment of tribute levied upon their salaries by heartless machine politicians are identical with the reasons that impelled the Congress to pass the Hatch bill to improve the Federal service, purify Federal politics, and protect Federal employees.

It is manifestly just as reprehensible for a candidate for a State office to coerce or collect tribute from State highway employees—a part of whose compensation is supplied by the Federal Government—as it would be for a candidate for a Federal office to commit a similar offense against those employed by the Works Progress Administration. The anomaly of Federal workers employed on a cooperative program and compensated from the Federal Treasury being selected in accordance with civil-service laws while State workers, who are employed in connection with the very same program and compensated with funds which come from the same sources, being selected upon a nonmerit basis is intolerable and should be outlawed without delay. To perpetuate this condition would be to approve political skulduggery and encourage governmental inefficiency.

The President, in his message of August 2, 1939, approving the so-called Hatch Act, directed attention to the fact that in behalf of the integrity of Federal elections, the Congress might be warranted in providing restrictions similar to those contained in the Hatch Act for all State employees. The pending bill does not go so far because the committee believed that in attempting to extend the principles of the Civil Service Act to State employees, it would be safer from the standpoint of constitutionality to limit the extension of the act to those State employees who are compensated in whole or in part with Federal funds, or are engaged in connection with cooperative State and Federal programs.

The first section of the bill provides that after 60 days from the date of its enactment no moneys appropriated by the Congress for allocation to the States shall be paid to any State unless it has in operation a State civil-service plan approved by the United States Civil Service Commission.

Section 2 specifies the requirements of an acceptable State civil-service plan. It must provide that those employed by the State in connection with State and Federal cooperative programs be selected solely upon the basis of merit after an open, competitive, fair and practical examination; and must prohibit the promotion of such employees unless the quality of their service has been such as to merit promotion. The plan, while preserving to such employees the right to vote as they please and to privately express their opinions on all political subjects, must prohibit employees from contributing to political funds and from taking an active part in political management or political campaigns. The plan must also contain provisions designed to prevent the political coercion of such employees by their superiors. The State civil-service plan must be administered by a commission, the members of which may not all be affiliated with the same political party. It is specifically provided that nothing in the bill shall be deemed to prohibit States from giving employment preference to veterans similar to that given by the Federal Government.

The United States Civil Service Commission is required to approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in section 2. But the Commission is authorized to withdraw its approval of a State civil-service plan if it finds, after hearing, that the plan has been so changed or is so administered that it does not conform to the provisions of this section. The Commission is required to cause notice to be printed in the Federal Register of any action taken by it in approving or withdrawing its approval of a State plan.

The requirements for civil-service plans are such that several of the States must adopt new legislation in order to bring themselves within the purview of the bill. Since the legislatures in some of the States will not be in session before the bill becomes effective, a method is provided by section 3 to make it possible for the States to continue to receive Federal funds for cooperative programs until their legislatures meet and have an opportunity to enact the necessary legislation.

Section 4 of the bill authorizes the United States Civil Service Commission, upon request from a State civil-service commission, to give examinations to applicants for employment under the civil-service laws of such State, to grade the examination papers of such applicants, and to prepare registers of applicants found to be qualified as a result of such examinations. The purpose of this provision is to save the States the necessity of providing the personnel and facilities necessary for the holding of examinations and the establishment of registers. The States would be required to reimburse the Commission for its expenses incurred in conducting examinations and establishing registers. But for a number of the States, it would probably be more economical to do this than to provide their own personnel and prepare and hold their own examinations. Should the States generally avail themselves of the opportunity thus provided to use the facilities of the United States Civil Service Commission, they would thereby promote uniformity of examinations and diminish the difficulties of the Commission in determining whether State eligibility registers conform to the requirements of the law.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Am I to understand that the bill which the Senator is discussing is to prevent State employees who receive part of their compensation from Federal funds from participating in any way in politics?

Mr. NEELY. They are not prohibited from expressing their political views in private, or from voting or attending political meetings. But they are barred from such political activity as would constitute a violation of what is known as the Hatch law.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia further yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the Senator tell me the number of those who are employed in the Agricultural Departments of the Federal Government and of the States?

Mr. NEELY. In my opinion, no one knows the number of those now employed on Federal and State cooperative programs. There is certainly no available publication that contains this information.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is not the Senator of the opinion that it would be wise for the Secretary of Agriculture to try to ascertain the number employed by the States, so that we might know what it is?

Mr. NEELY. The information would be valuable.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I rise merely in response to what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] said, implying that there is some duty on the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain the number of these employees in the States. I think no such duty rests upon the Secretary of Agriculture. He has not been responsible for the condition in any sense whatever. He has no duty, no responsibility to discharge or perform until Congress acts; and it is quite unfair even to imply, as I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania did not mean to imply, that the Secretary of Agriculture had been remiss in his duties in this regard, because he has not been.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I approve the observations of the Senator from New Mexico and concur in his opinion to the effect that the able Senator from Pennsylvania did not mean to impute any neglect of duty to the eminent Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. How will it be possible to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Act to State employees? Is it not possible to guarantee them their jobs? The only thing that can be done will be to take something away from them.

Mr. NEELY. Nothing will be taken away from them. The bill, if passed, will emancipate them and protect them against involuntary contributions of their services and salaries for political or factional purposes.

The failure of a State to comply with the law will result in the suspension of Federal aid.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The statement of the Senator raises a question in my mind about which I should like to interrogate him for just a moment. I am thinking now about an allocation or grant that is made by the Federal Government to the State of Illinois for the construction of a public highway. Am I to understand that under the bill the Senator proposes the man who uses a shovel in helping in the construction of such a highway would be compelled to pass a civil-service examination before he would be able to participate in such work in Illinois?

Mr. NEELY. All whom the State employs on a program, wholly or in part financed by the Federal Government, would be selected on the basis of merit instead of that of political expediency.

Mr. LUCAS. Who would determine whether or not a ditch digger is going to be employed upon the basis of merit or whether it would be a question of politics?

Mr. NEELY. Eligibility will be determined in the manner specified in the bill just as the eligibility of a janitor of a post office is now determined by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the contractor who is the lowest bidder on a highway contract in Illinois will be compelled, before he can employ anyone, to take what the Civil Service Commission, or whatever commission is set up in the bill, would give to him insofar as common laborers are concerned.

Mr. NEELY. No; in my opinion in such case the law would not apply. In the circumstances specified the employee would not be subject to the demands of a State political machine for contributions to campaign funds or to the orders of such machine to help, hold, or steal an election. Therefore, he would not be subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not talking about stealing an election or setting up the machinery for stealing an election; I am talking only about the common laborer whom I have in mind, who is going to work upon one of these highways. As I understand the Senator's bill, he would be subject to the civil-service rules before he could go out and use a shovel. I disagree with the Senator insofar as his statement about the contractor is concerned, because the Federal Government is going to furnish part of the funds and the State of Illinois is going to furnish a part of the funds, and in Illinois the State does not build all roads. We let contracts to private contractors for the construction of many miles of roads, and the money that goes into a highway may be coming partially from Federal sources and partially from the State of Illinois. I do not see how it is possible to make a distinction simply because a contract is given to a private individual.

Mr. NEELY. In the case in Illinois to which the Senator has referred, does any political machine have the power to compel those employed by the contractor to contribute 2 percent of their salaries to the State political organization?

Mr. LUCAS. No; and no one has any power to do that at any time. If an individual contributes anything in Illinois, he does it voluntarily.

I desire to ask the Senator one other question, as to whether or not the bill, if it should be enacted, would keep an individual who is under the civil service from making a voluntary contribution of 2 percent, or 4 percent, or any other percentage?

Mr. NEELY. The bill does not prohibit voluntary contributions. It is designed to protect employees against involuntary contributions.

Mr. LUCAS. What evidence was there before the committee demonstrating or showing that there were certain political machines coercing and forcing employees to contribute?

Mr. NEELY. No evidence was taken, because the committee manifestly considered it unnecessary to prove self-evident truths.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me ask the Senator one more question, if I may. Was there any direct evidence before the committee which convinced the committee beyond any question of a doubt that a certain political machine in the Senator's State, or in any other State was coercing and intimidating certain State employees, and forcing them to contribute any specific amount toward an election?

Mr. NEELY. As I have just stated, no evidence was taken by the committee. Personally I have quite a collection of affidavits in my office in which the affiants allege all and more than the Senator's question states or implies.

Mr. LUCAS. Before the Senator from Illinois votes upon a bill of this kind, he would like to know what the evidence discloses before the committee of which the Senator is a member, because that is very important to me. It is one thing to make a charge of intimidation and coercion upon the part of individuals who are within a State machine, and it is another thing to bring the proof adduced before the committee; and that is what the Senator from Illinois is interested in.

I think the committee report should show some facts along the line the Senator is discussing before we are compelled to vote upon this bill, and I think the Senator ought to tell us about those facts.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, it is my hope that in the course of the debate that precedes a vote on the bill sufficient evidence will be adduced to convince the Senator from Illinois that political conditions which now exist in certain States should be reformed, and that the desired reformation can be accomplished only by passing the measure now under consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator knows more about what is going on in the State of West Virginia than the Senator from Illinois does, but I do not want the Senator from West Virginia to use an example in his own State and attempt to apply that to every other State in the Union, unless he has the facts to prove it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the innocent do not fear the death penalty provided by the law against murder. The politically pure in heart and conduct, whether in West Virginia or Illinois, will never fear the penalties provided by the pending bill, nor will they ever be compelled to pay them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that there is no one more interested than the Senator from Illinois in clean election and in antagonism against anyone who would intimidate or coerce any individual who is on a State or Federal pay roll for the purpose of obtaining money or votes in order to control an election. What the Senator from Illinois is complaining about is assertions and charges that were made by the Senator from West Virginia. As I understood from the Senator's statement, there was no evidence which was adduced before the committee which would prove the fact that there has been such coercion and intimidation in any part of the United States except from the personal knowledge of the Senator from West Virginia as to what happened in his own State.

If there is no evidence before the committee proving the assertions of intimidation and coercion, I say that is wrong, and that, Mr. President, is what I am complaining about.

In my experience as an attorney at law for a considerable number of years I have never been able to win any lawsuits by categorical assertions and conclusions. I had to produce facts upon which to base those assertions and conclusions. The Senator from West Virginia must show me some facts about these State machines, and I do not care whether they are in his State, whether they are in New York, in Illinois, or in any other State.

I never yet have known of a State, whether it was Democratic or Republican, that did not have some kind of a State machine. I have never seen anyone yet who was running for public office, whether it was the Senator from West Virginia or the Senator from Illinois, who was not anxious to obtain and enlist all of the support that he could get, honorably and honestly, of course. But when it is said that this State or that State throughout the United States, through a corrupt political machine, is intimidating and coercing this individual and that individual to the tune of paying 2 or 4 or 6 percent, or whatever they are compelled to pay, I say that those charges should be proven by competent evidence before a committee; and, so far as I am concerned, until those charges are proven, until the report shows that those charges are true, I cannot support the Senator's bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let us hope that at the proper time there may be submitted sufficient evidence to convince the Senator that he should support the bill.

May I inquire of the able Senator from Illinois whether he voted for the Hatch bill?

Mr. LUCAS. I refer the Senator from West Virginia to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in respect to that matter. Let me say to the Senator from West Virginia that the Senator from Illinois has never followed the path of speculation and conjecture upon fundamental problems of government. The Senator from Illinois attempts to analyze every bill that is before the Senate with the best ability and judgment that God endowed him, and he tries to decide the questions upon the merits as he sees them, and that is exactly the way he will continue to act so long as he is in the United States Senate, politics notwithstanding.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, all that is to the Senator's credit. But will he not state whether he voted for or against the Hatch bill?

Mr. LUCAS. As I said previously, I refer the Senator from West Virginia to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, does the Senator from West Virginia desire me to answer that question?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; I should welcome an answer from the Senator from New Mexico or any other reliable source.

Mr. HATCH. The bill to which the Senator referred was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] is one of the able committee members. Throughout the consideration of that bill the Senator from Illinois not only worked with the committee but he conferred with me more than once, and he earnestly supported the bill, I think, in its entirety from the time it was referred to the committee until it was favorably reported by the committee, and he voted for the measure on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Were any hearings on that bill conducted by the committee?

Mr. HATCH. We took no testimony before the committee. We did not seek to apply the bill to any special state of facts. In fact we kept away from anything of that sort. We discussed the situation merely from the standpoint of principle and legislation—what the law ought to be. We did not try to say that here there has been corruption, or there there has been corruption, but we tried to build a law simply from the standpoint of principle and legislation which should be enacted.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico, to my knowledge, has read the bill to which this report refers.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator consider that it refers to any isolated case or specific situation in a particular State?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. NEELY. Does he not think that it is as general in its nature as the Hatch law and that it applies to every State in the Union?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Since the Senator from Illinois cannot vote for the pending bill without record evidence to support it, can the Senator from New Mexico inform us how the Senator from Illinois was induced to vote for the Hatch bill, on which there were no hearings, and in support of which not a word of evidence was ever recorded?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the only thing I was complaining about—and I will come back to the same thing I said before—is that the Senator asserted that there were corrupt machines which were intimidating and coercing folks who were on the State pay rolls of this country for the payment of 2 percent and other sums into a State political machine, and I merely asked the Senator what facts he had on which to base that assertion. That is all.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator, on his responsibility as a Member of this body, say that he believes that the practice mentioned does not now prevail in any State in the Union?

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, I believe a lot of things occur in this country, but believing something and proving it are two different things. As I said before, I am simply one of those individuals who are realistic enough to wait until information comes forward before they take action.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Several sections of the bill to which the Senator is referring relate specifically to relief. There were ample charges of misuse of funds, and we did have before our committee and made use of the full and complete report of the Sheppard committee, which had assembled the facts and laid them before our committee.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report, as I have read it, be printed in the RECORD without interruption, and that the colloquies which have occurred appear at the conclusion of the report.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, what was that unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asked leave to have the report printed in the RECORD without interruption and to have the colloquy which occurred during the reading of the report appear at the conclusion of the report.

Mr. MINTON. I have no objection to that, Mr. President. I simply do not want any more "Hatch Acts" passed without knowing about the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from West Virginia is granted.

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT CONCERNING BOOK BY STEPHEN RAUSHENBUSH

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, on October 23, 1939, in the course of the debate on the Neutrality Act, in a colloquy with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I made some reference to a book written by Mr. Stephen Raushenbush. My remarks were to the effect that in writing the book use was made of the Munition Committee's records before they were available to the public. I made that statement in good faith in the course of the debate, not having in mind the exact date the book came off the press. Mr. Raushenbush has written me a letter taking exception to that statement, and pointing out wherein I was in error. I suppose he is in possession of the facts. I had no intention of doing any injustice to Mr. Raushenbush. In order that this error may be corrected I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Raushenbush's letter to me be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 5, 1939.

MY DEAR SENATOR MINTON: I am sure you will wish to rectify an injustice which, I feel sure, you did to me unintentionally.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 23, 1939, on page 718, you are reported as having said that I "wrote a book, using the Munitions Committee's records before they were made available to the public."

This is a reflection on my honesty and integrity as a public servant and as an individual. This is of intense importance to me.

Your statement was completely incorrect. The Munitions Committee disbanded in March 1936, after which date no further documents were put into the record. I resigned at that time, with the thanks of the committee members for loyal and hard work. The book to which you refer did not appear until over a year later in May of 1937. No work on it was done while I was with the committee or during the life of the committee. It was not even thought of at the time. Further, not a single document not put into the public record was used in that book or in a later one which appeared in the fall of 1937, or in any other of my writings at any time. The work on the book, War Madness, was not even begun until January 1937, 9 full months after the end of the committee's work.

This is a complete and total denial of the comment made on the floor. Nobody will be able to find any reference in any of my works to information not made public by the Senate committee, nor were there any publications before the Senate committee had finished completing its work.

It may interest you that the book in question was not written for profit. My wife and I wrote it without any such expectation, and although it has sold over 150,000 copies, we have not received a penny. We believed at the time it was important for the public to know the results of that particular investigation.

I realize that my name was an incidental to the debate at the time, and not a major issue. Yet the unwarranted and unjustified reflection on me has gone out to the country. This is a result you doubtless did not intend, and I am sure you believed your informants, whoever they were, were not in error.

I do not in any way to embarrass you, but my name and reputation are my only wealth and you can understand my desire to protect them. I am appealing to your sense of justice. Would it not be possible for you to find some way to withdraw the statement made on the floor, in the heat of debate, or in some other way, counteract the effect?

Very sincerely yours,

STEPHEN RAUSHENBUSH.

Senator SHERMAN MINTON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

PROGRAM OF THE SENATE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to announce for the benefit of the Senate that it is proposed to adjourn until Thursday next, and that on Thursday we shall attempt to call the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills. Also I have in mind one or two bills which we may seek to take up separately after the calendar has been called if they are not passed on the call of the calendar.

INSPECTION OF COAL MINES

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I avail myself of this opportunity to give notice that on Thursday next, after the call of the calendar, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2420, No. 927 on the calendar, which provides for Federal inspection and examination of coal mines which produce coal that is carried in interstate commerce.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, January 18, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 16, 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Joseph M. M. Gray, D. D., Litt. D., chancellor, the American University, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God and Father of us all, whate'er our name or sign, let Thy blessing, we pray Thee, rest upon this Congress now in session, that its discussions may report progress and understanding and its decisions register not the issues of controversy but the achievements of wisdom. Grant, we pray Thee, that all law here enacted may strengthen righteousness, that all restraints imposed may be so directed as to sustain our American democratic ways of life.

Enhance, we pray Thee, the force and meaning of our American tradition with gifts of ever-deepening insight into those qualities of obligation and advantage without which there can be neither genuine liberty nor the just exercise of power.

In this world in time of war we pray Thee to direct our minds of those strategies of domestic accord and international cooperation upon which alone the freedom and security of men everywhere may rest. We pray Thee to grant to the President of these United States and to all in authority the endowment of health and rectitude, and to all the people of our Commonwealth we pray Thou wilt give the benefactions of industry and honor. We ask through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered last night.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Wall Street Journal about the State of Alabama, the North Discovers the South.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent again to extend my remarks and to include therein a speech on the State of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia (from the Committee on Appropriations) reported the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1515), which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIRKSEN reserved all points of order against the bill.

THE LATE HONORABLE NATHAN L. STRONG

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting and proper that we pause for a few moments to pay tribute to a former distinguished Member of this body who has recently been summoned by death. There are those serving here now who will remember Hon. Nathan L. Strong, from the Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania District, which district I now have the honor to represent, and who will be saddened to learn that his long and useful life came to a close on December 14, 1939. He died at his home at Brookville, Pa., at the age of 80 years, after an illness which confined him to his bed for several weeks.

Nathan L. Strong was born at Summerville, Jefferson County, Pa., November 12, 1859, a son of Frederick J. Strong, who was a member of Company G, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, in the Civil War, and Roxy Wolcott (Jacox) Strong, who was a direct descendant of Oliver Wolcott, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In the life of Nathan L. Strong one can see the accomplishments made by an American youth under adverse circumstances. The fact that it was impossible for him to remain in school did not prevent him from fitting himself for the battles of life. At an early age of 18, while employed as a telegraph operator, he spent his evenings and leisure moments studying law, finally being admitted to the bar in the State of Pennsylvania in 1891. Two years after his admittance to the bar he was selected district attorney in his home county of Jefferson, and later engaged in the active practice of law and of promoting the building of a railroad through the district which he represented in Congress.

Mr. Strong was elected to the Sixty-fifth, or "war," Congress, and his record as a Member of this body was so outstanding that his constituency returned him to Congress for eight consecutive terms.

He was an authority on mineral resources of Pennsylvania and a valuable member of the Committee on Mines and Mining. He was also an outstanding member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and it was through his efforts that improvements on the Allegheny River were made, which was a great service to the transportation in the large mining and industrial section of Pennsylvania through which that stream runs.

During his 18 years' service in Congress, Nathan L. Strong took seriously the duties and responsibilities of his office. He was most zealous in behalf of his constituents, giving his best efforts to any and all who appealed to him for aid. He was a loyal and patriotic citizen. Personal gain was always a minor motive in his life. His ambition being the development of the resources of the hills and valleys of his birth that the community might be prosperous; that the owners of land might realize upon the buried treasures; and that men might have employment. He was a man who had visions that became realities.

His was a life well lived, and we mourn his passing. To his sorrowing widow, Mary S. Strong, let us extend our most sincere sympathy, and our hope that she might find consolation in the fact that a faithful servant has gone to his just reward.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Dr. Fosdick.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a Jackson Day speech made by the Honorable Paul V. McNutt.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by Professor Emerson on the Scandinavian neutrals.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein quotations from four books and three magazines. I may say this will exceed the amount permitted, but I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. What is the amount of the estimate?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. It will exceed two pages, but I have an estimate with me from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. It is usual for a Member to state the amount of the estimate.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. It is $202.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKEKELSON]?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is it from—what magazine?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. From Liberty and other magazines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKEKELSON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday of this week, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day and previous special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, in his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means last Thursday, Secretary of State Hull made the following observation:

No evidence of serious injury has been adduced in the assertions and allegations which have been put forward by the opponents and critics of the trade-agreements program.

In answer to this may I say that on various occasions I have called the attention of the House to the damage done the lace industry of Rhode Island and of other States, and because of the assertion of Secretary Hull, I feel impelled to again cite the fact that, owing to the Franco-American trade agreement, the American lace industry today is practically at a standstill. In 1938 the loss in wages to American lace workers because of the trade agreement amounted to over $3,500,000, and the loss for last year will be revealed as even greater.

The reason for this is apparent when the increase in French imports of lace since the Franco-American trade pact went into effect June 15, 1936, is shown.

Here are the figures:

Importations of laces in chief value of silk		Pounds
12 months average, 1932 to 1935	-----	11,721
1936	-----	46,641
1937	-----	151,642
1938	-----	247,623
1939 (10 months only)	-----	275,168

Nineteen hundred and thirty-nine, full year, will total at least 300,000 pounds as compared to 11,721 pounds normal average.

Veilings of rayon and silk

	Pounds
12 months average, 1932 to 1935.....	9,160
1936.....	21,647
1937.....	66,986
1938.....	107,437
1939 (10 months only).....	95,740

Nineteen hundred and thirty-nine, full year, will total over 100,000 pounds as compared to 9,160 pounds normal average.

Cotton laces (of 12 points or finer)

	Pounds
1936 (6 months).....	210,052
1937.....	431,111
1938.....	523,523
1939 (10 months).....	871,529

NOTE.—Prior to June 15, 1936, this item was not segregated in Government reports.

It is interesting to note that, despite the war, importations of this item are increasing materially. The following are importations for the month of October:

	Pounds
1936.....	20,271
1937.....	30,173
1938.....	50,496
1939.....	83,716

The jubilation over this upturn of business for Calais, where most of the French lace-manufacturing industry is located, is evidenced by an article which appeared in the French newspaper LaPhare de Calais last year, which reported as follows:

One hundred and ten millions of francs in lace manufactured in 1938, nine-tenths of which was exported to the United States.

The lace industry, which is one of the principal national industries, has already had for a certain time—that is, since the operation of the Franco-American treaty—a revival which cannot help but accentuate itself and indicates a continued success.

One can assert that the revival in our industry was brought about by the Franco-American treaty.

From what precedes, one can prophesy happy prospects for 1939, lace being everywhere in fashion, and prices permit meeting foreign competition.

Let us rejoice with all our hearts for this revival of a wonderful industry for the benefit of its creators, its workers, and for the entire Calais industry.

Later—to be specific, on June 3, 1939—we find the United States Consul James G. Carter, located at Calais, France, reporting that—

The Calais lace industry credits its current favorable position largely to American demand occasioned by benefits arising from the Franco-American trade agreement, the relatively low value of the franc compared with the dollar, and a distinct fashion trend in favor of lace.

And again, on November 16, 1939, United States Consul James G. Carter is quoted in a press release to this effect:

Calais' lace industry continues to offer a substantial contribution to France's export trade with the United States, notwithstanding the difficulties resulting from the war, according to a report from Consul J. G. Carter, Calais, made public by the Department of Commerce.

While activity in the lace industry has been reduced by more than 60 percent, shipments to the United States have not been affected in the same proportion, the report said. Outside of the American market, sales of French lace have become practically extinct, and France's total lace production may be considered to be destined for the United States.

From the above report it becomes obvious that importations of French laces, despite the war, continue to flood our American market to the detriment of American lace workers.

For 1938 the production of American lace dropped to 40 percent of the pre-trade-pact era. What production has existed in America has been at price levels so low, due to the tremendous influx of French laces into our market, that several American mills have been forced to close their doors, throwing their workers out of employment.

The difficulty of successful competition here with the French lace workers is further revealed in the fact that the American lace-manufacturing industry has been operating on a 40-hour week and with a minimum wage of $13 per week, whereas it is reported that unskilled labor in French lace plants is receiving as low as from 50 to 60 francs per week of 48 hours, or $1.13 to $1.35 per week, about 10 percent of what the unskilled American worker in a lace mill receives.

The wages of skilled workers presents another graphic discrepancy. Following is a table showing the comparative weekly wages of lace workers in France and the United States:

Workers	United States	France
Brass-bobbin winders.....	$21.20	$5.40
Spoolers.....	15.20	4.05
Warpers.....	30.00	5.94
Bobbin presses.....	23.50	5.40
Menders.....	20.00	3.68
Sample girls.....	20.00	3.95
Card punchers.....	30.00	7.23
Machinists.....	35.00	9.20
Dyers (formula).....	50.00	11.18
Twist hands (weavers).....	55.00	18.00

Another factor which has contributed to the utter inability of the American lace industry to compete with France has been the depreciation of the franc.

On the effective date of the agreement—June 15, 1936—the French franc was valued at $0.0653; on October 15, 1936—4 months later—at $0.0466; on May 15, 1938, at $0.0279; on December 13, 1939, at $0.0224.

Article XI of the agreement makes provisions for abrogation or modification of the agreement "in event of a wide variation in the exchange rates." Our Government has taken no action, despite this wide variation.

Furthermore, the first paragraph of the preamble to the French agreement states that because there is stability in fact between the currencies, the agreement has been concluded. Since the World War the French franc has displayed great instability.

Responsible leaders in the American lace manufacturing industry claim that many petitions have been made to the Committee for Reciprocity Information, as well as to the State Department, to invoke article XI of the French treaty, which permits of abrogation or modification "in the event a wide variation in exchange rates occurs."

That the sad plight of the American lace manufacturing industry is directly attributable to the Franco-American treaty and the depreciation in value of the French franc must be obvious from the above facts.

However, our State Department has denied assistance to our American workers, claiming that the drop in production of American lace and its attendant unemployment was due to shifts within the industry and not to the afore-mentioned causes.

As may be noted, the new European war has not relieved this deplorable situation but, in fact, has tended to aggravate it through a further depreciation of French currency.

Therefore, in the light of Secretary Hull's statement that "no evidence of serious injury has been adduced in the assertions and allegations which have been put forward," I again call his attention and the attention of Congress to the damage done our lace industry and feel confident that my colleagues from other parts of the country can bring forward evidences of similar injury to industries which once flourished in their States. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Bloch newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the press reports today that there will be a message from the White House relative to Finnish relief. Can the Speaker give the House any information as to that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer the inquiry to the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it was announced yesterday a letter would be sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, but there was nothing definitely stated that it would be today or tomorrow.

Mr. FISH. Can the majority leader give us any information as to whether it will be presented today?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot.

Mr. FISH. That is all I want to know.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am informed now, and I did not have this information a few minutes ago, that the message or letter will probably be here within an hour.

Mr. FISH. The reason I ask the question is because I was wondering whether the letter will be read. It will not come in as a message to the Congress. It will go to the Speaker. Is it the intention of the Speaker to have it read to the House at that time?

Mr. RAYBURN. I presume that is a matter in the hands of the Speaker. I do not suppose the Speaker will object to having the letter read at the time it is received or before the House adjourns this afternoon.

Mr. FISH. May I inquire of the Speaker if he will state what the procedure will be?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not disposed to state at this time what the procedure will be with reference to a letter from the President of the United States.

EXTRANEUS MATTER IN THE RECORD

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words about printing matter in the RECORD. Every Member of the House appreciates one of the reasons why I have not taken the responsibility of objecting to editorials and magazine articles going into the RECORD. Usually they are put in at another place. However, this custom has grown and grown until I feel it is my duty to take this responsibility and I now state that hereafter I will object to extensions of remarks which include newspaper articles, magazine articles, or the like, for which special permission of the House must be granted to insert on account of the matter of cost. I think it has grown to the point where something must be done.

It has been my hope all along that the Committee on Printing would at some time bring in a rule and that it would take the responsibility of looking after the RECORD in that respect. Of course, I know how hard it is to control and I sympathize with the members of that committee, but I shall object hereafter to any of these extraneous matters going into the RECORD where the cost is more than provided by law. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is referring to material that covers several pages?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; in cases where special consent is required on account of the cost.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I wish to congratulate the majority leader on his statement. I also wish to say that as far as the House members of the Joint Committee on Printing are concerned, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN], and I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is in sympathy with the attitude of the majority leader; but I may say that it has not been the fault of the House members of the Joint Committee on Printing that action has not been taken to keep extraneous matter out of the RECORD and keep it a record of the House and Senate as it should be.

Mr. RAYBURN. I stated that I knew the difficulties the House members of the committee were having.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. In connection with this matter of printing, last year as chairman of the legislative subcommittee of appropriations, I made the suggestion that if the RECORD were to be printed in a little different form we could effect an annual saving of $135,000. Nothing has been done about it up to the present time. While we are talking about savings we might think of that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue through the day, and that the time be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7922, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriation bill now before the Committee for consideration is the bill that carries appropriations for the bureaus and departments and agencies known as the independent establishments, or that are not under any Cabinet officer.

At the outset I wish to express my very deep appreciation of the fine cooperation of the Independent Offices Subcommittee, both the majority and minority members. Hearings were begun on this bill immediately after Thanksgiving and they are printed in two large volumes. I believe you will find that the items were gone into carefully and painstakingly. We hope that we have accomplished something.

I wish to express particularly my appreciation of the fine work of Mr. Duvall, who handled the bill for us this year in the absence of Mr. Orr, the clerk of the committee, who usually handles the bill.

I wish to note particularly at this time with very deep sorrow the absence of the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGLESWORTH]. The gentleman from Massachusetts is one of the serious-minded and able members of the minority party in this House. His presence and application are always a contribution. I am sure the committee and the House will know with great sorrow and concern that he is detained at home on account of the very critical illness of his mother, and I know that all of us send up a prayer for her safety and a speedy recovery.

The Budget estimates for the independent offices for the next fiscal year total $1,194,704,473. The bill comes to you with reductions under Budget estimates aggregating $94,492,166. [Applause.] The bill as it comes to you is $16,233,625 below what was appropriated during the current fiscal year for the same activities.

We believe these reductions have been made and can be made without seriously crippling any useful and needed Government activity. I wish at the outset to express the very earnest hope that the Members of the House will assist the committee in maintaining these reductions, even though in some instances we may have to support reductions that have been made in programs and activities in which we are personally and as Members of Congress greatly interested.

I want to go through the report which has been filed—and it is available to members of the committee if you wish to call for it—to call attention to a few of the points which I believe will be of particular interest to the Committee, and then submit to such questions as the Committee may wish to ask.

In the first place, I wish to speak of the question of administrative promotions. This being the first general appropriation bill, it is appropriate to discuss that briefly at this point. Last year the Committee on Appropriations asked the Bureau of the Budget to conduct a survey and study of the custom and procedure in the making of administrative promotions in the several agencies and bureaus of the Government, believing there was a great lack of uniformity. In some bureaus and agencies administrative promotions have been made fairly regularly, and in others there had been practically none. However, the Bureau of the Budget has not been able to complete its survey and study of that problem. It will be several months before we get the final report.

In the meantime, however, there was included in the Budget for 1941, and there run through all the appropriation bills, certain items of new money for administrative promotions, aggregating in the whole Budget something over $3,000,000, this being in addition to the approximately $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 estimated to become available from lapsed money and savings; so that the total money to be available in the next fiscal year would be something like six or seven million dollars for the administrative promotions if the recommendations of the Budget were to be followed.

In laying out this program the Budget used a formula seeking to provide more uniformity in making administrative promotions. The formula provided that those employees in grades where the salary was less than $3,200 per year, and who had not had a promotion since June 30, 1938, and whose efficiency ratings made them eligible for promotion, should have a one-step promotion, and that those whose salaries were in grades where the minimum salary was $3,200 and above, and who had eligible efficiency ratings, and had not had an increase since June 30, 1936, might have a one-step promotion.

The Appropriations Committee has approved this general plan with the exception that it recommends promotions be made to eligible employees in grades having a minimum salary of $3,200 or above, who, on June 30, 1940, have not had a promotion since June 30, 1935, and to those eligible receiving less than $3,200 per annum who have not received a promotion since June 30, 1937. This policy will govern all the regular bills as they come to the House. We adopt the formula for making administrative promotions of the Bureau of the Budget, but make it a 3- and 5-year limit rather than a 2- and 4-year limit. We take out the new money added for administrative promotions, which is the $3,000,000, but permit the bureaus and agencies to utilize lapsed money or savings for the making of administrative promotions within the formula set out, provided that these lapses and these savings may not be used in excess of the estimated lapses and savings reported by the Bureau of the Budget. If this sounds complicated, I am sorry, but we cannot state it much more simply. In ordinary parlance it simply means that the question of making administrative promotions in the departments will continue in the next fiscal year practically as it has existed in this existing fiscal year with the exception that they cannot pile up unnecessary and unusual deficits for the purpose of making raises and they must make the raises in accordance with this formula. So if anyone states that the Congress hereby is stopping all administrative promotions, that is not accurate, because we have not done any such thing. We are still leaving it to the departments to make promotions if they have the money to do so in accordance with this formula, and by the time the next regular bills come to the House we will have a definite report from the Bureau of the Budget and, perhaps, be able to make more definite recommendations in this regard.

Another matter that appears in all of the bills is an item for personnel management. There was set up a council of personnel administration. It has been in existence for about a year. It was initiated under an Executive order issued by the President, and it seeks to coordinate personnel management and supervision in the different agencies and bureaus, and bring about a more nearly uniform, and a more nearly definite program. Estimates were sent to Congress last year for increased personnel in many of the agencies on account of this personnel management program and they were not reported by the committee, and were not contained in the bill. Again, the committee has deleted from the bills something like $750,000 that runs through all of these measures on account of this personnel management program, leaving it to the agencies and bureaus to go ahead with their activity in that regard wherever they may be able to use their own establishment or their own personnel for that purpose. The committee did not feel, at this time, it could justify embarking upon a new program of this kind that calls for a substantial increase in personnel in many of these departments that are already very extensively manned.

Going on through the bill and touching one or two instances where changes have been made in Budget estimates, we come to the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Their program is set out very fully in the report, on pages 6 and 7, if you are interested in reading it. They are doing a very splendid job. The committee has given them the Budget estimate, with the exception that it reduced the amount for civilian pilot training from $6,000,000 to $5,000,000. This still gives them $1,000,000 more next year than they had this year, and we felt, under the circumstances presented to our committee, that perhaps the program would not move as fast as the Civil Aeronautics Authority had counted on and that $5,000,000 would, perhaps, be ample to carry it on through the next fiscal year.

The Federal Works Agency is one of the new outfits set up under the reorganization bill. The committee made a change in the office of the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency respecting its appropriation by undertaking to put it on the same basis that the Budget had put the office of Federal Loan Agency.

In the case of the Federal Loan Agency the Bureau of the Budget required the Administrator of the Federal Loan Agency, who is Mr. Jesse Jones, as we all know, to draw his personnel or the funds with which to employ the personnel in his office from the agencies that come under his management and control.

In the case of the Federal Works Agency the Bureau of the Budget undertook to appropriate new funds over and above the amount set out for the component units under that agency. The Appropriations Committee felt that by economy and efficiency and good business judgment and management, such as we feel confident Mr. Carmody can put into that organization, he certainly will be able to draw his personnel and the funds necessary to finance his own administrative force from the large units and large agencies that come under him for administration. We provided therefore that the $200,000 for his own administrative staff should be taken from the agencies coming under the Federal Works Administration, which are the United States Housing Authority, the Public Roads Administration, the Public Buildings Administration, and Public Works Administration.

On page 17 of the report mention is made of the building construction program for the District of Columbia. No estimates were sent by the Bureau of the Budget to the Committee for any new public construction outside of the District of Columbia. There are funds there for post-office buildings and for Federal buildings in accordance with our 3-year program inaugurated several years ago. There is carried in this bill the yearly part of that appropriation to carry on that program, but no new post-office building program was sent to the committee, notwithstanding the fact there are many places in the country where new construction might easily be justified on account of lack of space and high rents being paid by the Government.

However, there was sent to us a building-construction program for the District of Columbia. It contemplates an aggregate cost of $25,820,000 and calls for an expenditure in this next fiscal year of $6,970,000. It provides for a General Accounting Office, site and building; a Federal office building, site and building; Bureau of Economics, site and building; a west-central heating plant; State Department, annex building site; and an item of $1,000,000 for acquisition of property in the District of Columbia. The Committee on Appropriations felt that in the circumstances such as exist at the present time, when all of us are pledged to try to avoid unnecessary outlays, certainly there would be no justification, or it would be at least hard to justify embarking on a large public-construction program in the District of Columbia, so those items have been left out of the bill.

In the matter of public roads, the committee reported the full authorization and full Budget estimate for the Federal-aid highway system of $100,000,000. It reported the full Budget estimate and authorization for secondary or feeder roads of $15,000,000. It reported the Budget estimate for public-land highway construction of $1,000,000, which is $1,000,000 less than the authorization.

On the matter of grade crossings, the committee reduced the Budget estimate of $30,000,000 to $25,000,000, a reduction of $5,000,000. We did that, believing that there is no logical reason now why the grade-crossings program should not be curtailed and fitted into the general program of highway construction; and in that connection I call attention to the fact that since the so-called emergency has existed public grade-crossing projects have received $90,000,000 in regular appropriation bills, and that project received $200,000,000 in the 1935 Relief Act; also $33,000,000 of N. R. A. funds, making a total of $323,000,000 that this grade-crossing program has received up to the present time, not counting the $25,000,000 carried in this bill. That is an auspicious program. Of course, it is something in which many of use have been vitally interested, and it has reduced many highway hazards, but in the circumstances the committee felt that some reduction in the interest of slowing up this part of the program perhaps could be justified.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice the Budget estimates have been eliminated in this bill for the National Resources Planning Board. Can the gentleman give us the reason for that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Under the Executive office of the President, the reorganization bill placed, among other things, the National Resources Planning Board and the Office of Government Reports. The Office of Government Reports was formerly known as the National Emergency Council, its name being changed by reorganization plan No. II. The Budget estimate for each of these agencies sent to the committee was a little more than $1,000,000, and in each instance slightly in excess of the sum available to them for the current fiscal year. The items were left out of this bill and are not included for the reason that there is no basic law on which to justify the appropriation. They are not authorized by law, and the committee has no right to bring an appropriation to the House which is not authorized by law. Until there is some authorization for them the Committee on Appropriations is powerless to recommend appropriations to the House.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it expected that some allocation will be made out of other funds for the continuation of these agencies?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot answer that, because I do not know.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. In the last session of Congress a bill was introduced to make permanent the National Resources Commission or Board, which name was later changed to the National Resources Planning Board by Executive order. That bill came to the committee of which I am chairman, but I was advised later by the Bureau of the Budget that such legislation was not necessary; that it was already authorized by law. So the matter was dropped entirely, and no consideration given to the legislation. I ask if the gentleman from Virginia is positive that there is no authorization of law under which the President by Executive order can set up such an organization?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I could not find any parliamentary who says that there is, and personally I do not think it is authorized by law. Some of these functions, perhaps, might be performed by the Executive office if they were taken in as a part of the Executive offices set-up, but as a separate agency and appropriated for as a separate agency I will say to the gentleman we have not been able to find any parliamentary opinion that has justified it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I asked the question solely for the reason that I know we are going to have a recommendation, in view of the action of your committee, for legislation setting up such an agency, and I wanted to get the gentleman's opinion.

I know there is considerable opposition to the creation of such a permanent organization. Personally, I am inclined to feel much good could be accomplished by a proper organization planning for the future. For instance, if we had arranged years ago plans for various public-works projects, State and National, and had the plans and specifications all worked out when the depression arrived, when the Government came to the rescue of the unemployed, we could have put into operation the construction of what we felt were the best projects rather than by simply giving men employment on projects that had no permanent benefits.

Whether or not the Congress would make such an organization permanent by legislation I would not attempt to say, as I had some experience with two committees, being chairman of both the Committee on Expenditures and the Select Committee on Reorganization; and if the sentiment displayed at the time is an indication of what might happen in the future, there is serious doubt in my mind a bill would be favorably reported. I understand the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Committee on Public Lands have both considered the subject but no legislation was ever reported to the House.

Now, if the gentleman will permit me to refer to another matter about which he spoke—the building program in the District of Columbia: The gentleman knows that I am not in favor of some of the large appropriations for the beautiful marble and limestone structures that have been set up in the District of Columbia, but you have eliminated in this bill the item for the General Accounting Office. It so happens that I am in direct contact with that office almost daily. Their records are scattered in 15 or 20 buildings in the District of Columbia. I want to tell the gentleman from Virginia and the House if we ever have a real fire where those records are stored the $9,000,000 that you save in the construction of a building for the General Accounting Office in this bill will be a mere trifle as compared with what the Government of the United States will lose if those records are destroyed. If those records in the possession of the General Accounting Office are lost, it will cost the United States Government hundreds of millions of dollars, rather than $9,000,000. You will recall you had a fire at the post office 2 or 3 years ago. It was among files in the hall belonging to the General Accounting Office. Some of them affected the Minnesota fire claims. If what I heard is true, the loss of those records cost plenty of money. While I am for economy, I think this Congress should certainly provide some kind of a building, if it is only a fireproof concrete warehouse costing $1,000,000, in which to house the valuable records of the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office records can never go into The Archives, as they are used to settle claims—some of the claims a hundred years old.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am quite in sympathy with what the gentleman says, if we had the money or there was any way to get it. I would be willing to consider very seriously the construction of a building of the type the gentleman suggests. I think, supplementing The National Archives, we should have in Washington, not in the metropolitan center but somewhere near the departmental center of Washington, a large utilitarian type of fireproof building, where thousands and thousands of these files in the various Government departments, which cannot be destroyed but yet which are not of sufficient importance to go through the routine of putting them into The National Archives to be preserved, may be housed. They should be taken out of these departments, where we are paying $1 or $1.50 a square foot rent for file cases, and put them under a small file force for the use of the Government in such a building. I think that expenditure might be justified, if we get to the point where we can spare money for that purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I see by the hearings where the National Archivist agreed with the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], upon that very subject. For 10 years I have had a bill before the Congress to build a warehouse for Government files. I had the fight almost won by getting money through the P. W. A., but there was an argument, in which the National Archivist—whose only thought is expansion—joined, with the result that they finally put in The Archives Building three and one-half million dollars' worth of additional stacks that were not necessary. The money could have been used for the construction of a storage building that he now says and you now say is necessary. I notice further that the Archivist says only 20 percent of the space he has in his building is occupied with records now. If he had kept his mouth out of that at that time, we would have had the storage building now by using the three and a half million dollars that they put into stacks. [Applause and laughter.] A storage building is for active files which are needed from time to time and which cannot be transferred to The Archives or destroyed; but by placing them and the file clerks in the warehouse, valuable space can be assigned for personnel. I am trying to save the Government money and save valuable records from being destroyed by fire. Your committee handles the appropriation for the General Accounting Office. The officials will confirm what I say.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman's plan to build such a building, but I think the difficulty at the time was that the impression got around that the building which the gentleman wanted to build at that time was to be in lieu and instead of The National Archives project.

Mr. COCHRAN. That might be true, but I advocated it long before The National Archives Building was started. The Senator from Utah, Mr. Smoot, is the one responsible for The Archives Building. It serves a good purpose, but we do not have to go crazy on the subject, and that is what I contend we have been doing.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. I was under the impression that there was something said by the gentleman on the floor a year ago that the Census Building, which we are now constructing, after the census is concluded, is going to be used for the purpose of storing these records. Does the gentleman recall anything about that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I probably said something like that—that it might be used for something like that, or for housing some of these other agencies where we are paying very high rent. I do not think the Government can afford to pay $1 or $1.50 a square foot to house filing cases. I do not think we should even take the valuable space of the new Census Building and put filing cases in there. We ought to put some of these agencies there which we are renting expensive space to house; but there should be such a building outside, on cheap land, where it would have good fire protection, that would not cost a lot of money.

Mr. ENGEL. I was under the impression that when the Census Building was completed it was to be that type of building.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. It is a Federal office building.

Now, if there are no other questions on what I have mentioned, I would like to talk about the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to go back to the National Resources Planning Board item. Do I understand that has been completely eliminated?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is no authority in law for it, I will say to the gentleman. We had no legal authorization upon which to base an appropriation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But there have been appropriations made?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; not appropriations made in a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Why does it appear in this bill? Has it previously appeared in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. Heretofore it has been provided for in emergency appropriation or relief acts. The Reorganization Act put the National Resources Planning Board under the executive offices.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. So that is the reason why for the first time it appears in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does not the gentleman feel that it is important to have somebody, some place, that can give an over-all view of a lot of the things we are trying to do, and be of some assistance in interpreting those efforts in the light of the general public interest and the general needs of the Nation? Is not that function very important?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Undoubtedly it is an important function, but I would not care to commit myself on everything that is done by the Resources Planning Board. The fact remains, however, that the committee, regardless of how it may have felt about the merits or demerits of the agency, could not bring in an appropriation without authority of law, for it would be subject to a point of order, and there is every reason to believe that such point of order would have been made.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has referred to the item carrying appropriations for the new post-office buildings under the 3-year plan. Is it not true that under this plan we would only be provided with one new post office in each congressional district every 3 years?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Two in the 3-year period where the district could qualify as needing a new building on account of post-office receipts and space requirements.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman from Virginia that I do not believe that is fair. In my own district, for instance, there are 17 cities eligible for new post-office buildings. Under this plan, it would take 35 years before the current needs are met. Would an amendment be in order to increase that appropriation in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It would not for this reason: Authorizations for new public construction is the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Heretofore, by acquiescence, we have carried along in the appropriation bill these emergency-program amounts, but it was done with the consent of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has been done also because no Member of the House felt inclined to make a point of order against the item. I will say to the gentleman it is not the work of the committee. While I am not indicating to him that I will be for it, my personal idea is that I do not feel there should be a building program this year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel that Members of Congress know more about the needs of their respective districts than the Budget Director here in Washington? And should not the Members of Congress write the amounts that should be appropriated for this purpose than being directed by some department here in Washington?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That brings up the question, I may say to the gentleman from Montana, of going back to the old days when they wrote public-buildings bills on the floor of the House, an era that I do not believe the gentleman would want to go back to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was not here then.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. An era when traveling through the country in sparsely settled areas one would suddenly turn a corner and come face to face with a monumental stone building—I mean a monument to the influence and prestige of some Congressman or Senator. I do not believe we would want to go back to that. There are undoubtedly places in the country where there is vital need for public-building construction, where the building can be justified as a business proposition because of space requirements and rent being paid. I am not debating that; I am simply saying that except and until they send some program of that kind here, certainly no Member of Congress is going to justify more monumental buildings for the District of Columbia if the condition is such that we cannot meet those requirements in the districts.

What I hope to see in Washington is some reduction in agencies and in space requirements; and I believe we will come nearer getting that if it is a little bit harder to get space than if we are willing to put up monumental buildings. If we put up the buildings, we surely will find something to put in them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk for a few moments about the appropriations for the Veterans' Administration, which is, of course, the largest item in the independent offices appropriation bill, and is even larger this year than it was in the last year.

The amount included in the bill is $580,180,544, and I have here a chart that I will insert at this point which outlines the amounts requested under the various appropriations.

Veterans' Administration, fiscal year 1941

Salaries and expenses:

Hospital and domiciliary facilities.....	2,165,000
Total.....	580,180,544

It can readily be seen that the major portion of the Veterans' Administration budget is for direct payment to the veterans in the form of compensation and insurance. In connection with actual expenditures during the fiscal year 1939 it is interesting to note that 83.14 percent was for direct benefits, 14.17 percent covered indirect benefits to veterans, and only 2.69 percent was expended for administrative costs. It may be of further interest to note that there has been disbursed for pensions and compensations since the year 1790 through June 30, 1939, a total of $13,702,692,413.96.

The chart to which I am now pointing, showing Army and Navy pensions, I will place in the RECORD in tabular form. It is impossible to put it in the RECORD in this graphic form, but I will put it in the form of a table.

This chart shows the number of veterans, dependents, and disbursements in each group in all of the different wars. For instance, you will observe that we still have 1 pensioner from the War of 1812, and we will have 135 from the Mexican War. We will have 6,040 from the Indian wars. The Civil War veterans, of course, are passing away and the numbers and amounts are less. The Spanish-American War has not yet reached its peak in cost, but it has just about leveled off, and before a great while there will be a reduction in that.

Then we have the pensions for the Regular Establishments and World War service-connected compensation. There has been a slight increase in this, but both numbers and amounts should about be at the peak, because it is very difficult now to establish new service-connected disabilities if they have not been established up to this time.

Service-connected pensions have dropped from what they were in pre-economy bill days, but still the item is increasing.

As a matter of interest, I will insert a statement showing the total expenditures for pension and compensation, by wars, through June 30, 1939:

Total expenditures for pension and compensation through June 30, 1939

World War.....	3,838,831,444.82
Total.....	13,702,692,413.96

The grand total for pensions and compensation for the next fiscal year is $442,833,000. In addition to that is the matter of $13,659,304, which is included in this bill but it is really a deficiency made necessary because of added benefits and privileges authorized in the last Congress for World War veterans. This makes a grand total in the bill for this purpose of $456,492,304.

The administrative expenses of the Veterans' Administration for the next fiscal year is $101,403,240, broken down as you see it above. There is printing and binding, $120,000; Army and Navy pensions, $456,492,304; military and naval insurance, $20,000,000; and hospital and domiciliary facilities, $2,165,000.

For military and naval insurance the bill includes $20,000,000, a reduction of $6,791,000 when compared with the appropriation granted for 1940. This appropriation covers payments arising from contracts with World War veterans for what was known as war-risk insurance. The payments now being made are those to veterans who suffered a permanent and total disability as the result of war service or during the post-war period in which they carried this type of insurance; payments to beneficiaries of soldiers who died in service or during the post-war period in which this type of insurance was in force; and payments to the Government life-insurance trust fund to meet obligations sustained by that fund incident to the extra hazards of military or naval service of persons so engaged while protected by Government life policies.

This is our contribution to the World War risk policies. Under these World War risk policies the Government has paid to the veterans approximately $2,000,000,000, and the veterans contributed something over $450,000,000. It is often said that the veterans have paid for all the insurance they got. I am heartily in favor of the insurance which they received; but let us remember the fact that that is not an accurate statement. They paid less than 25 percent of the cost of the war-risk insurance. The war-risk insurance should not be confused with Government life insurance, which is self-sustaining. However, this appropriation is for the old war-risk insurance, for which we have spent $2,000,000,000, and 75 percent of that has been paid out of the Public Treasury.

I will insert in the RECORD a chart showing a break-down of disbursements for this purpose during the fiscal years 1939, 1940, and 1941.

HOSPITAL AND DOMICILIARY FACILITIES

There has been included under this appropriation heading the amount of $2,165,000. Projects involving expenditure under this appropriation require the recommendation of the Federal Board of Hospitalization and the approval of the President, thus affording the essential coordination of Federal expenditures for these purposes necessary to secure maximum budgetary control of appropriated funds. The contemplated projects have been divided into two groups, namely, major reconditioning, replacements, and new construction involving no additional beds, $1,515,000; and construction providing additional beds, $650,000.

The second group, totaling $650,000, represents projects through which a total of 298 additional beds for neuropsychiatric patients will be obtained.

I shall insert for your information a detailed statement showing a comparison of beds available for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940, and the estimated number available for 1941, divided as to types.

There is included under the first appropriation, "Salaries and expenses," the amount of $101,403,240, which covers all expenses of administration, including salaries and operating expenses of the central office in Washington, 45 hospitals, 39 combined facilities, 13 regional offices, 7 homes, and 2 supply depots; the cost of travel and examination of beneficiaries; payment of burial expenses and reimbursement for such expenses; repairs and alterations to hospitals, homes, and other property in which the Veterans' Administration facilities are housed; payments to contract facilities wherein Veterans' Administration patients are hospitalized; reimbursement to States at the statutory rate for those veterans cared for in State soldiers' homes who are eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities; in general, all items of expense which are not direct monetary benefits to the veterans. By reference to the chart which I inserted above you will note that the various classifications of expenditure under this appropriation are itemized. This amount represents an increase of $4,403,240 when compared with the appropriation of $97,000,000 granted for the present fiscal year.

I have a small chart here, which I will also insert in the RECORD, showing the break-down for this and accounting for the increase of $4,000,000-plus:

It is entirely accounted for by the added facilities and services given the veterans. We will bring in during the next fiscal year 1,935 additional beds in these Government facilities. Those beds are almost exclusively for the neuropsychiatric veterans. We have not for a number of years built general hospital facilities, except in a few instances where studies show an absolute need, because that type of case has not required new construction, due to the fact we are able to use Public Health hospitals and Army and Navy hospitals for any ordinary ailments or surgical or medical treatments, but for the neuropsychiatric cases, the mental cases, we have and are continuing to engage in new construction to provide additional facilities, because that type of case has not reached its peak. We have to employ 965 additional people to take care of these 1,935 beds, such as physicians, nurses, orderlies, attendants, and all the other services connected therewith. Here is a break-down for each of the units making up this $4,403,240, which is the increase in the administrative expenses of the Veterans' Administration.

Permit me to say that if there had been added to this $97,000,000 a pro rata increase in the cost of administrative expenses on account of these 1,935 additional beds, the sum instead of being $4,403,240 would have probably been in excess of $6,000,000, so that probably 20 or 25 percent, maybe 30 percent of this increased cost has been absorbed by the Veterans' Administration in their very splendid and very efficient management and handling of the affairs of the veterans of the United States.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. Before the gentleman finishes with the Veterans' Administration, I would like to have him comment on the action of the Veterans' Administration regarding the deduction that is made from the pay of attendants and low-grade employees for quarters, clothing, laundry, and so forth.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. For years the service organizations have called the attention of the committee to the situation existing among orderlies, attendants, and the lower-paid employees in the veteran facilities and in the Administration homes. In my judgment, their basic pay is too small to begin with. I would like to see their pay increased. The care of a mentally sick veteran is an extremely important duty and it is very difficult to get the right type of people and hold them in those positions and pay them less than a hundred dollars a month. During these depression years just passed it has been easier than at other times, but not only have they been a poorly paid group of people but it has been the custom of the Veterans' Administration to deduct the matter of allowance for quarters, laundry, and subsistence of approximately $30 or $35 a month, and they deduct that in many cases whether the orderly actually lived on the station and had the benefit of quarters, laundry, and subsistence or not if it was so provided in his contract of employment. The Veterans' Administration did it upon the theory that back in the earlier days when they built Veterans' Administration facilities they put up barracks and constructed quarters for this type of personnel, and having gone to that expense of building quarters the Veterans' Administration employee should live and take the benefit of them; therefore they made these deductions; but as the number has increased and we quit building barracks and quarters for orderlies and attendants and, as has developed in many cases, they do not live upon the station, that situation has become aggravated and very acute. I am very glad to say, without going into more voluminous detail, that we have in the hearings a very definite, positive statement from General Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, that beginning with the next fiscal year, and before that if it can be put into operation, it will discontinue the custom of making these arbitrary deductions from attendants and orderlies and deduct only in cases where it is necessary that these employees actually live upon the station or where they receive the benefit of these allowances.

Mr. ENGEL. The House, by resolution, instructed the War Veterans Committee to visit the hospitals in the various States. Under that resolution I personally visited Camp Custer. I obtained from the superintendent at Camp Custer a statement showing for each employee the amount of salary he received, the amount of deduction made, and the number of dependents. At Camp Custer I found that after making those deductions sometimes they had as low as $60 a month to support as many as six dependents, and I am certainly pleased to see this adjustment made.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The figure the gentleman gave covering the cost of hospital and domiciliary facilities brings to my attention the fact that during the present year the Veterans' Administration has hospitalized hundreds of employees of other agencies of the Federal Government. I wondered whether or not the committee took into consideration the necessity of charging these departments of our Government for the hospitalizations, examinations, and so forth, made by the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is on a reimbursable basis.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It is this year?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; with the exception of physical examinations made for the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is not the cost of hospitalization and examination of employees of other Federal agencies included in the total cost of the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It does not figure specifically here because where they spend a dollar for that the other agency reimburses them. For instance, if they take a Civilian Conservation Corps enrollee—and much of this expense has been incurred in connection with such enrollees—and put him in a veterans' hospital, the Civilian Conservation Corps reimburses the Veterans' Administration for what they have mutually agreed is the cost of that procedure.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. My purpose in asking the question is based on the fact that when General Hines appeared before the World War Veterans' Committee he stated, as I recall it, that no such arrangement was in effect at that time, but that they had plans for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Until the present fiscal year, the Veterans' Administration was not reimbursed for the cost of physical examinations and hospitalization furnished beneficiaries of the Employees' Compensation Commission or W. P. A. However, this has now been taken care of. I know the Veterans' Administration puts patients in naval hospitals, army hospitals, and in St. Elizabeths, and the Veterans' Administration always reimburses those agencies for such care. I was under the impression, although I may be in error, that the Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees are the ones who principally use Veterans' Administration facilities.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. There are also employees of the W. P. A., the civil service, the post office, and so forth.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. In this question of not deducting for quarters and food, will there be a tendency for attendants to live off the reservation? Will there be any option allowed there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There will be an option to this extent: That of necessity a certain number of the attendants and orderlies have to live on the station, because it is necessary to have them within call in case of emergency.

Mr. MILLER. That is the point I wanted to bring out. I would hate to see such a tendency arise.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. General Hines makes that reservation, because it is necessary to have such employees, but he believes enough of the attendants will be single men who will be willing to live on the station.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I did not quite understand the gentleman's reply to the question of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]. During vacation I went through the veterans' facility in my district. I tried to make some kind of investigation. I understood from the men employed there that even when it was not necessary for them to be on call they were required to have their meals there and to have a room there. Would this mean that they would still be required to follow that procedure?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It has been pretty much the general rule up to the present time that such deductions were made whether they had the advantage of the facilities or not, but under the new arrangement that will not be done except when they live on the station or have the advantage of the facilities.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. While we are on that point, I wonder if the gentleman knows that the Government charges something like a dollar a day for their meals and makes a profit on it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not a dollar a day, I may say to the gentlewoman.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I mean that a dollar a day is deducted from the attendants' pay.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is approximately $30 a month, and this includes the meals, the lodging, and the laundry.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I understood there was approximately a 35-cent profit to the Government on the meals.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That statement has been made, but it is very emphatically denied by the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I call the attention of the gentlewoman from Illinois to the hearings, part 1, pages 611 to 614. On page 613 General Hines gives the cost of a meal at 26 cents. The whole subject is gone into quite fully on the pages I have mentioned, bearing out the fact that the chairman and the members of the subcommittee went into this question quite thoroughly and received definite assurance that this policy would be adopted and put into effect this fiscal year as far as possible, surely by the first of July.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. At the time I made my statement on the floor of the House, and after I had gone to Camp Custer, I gave the figures that the authorities at Camp Custer had given me. As I recall those figures, it was costing the Veterans' Administration approximately $13 a month for meals and the Administration was getting $22.50 for them. Further, the Veterans' Administration was actually charging the attendants for meals, quarters, and laundry during the time they were taking their regular leave, either sick leave or regular annual leave, charging them for meals they did not eat. In other words, if an employee went on leave for 30 days, he was charged $22.50 for meals he did not eat.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The gentleman's statement that they charged the men for meals when the men were on leave is not borne out by the facts. General Hines, in answer to a specific question on that point, stated that the amount charged to the attendant or orderly for meals was figured on an 11-month basis and prorated during the 12-month period. Therefore, according to their figures—I do not say their figures are right or wrong, but I have great confidence in them—it is on an 11-month basis. The gentleman would have a lot of argument with the officials of the Veterans' Administration if he undertook to show they were charging the orderlies and attendants a profit on their meals. Maybe he could convince them, but I do not believe he could. They certainly do not think they are doing that.

Mr. ENGEL. At the time I was at Camp Custer I obtained these figures from the superintendent of the hospital and the men in charge. I made a statement on the floor of the House and protested to the Veterans' Administration about it at the time. Later Representative SHAFER of Michigan placed my report in the RECORD, over a year ago. This is the first time I have ever heard anyone say that the figures then given were not correct. The Veterans' Administration did not so inform me at the time I made the report nor since.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. At any rate, it is a moot question, because the matter has been remedied.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I have been informed that in one of the veterans' facilities in my district they make deductions where they have not the quarters and where they know they cannot take care of such people on the ground.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think that statement can be justified. Deductions are made from certain employees' salaries for subsistence, who do not reside on the stations, but no deductions are made for quarters unless quarters are available. Of course, when a gentleman comes for such a job they tell him what they will pay him, and just what the deductions will be, and he is glad to get the job, and also that they have only had money to do so-and-so with. However, the committee has not felt that is the thing to do and we have tried to remedy it and we have remedied it, so it is now water over the dam.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman advise us whether the Veterans' Administration is giving any study to the problem of retirement for their employees?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know about that, but it is my understanding that all permanent employees have now been brought under civil service and are eligible to the retirement benefits.

Mr. MILLER. I do not expect the gentleman, of course, to go into that matter in any detail, but they have now been functioning for 20 years, and many of their most valuable men are getting along in years. They are not getting now the pick of the graduates of medical schools because of lack of any retirement plan.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COCHRAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—
LOAN TO FINLAND

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to lay before the House a communication from the President of the United States addressed to the Speaker, which the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 16, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Last month when the Republic of Finland paid the regular installment on her debt to the United States, I directed the Secretary of the Treasury to place the money in a separate account pending such action, if any, as the Congress might desire to take with respect to it.

There is without doubt in the United States a great desire for some action to assist Finland to finance the purchase of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products, not including implements of war. There is at the same time undoubted opposition to the creation of precedents which might lead to large credits to nations in Europe, either belligerents or neutrals. No one desires a return to such a status.

The facts in regard to Finland are just as fully in the possession of every Member of the Congress as they are in the executive branch of the Government. There is no hidden information; and the matter of credits to that Republic is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

This Government will have early occasion to consider a number of applications for loans to citizens and small countries abroad, especially in Scandinavia and South America. That raises the question for the determination of the Congress as to whether my recommendation made to the Congress some months ago, for enlarging the revolving fund in a relatively small sum, for relatively small loans, should be considered. It goes without saying that if the applications for loans can be acted upon favorably by the Congress, this matter will be kept within the realm of our neutrality laws and our neutrality policies.

An extension of credit at this time does not in any way constitute or threaten any so-called involvement in European wars. That much can be taken for granted.

It seems to me that the most reasonable approach would be action by the Congress authorizing an increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank and authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase loans and securities from the Export-Import Bank to enable it to finance exportation of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products, not including implements of war.

It is wholly within the discretion of the Congress to place a ceiling on the amount of such loans. Whether this legislation should include an additional increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank, in order to provide for additional loans to increase our trade with South and Central America, is also within the discretion of the Congress.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, with Mr. COCHRAN in the chair.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. As a minority Member, in the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Representative WIGGLESWORTH, let me express to the chairman of this subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], the appreciation of the minority Members for the temperate and very indulgent way in which he has permitted us to exercise all the functions and all of the prerogatives of committee members in seeking to establish a case that would be in the interest of the general welfare of the country; and may I observe to the Members on my own side that the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] is due to the critical illness of his mother. It is doubtful whether he will share in the deliberations of this bill, and we shall miss him; because he has been most diligent upon his labors, starting early in December, when the hearings on this bill commenced. May I also pay my tribute to the clerk of the committee, Mr. Duvall, who has contrived a very clear and explicit report, and who has done an excellent job in attending to all those routine labors that go along with the work of this committee.

This has been a rather interesting bill. There are some interesting items, and some interesting surgery has happened to the bill both in the subcommittee and in the full committee. I would first direct attention to the hearings and to the testimony provided by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. I think I share with all of you and have shared for a long time some mystical feeling that all of the wisdom and all of the omniscience seemed to be reposed in the Bureau of the Budget. It has become somewhat of a formula in Congress when a Member is interested in a $6,000 or a $10,000 item to go to a member of the Committee on Appropriations, particularly the chairman of a subcommittee, and the question that is always directed to him is, "Has this been approved by the Budget?"

It is almost the formula followed in the routine household where a little girl asks something of her mother and the mother replies, "Have you asked your father about it?" And so we have been constrained for a long time to say, "Has this been before the Budget?" I continued with that high degree of devotion and conviction that the Bureau of the Budget knows all about it, but if you want to see some rather revealing and refreshing testimony you should read the testimony of Director Smith and his assistant, Mr. Lawton. But the thing I want to emphasize to you is this: In response to a question as to the amount of field investigation made by the Bureau of the Budget in connection with the expenditures, for instance, for regional offices of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or the State offices, or the many field offices for the Soil Conservation Service, or the P. W. A., or the other billions of dollars that are being expended in the field and not in Washington, he said, in effect, on page 13 of the hearings, that virtually no investigation had been made. Let me read to you the answer. I asked this question?

What field investigations do these two men make, if any?

I was referring to the two men in the Bureau of the Budget to whom the departmental estimates are submitted on or before September 15, as provided in the Accounting Act of 1921. Here is what Mr. Lawton answered:

Up to the present time they have made very few. They have only been able to get out in the field in years when Congress has adjourned early—perhaps for a month. If Congress stays in session until August, as it did last year, there is no opportunity to get into the field. That is one of the reasons for the increase requested here, so that at least one man can remain in the field a large share of the time.

Fancy the billions of dollars that are being expended out of the Treasury, and here comes the Bureau of the Budget before the Committee on Appropriations and tells us in all candor that no field investigations are being made of those expenditures. How are you going to render an intelligent accounting of our fiscal stewardship to the people of this country unless we know how these moneys are being expended, and whether or not the taxpayers are receiving a dollar's worth of benefit for every dollar that is disbursed out of the Federal Treasury? Still another abuse is that if they recommend a department cut in expenditures they leave it to the department to determine where and how and in what function the economy shall be made. This question was addressed to Mr. Smith, the Budget Director:

But you do not leave it to the departments themselves as to where to make the cut?

And Mr. Smith said:

Yes; often we do. We try desperately not to be arbitrary.

One can readily understand how these departments will work. They will take items out of a bill that they know full well the Congress will restore. They will take items that are translated into terms of action in all the congressional districts of the United States, and then they can sit back on their haunches and laugh and say, "Oh, well, we took it out to satisfy the Bureau of the Budget, but when the estimate gets up on the floor of Congress we know just how the boys will perform."

Touch something relating to agriculture and there come stentorian shouts from what is sometimes euphemistically known as the farm bloc that they must be restored. The departments are fully aware of that technique, and yet here is the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who confesses very properly and without guile to the members of the committee that the cuts are often left to the departments.

Now, let it not be said that I am speaking in derogation of Mr. Smith. I think he is a fine gentleman. I think he knows his business. I think, on the other hand, that the Budget Bureau has been understaffed and that the whole accounting system and budgetary procedure require some revamping if we are going to contrive an intelligent estimate of expenditures, and then go further and articulate them efficiently as they go out to the various agencies and bureaus throughout the land.

Some question was raised a little while ago about the National Resources Planning Board. You will remember that we had a National Resources Board, and that under the reorganization plan that was submitted by the President in April or May it was consolidated with the Federal Stabilization Board, made a part of the Executive Office, and is now known as the National Resources Planning Board.

It is all very interesting—the studies that they carry; the things that they contrive; the action programs that they promote. They only have $60,000 in their estimate for consultation with State directors and State planning agencies; but it is that $60,000 that does the damage, for they may go to the State of my good friend Mr. GIFFORD and prevail upon the State Planning Board of Massachusetts to undertake some program that goes into the genealogy of the safety-pin, or they will take something like the study of morbidity in North Carolina or a study of population in Mississippi. They carried on a study and got out a brochure under this grandiloquent title, "Know Your State, or What Kansas Produces." Well, it is grand stuff; very desirable, but certainly not indispensable to the functioning of this almost top-heavy Government. So I felt that if there had been authority for the continuation of the National Planning Board, it still should have been deleted, because we are spending borrowed money, and I doubt the wisdom and I doubt that we can convince the people of this country that it is wise to spend borrowed funds upon programs of that kind.

It is rather illuminating to go through their whole set-up and see the studies that they have been contriving and activating on land classification; on the rural and urban fringe; on scientific studies; on studies relating to water and energy and public works. I have raised the contention over and over again that they are doing so much that is duplication of the work of other agencies. For instance, statistics regarding labor. We have a Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor which receives a very generous appropriation every year for that purpose. They have studies on coordination of energy. We have a Council in the Department of the Interior, a Defense Council, that has gone into that whole question of the coordination of the power facilities of this country, so why must we spend more and more money for these duplicated facilities and studies?

I think one of the most creditable things the subcommittee has done is to delete this dispensable function of the National Planning Board from the bill that is now before you.

Another thing we did was to eliminate what was known as the old National Emergency Council, which has been metamorphosed into the Office of Government Reports. Of all the testimony that it has ever been my privilege to hear before the committee, I think Mr. Foster, who testified on the Office of Government Reports, O. G. R., better known as

"ogre"—I think it was so inconclusive that it was almost pathetic. In the course of the proceedings the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] asked him what item No. 2, or item No. 3, or item No. 4 in his program was. He sat there for at least 3 minutes and could not think of an example under the five-step program that he had submitted to the committee, for which they wanted a million or more dollars.

Now, this is the old agency that has been making and distributing electrical transcriptions throughout the country. They have gotten out 32 of those transcriptions—15-minute radio programs that have been sent to 175 radio stations in those areas where they felt that the press might be hostile to the things they would like to have messaged to the people. That is, not entirely, but many of them. I asked them to send me some of those radio scripts. One, in connection with the Department of Justice, was just too interesting for any use. I think it was No. 7, issued the first week in November 1939. They had an interviewer and then they had a man to represent the Bureau of Prisons in the Department of Justice. The interviewer would say, "What is your name?" He would say, "My name is Joe Doaks." The interviewer would say, "You are head of the Bureau of Prisons?" "Yes." Then they would go on on this colloquy and tell you how people get into prison and how they might get out of prison. I am satisfied that most people do not want to get into prison, and the idea of spending Government funds for that kind of claptrap and tommyrot upon the air waves of the Nation is certainly unjustifiable. But, of course, I am not unmindful of the fact that O. G. R., Office of Government Reports, is nothing but a political bureau, and always has been, when it came here in its original character as the National Emergency Council.

Now, they have set up a new wrinkle recently. It is known as the Federal Clearance Index, and it is being tried out for the first time in West Virginia.

They are inscribing upon a master roll the name of every householder who has received any benefits out of the Federal Treasury, and these are all cross-indexed so that when a card is given to a case worker with respect to one of the benefit or assistant programs she can consult the master index and tell just what the individual or his family has received by way of largess from the Government. If you ever had a better political mailing list anywhere, I will defy anybody to bring it upon the floor of this House. [Applause.] One hundred and sixty thousand names in West Virginia alone; and what is the sense of it? If we were going to go in for a permanent program of this type for years and years to come, perhaps it might recommend itself to the wisdom of the Congress, but this is the political agency, and I feel so happy that we gave it the coup de grace, because I addressed myself to that matter last year when the National Emergency Council was before us. In the event that the Senate does not restore it, in the event that the Congress is not put upon to reinstate it or to bring it here as some other function, then I will say that we have rendered another signal service to the taxpayers of the country by deleting that function.

Under the reorganization plan—and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and I served on that committee—you will remember a provision was written in that act that no agency shall be carried beyond the expiration date authorized by law and that none of the functions should be carried beyond the expiration date, and that there should be no merging of those functions with some existing agency that was authorized by law; yet here is our old friend the National Emergency Council, with a pair of false whiskers, masquerading as the Office of Government Reports, seeking to elicit another $1,000,000 out of the Treasury to carry on activities that are absolutely unnecessary. [Applause.] May I now allude briefly to the item in connection with the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. GIFFORD. Before we get to that will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think we are jointly guilty, being on the Reorganization Committee, in allowing the Budget Bureau to be placed in the room with the Executive where he can suppress any investigation that he does not want, and where he can perform his playful pranks on the Congress. I believe the gentleman brought that out, that he will cut places where he knows we would have to put them back, and in the end we ourselves will have to raise the debt limit. Does the gentleman still believe that the Budget is where it ought to be? Can he imagine a field examination of the C. C. C. camps or any other favorite scheme of the administration?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I believe my friend, from the general tenor of my remarks, appreciates that there is necessary considerable revamping in the budgetary procedure if we are ever to contrive a Budget statement that reflects the true condition of the country and indicates to the Congress precisely the action that is necessary.

Mr. GIFFORD. And may I refresh the gentleman's memory by saying that once I called the Budget Bureau and asked whether they could not mark off the worthless $2,500,000,000 reported to the Nation as assets. The gentleman recalls that the Budget Bureau said, "We wish we could; we do not favor that kind of bookkeeping." Is that an independent organization or is it simply something now used to suppress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts can answer that as well as I.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman knows, of course, that no claim has ever been made that the Bureau of the Budget was an independent agency of government. It is the direct representative of the Chief Executive. The Budget and Accounting Act created the Bureau of the Budget for the purpose of being the agency of the President in making recommendations to Congress. No system since the Budget and Accounting Act has ever contemplated anything except that the Budget Bureau would be the arm of the President to make his investigation and to make his recommendations. I do not know what the gentleman means when he suggests that the Bureau of the Budget is not where it belongs. It is where it was under the preceding administrations.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am sure I tried to convey the idea to the gentleman that the Bureau of the Budget might be a little independent and not be wholly the tool of the Executive, so that it could be suppressed in its decisions of what it thinks it might want. The helplessness of the Bureau of the Budget has amply been demonstrated when we call them up and they say they have to do what somebody else tells them to do.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Bureau of the Budget was created under a Republican administration, and they told us then it was to represent the Executive.

Mr. GIFFORD. We had a good Executive then.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The best answer, of course, is the functions that are laid out in the organic act in respect to the Bureau of the Budget. But to leave that for a moment and go to the Federal Power Commission.

The Federal Power Commission was created to interpret and to administer the Federal Power Act of 1920 and a large number of other acts since that time, including the Natural Gas Act, but I was very much interested in this, and I believe the Congress will be interested also. I see my good friend from Mississippi right here, and I want to address this particularly to him. On February 20, 1926, which is 14 years ago next month, there was issued to the Susquehanna Power Co. a license to build a dam, better known as the Conowingo Dam, up on the Susquehanna River. I am sure most of the Members have seen this dam. To me it is rather amazing that from 1926 to 1940, which is a period of 14 years, that power company has been before the Federal Power Commission; and the last action that is noted upon the docket of the Commission is that on April 10, 1939, reply briefs were filed.

They have been hauling them to Washington, sending them back, hauling them down here, and sending them back. They have great squadrons and groups of witnesses here; they have general counsel, experts, electrical and legal, camping on the ground here almost continuously in order to satisfy the Federal Power Commission with reference to the costs involved and those other necessary things upon which rates are predicated. I submit to the Congress as a group of reasonable, intelligent people, is there any excuse in the whole wide world why private industry in this country should be impaled for almost 14 years before a governmental regulatory agency acts? And the end is not yet.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I asked the Federal Power Commission to put all of the data in the hearings. You will find it there. Now, my good friend will probably say that the Susquehanna Power Co. has been holding out on the Federal Power Commission; that there is such an involved corporate structure it is almost impossible for Government experts, attorneys, and accountants to make a complete analysis of the whole financial structure so that they may have a clear basis upon which to predicate rates. That may be, but I still submit that to have a company before a Federal agency for almost a decade and a half is a most inexcusable thing and one of the reasons why private industry is filled with fear when we expand the regulatory authority of the agencies of government, knowing that year after year, month after month, they will have to sit down here and pour thousands of dollars a month into the pockets of people who must represent them. There are many other similar cases, maybe not quite so aggravated, and I submit to the Congress that something ought to be done. There ought to be a set-up whereby a couple of years at most would be sufficient to draw the line, close the books, and say the file has been completed, and let them go now and do business, contributing to the enrichment and to the welfare of this country. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer the gentleman's statement. I have been hoping he would get around to this point, in all these years. The trouble is it has taken the Federal Power Commission 14 years to make this outfit obey the law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Any Government agency that cannot make one single utility outfit obey the law in 14 years ought to quit in sheer despair and let somebody else do the job. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, if they just had that one outfit to deal with, they might do that; but they have the Power Trust in Illinois, in Ohio, Wisconsin, Mississippi, Alabama, and all the other States to contend with. They have made that company show what its legitimate investments were, and today it is selling power from the Conowingo Dam at about 2 mills a kilowatt-hour. As a result, the power rates to the ultimate consumers throughout this part of the country have been reduced by millions and millions of dollars. I shall show tomorrow that we have reduced the light and power rate to the American consumers since 1933 by $583,000,000 a year, and this work of the Power Commission is one of the things that has helped do it—that and the T. V. A. Now, you Republicans applaud. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. We must have our little pleasantries; but I submit all over again, put yourself, Uncle John, in the place of a president of a power company.

Mr. RANKIN. I am in place of the man who pays the power bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would you like it?

Mr. RANKIN. I would like what the Commission is doing if I had to pay the power bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You would condemn them to the punishment of the very bowels of the earth. You would not be any different from anyone else.

Mr. RANKIN. I would obey the law, or else you would send me to jail. Let us look at the Associated Gas & Electric Co. It had Hopson hiding around here drawing $8,000,000 a year, and now it finds it has been bankrupt for years. That is what the Federal Power Commission is doing; it is making those fellows squeeze the water out of their investments and do a legitimate business or get their hands off the water-power resources of this country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is going to bankrupt this group, too.

Mr. RANKIN. No; but it will help to reduce the light and power rates another half billion dollars a year to the ultimate consumers throughout the country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Having settled that proposition to our mutual satisfaction, may I say a word about the United States Maritime Commission?

Last year we authorized a hundred million dollars for ship construction, operating subsidies, and so forth. When the bill came to us with the Budget estimate there was an increase for the next fiscal year to $200,000,000 from $100,000,000. I thought that was high. I was of the opinion if we were going to economize, we should economize on those things that the Federal Government can dispense with in an hour when we are still using barrels of red ink in order to chalk up the balances of government.

In the subcommittee we reduced that item. The full committee went even further and reduced it from $175,000,000 to $125,000,000. I concur in the action taken by the full committee for a number of reasons. In the first place, we set up this program under the administration of the Maritime Commission and we provided for the building of 50 ships per year for a period of 10 years. Up to September 1934 they had 74 ships under contract, 24 had been launched, and 11 delivered. Admiral Land is a very capable administrator, and I take off my hat to him, not only for his administrative capacity, but because I think he is a man of high integrity. He testified very candidly that we are 1 year ahead on this shipbuilding program. We are 1 year ahead as a result of acceleration, so he testified, and if that is the case, is there any reason why we should maintain this appropriation at the high level that was messaged to us by the Budget Bureau? If it were absolutely necessary, there might be a different aspect to the matter, but I want the Committee to know that under this acceleration program they have approved the transfer of the registry of over 117 vessels to foreign flags from November 1938 to November 1939. If we need ships so badly that we have to expend all this money—

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In just a moment I will yield. I am going to answer the question the gentleman has in mind.

If we need these ships so badly, then why were 117 of our ships transferred to foreign registry with the approval of the Maritime Commission? They were transferred to the British flag, to the Honduran flag, to the Venezuelan flag, to the Cuban flag, to the French flag, to every flag; 117 vessels.

My good friend from New York was going to say, "Have you looked at the age of the vessels?" Yes; I have looked at the age. There are over 20 of these vessels that have been built since 1925. There are some that were built in 1933 and 1934. Can you give me some reason why a vessel that is only 5 or 6 years old, if you please, should be transferred to a foreign flag? If we do not need them that badly in order to implement the facilities of our own merchant marine, then why give the Maritime Commission $200,000,000 with which to carry out an accelerated program? There is no need for it, as a matter of fact. The committee did the wise and the discreet thing in reducing the amount from $200,000,000 to $125,000,000, and I hope the Committee of the Whole and the Congress will support that position.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is supposed to be the actual life of a ship?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That all depends on how it is used.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the average?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It might be 20 years, it might be 25 years, it might be 30 years. They have some vessels running that are 40 years old. Some of them are 50 years old. If other nations can operate them, why not we?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many of those ships are under 20 years old?

Some of them are 60, 70, or 80 years old. They have been out of service for years, and this was a good chance to get rid of them.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us see about the substance of that argument. The United States News for this week carries this statement, and I believe it to be very reliable because they are careful with their figures: "Lykes Bros., 25 vessels, all subsidized by the Maritime Commission." What are they doing with them? They transferred 12 vessels to the Chilean Nitrate Corporation. They propose to sell 6 more to Great Britain. But you and I and the taxpayers have subsidized the construction and the operating differentials of those vessels. Now they are going to sell some of them to Great Britain and transfer 12 of them to Chilean trade. What is the answer to that, my dear friend from New York? There is a proposal here of the United States Lines to sell 6 or 8 vessels to Norway. If we have vessels to give away and to sell to other countries, let us give the public, the taxpayers of our own sweet country, a break and reduce this appropriation and keep it down, and save a little money for them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman stated a moment ago he could not figure out why we were making these sales. I believe if the gentleman will examine the corporate structure of the companies to which we have sold these ships he will understand why the sales have been made.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman had the time, I am sure he could keep on all day, but I want to recommend mercy to a profligate administration. The gentleman is very harsh.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid my good friend from Massachusetts flatters me highly and generously.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. Did I correctly understand the gentleman, who is very able and capable, to say that some of these ships that have been transferred were subsidized as to construction by the Maritime Commission?

Mr. DIRKSEN. These that were transferred to foreign registry?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not that I know of.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, the subsidized construction program did not go into effect until 1936 or 1937?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right, but what about these vessels of Lykas Bros., all of which were subsidized, according to report, and recently built?

Mr. OLIVER. They were subsidized as to operation, but not as to construction.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Most of them have been subsidized as to operation, I would say.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the sense of subsidizing construction if we have more ships now than we need, and we evidently must have because we are selling them. The papers yesterday morning announced that Norway had refused to avail herself of an offer to acquire eight of these ships.

Mr. OLIVER. All I can say is that this program was authorized by the Congress in 1936 because a majority of the Congress at that time thought we wanted a merchant marine that belonged to the United States of America.

Mr. KNUTSON. To whom did the ships we transferred belong before they were transferred?

Mr. OLIVER. They belonged to the operators.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman does not contend that the Government should go into the operation of steamship lines?

Mr. OLIVER. That was the program, and it was adopted by a large majority of Congress in 1936.

Mr. KNUTSON. That was a rubber-stamp Congress.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They say this program ought to be accelerated because costs are going up, labor costs and material costs. Suppose the costs come down after the conflagration in Europe subsidies. What then? Then we can go to the Treasury and charge off a tremendous loss before we get through, and when the time comes to liquidate that program it is going to be too bad for old John Q. Public.

So let us start now with an element of caution and hold this down to where the full committee, by a vote of 26 to 6, placed it this morning, at a level of $125,000,000.

Let me now pass on to a new agency and I wish the whole day were available for this, but it is not.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman said the reduction was $100,000,000. Was it not $75,000,000?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; from $200,000,000 to $125,000,000.

Mr. ENGEL. And that is $25,000,000 more than was appropriated last year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There came this year a new agency, as usual created by Executive order. My good friend from Cotuit laughs about that. He has had lots of experience in such matters.

This agency was created by Executive Order No. 7916, dated June 4, 1938. It is known as the Council of Personnel Administration. It is only asking for $50,000 and, "Surely, Congress, you would not deny us, a humble little agency, just a mere $50,000, which is only pin money." Oh, it looks so lacking of guile on its face and looks so alluring you can hardly contain yourself. You just want to get your hands into the Treasury and give them $50,000 to run for the next fiscal year, but let us take a look at it and see whether it is as simple and as lacking in guile as it appears on the face of things. A former Member of Congress is the head of that agency, Mr. Frederick Davenport. I have no doubt the former Senator from Kentucky recalls him. He served in this body with distinction from the great State of New York. The $50,000 is to be used to advise the President on personnel matters and to coordinate and cooperate with the Civil Service Commission. Now, if that were the whole story it would not be so bad, but let us take a look at the rest of the story. You set up a little council here, give them $50,000, and how shall they operate? They must have a personnel director and a staff in the Department of Labor; they must have one in the Department of the Navy, they must have a coordinating service down in the War Department and in the Treasury and in the various agencies of government, and that is exactly what they have got. So it is going to coordinate personnel, classification, recruitment, and all those other things that go along with it. I have made a rough tabulation of what is involved there. Do you know how many people will be involved in personnel administration over and above the regular number? Over 200, and they come to the Budget and for 1941 they ask for two and a half million dollars in order to carry on, sort of under the guidance of this little agency that only asks for $50,000. You see, that is the way the camel gets his nose under the tent, and then after a while you have a full-grown new agency, functioning like a great live tree, spreading its branches throughout the governmental structure and then you will never be able to dislodge them.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment seeking to strike that agency out of existence; and if you will join with me in giving it the coup de grâce, we will have done another great favor for the taxpayers of the country that will be like some great swell that gathers momentum with the years and give us a better appreciation of the money we have saved and the service that we have rendered to the country. So there is a modest $50,000 item, but it is like a stone that is thrown into the water—the ripples go out to all the 48 States of the Union, and suddenly it takes on the proportions of a several-million-dollar item. Let us stop it now when we get around to amending this bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. What estimate was made in the Budget for the National Resources Board and the Government Statistical Board?

Mr. DIRKSEN. About $1,000,000, and the Central Statistical Board item of $126,000 was joined with the Budget Bureau. So their appropriation is reflected in the total for the Budget Bureau.

Mr. PARSONS. I understand your report eliminates the Budget estimate for that in this bill; for what reason?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We eliminated the Office of Government Reports, which is the old National Emergency Council. We eliminated entirely the National Resources Planning Board because we do not think there is any real authority in law for it. If any authority could be found, it would expire as of June 30, 1940, and its functions were sought to be revived under the reorganization bill, which cannot be done, in my humble judgment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I ought not to express an opinion, as I happen to be presiding over this bill, but I agree with the gentleman that I can find no authority in law for setting up a National Resources Board. In fact, the Reorganization Act itself prohibits that from becoming a permanent agency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely.

Mr. WARREN. While we are talking about it, I think it is well to say this: That that measure has been considered in some form by four different committees of the House, and in each instance it has been rejected. I feel that with the acquiescence of the acting committee that covered the reorganization I made a pledge to the House about that matter and stated at the time that so far as I was concerned I would resist in every way possible making the National Resources Board a permanent agency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman did so state.

Mr. WARREN. And I further think that, had it not been eliminated from the reorganization bill, we never would have been able to get that measure through the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I hope the gentleman will excuse me; I fear that my time will elapse before I get through. I direct attention now for a moment to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and when I do, let me point out to you that there are over 30 separate Government corporations and lending agencies operating today that represent their assets to be about $12,800,000,000, and they represent their liabilities to be $8,800,000,000; and if you want to get some real informative reading sometime, I suggest that you have the Treasury send you every month this bulletin of the Treasury Department. This is dated December 1939. There are some very informative tables on these Government corporations and their outstanding obligations. There is the list—$12,866,000,000 in assets and a total of about $8,800,000,000 in liabilities. Offhand we are $4,000,000,000 to the good. Is that not sweet? Yes; it is until you look at it, and then it takes on a different cast. Let me point out, first of all, with respect to these Government corporations, that there are in the hands of the American public today, as of October 1939, over $5,448,000,000 of guaranteed bonds. Those bonds are guaranteed as to principal and interest; and then when they come with the Budget statement, they say, "That is all right, because on the other side are recoverable assets." What kind of recoverable assets? Mortgages upon the homes of the people held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, advances by the Commodity Credit Corporation and secured paper for it, Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans—all of that sort of thing; P. W. A. bonds; all those fine assets. Have you ever seen a consolidated balance sheet as to what those assets might be? Let me tell you about one of them, and that is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I do not envy Mr. Fahey his job as head of the largest money-lending establishment anywhere in the world. He is going to have plenty of difficulty before he gets through. When they finished lending and stopped applications, they had made 1,017,000 loans, a little over $3,000,000,000. How much did they lose this last year? Sixty-six million dollars. That is not all. He said in his report to us that the average loss was about $920 a house. I asked whether there were any expenses, commissions, and whether there were any selling charges. "Oh, yes," he replied; and then I asked him to kindly extend them in the record in the form of a table. Mr. Chairman, that will be found in the hearings. There were over $15,000,000 in selling charges, to sell homes on which Uncle Sam had loaned money, and now he is taking them back from the people.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not now. Do you remember how they used to deride us in those celebrated hundred days of 1933, when they talked about those flinty-hearted, grasping bankers; those building and loan associations that had no soul and no sympathy, but reached out and foreclosed the homes of indigent and distressed citizens? Who is doing it now? Uncle Sam. He has foreclosed over 175,000 of those homes, which is 17½ percent of all the mortgages that have been made.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have sold over 70,000. They still own over 82,000—you and I own them today. You see, this is our Government, and you and we and the other 130,000,000 people today own 82,000 homes that have been taken by voluntary deed of foreclosure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall take another 15 minutes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In a moment. I said to Mr. Fahey, "What is the capital investment of Uncle Sam in these homes?" and he replied $480,000,000, and it is in the record. I asked him then if he would put in the estimated current market value of them, if they were in liquidation today. What is the estimated current market value of the homes that we the people own, 82,000 of them, not including the 71,000 that have been sold?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, those have not been sold, actually. They were disposed of on a little payment down.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But I am talking about homes we still own—$480,000,000 capital investment, $360,000,000 estimated current market value. Draw a line, subtract, loss how much?—$120,000,000. Not my figures. Those are the figures of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and you will find them in the record.

Now, when you go back home you can tell your people, without fear of contradiction, that that is the record. Isn't that noble?

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] has been deviling me some about sales. Let me tell you about New York. Down in Oklahoma, for instance, they sell a house and how much do they lose on it? Six or seven hundred dollars. They sell one in Illinois and how much do they lose, including sales cost? Twelve hundred dollars. They sell one in New York and how much do they lose? They lose over $3,274 per property. That is in the record.

Now I yield to my beloved associate. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact there are about $76,000,000 in the surplus fund of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at the present time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Right.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And is it not a fact that they saved over 1,000,000 homes in this country, and about 17 percent now have been foreclosed? Loans that no bank would uphold. Over a million people would have lost their homes only for that bill. The gentleman referred to New York. Yes; homes in New York cost $18,000, and in other parts of the country they only cost $1,500 and $2,000. The reason why we are losing the amount the gentleman referred to is because of the great inflation in 1926, 1927, and 1929 under the Republican Party that increased prices 500 and 600 percent. [Laughter and applause.] That is the reason today, when they get down to the real price, they are losing money. But remember, they have saved a million homes, that the banks would have foreclosed. I doubt if we ever passed a bill in this House that served the people more. I am going to ask the gentleman from Illinois this: How does he stand on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail, on which we lost $130,100,257.20, as a subsidy to second-, third-, and fourth-class mail? The gentleman favors that, but he does not favor giving it to the home owners of this country. How do you stand on that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will join with my friend any time that he brings a bill on this floor to absolutely delete all mail subsidies. You have got my vote now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If there is an amendment offered on the Post Offices bill to cut that out, will you support the amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I certainly shall.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. You shall? [Laughter and applause.] Well, I am glad to hear it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just a moment. Let me take a little more time.

Gentlemen, you remember when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created. Do not you remember the representations that we made on the floor, that we would not lose money; in fact, that we would make money? When Mr. Fahey came before the committee he said, "There is a fair chance that we may break even." Oh, it was an easy way to get out of the realism that stands before him, a monumental loss. When it is liquidated what is going to happen? Reach into Uncle Sam's Treasury. That is always the case. Do you not know there are four or five corporations now in existence, the United States Housing Corporation and others, that were organized and which functioned during the World War? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] will remember those. We are still carrying them on the books. They have not been fully liquidated yet. Now, wait until liquidation comes for some of these corporations. Oh, it may be a tragic story for the people of this country.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Fahey's statement to the Committee on Banking and Currency was that he would not lose any money because they could borrow at 2 percent and they would loan at 4 or 4½ percent, and that would take up all losses they had. That was his testimony.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, while we are talking about loaning corporations, let me present what has happened to some of these bonds.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it is very brief.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, naturally. I take it that my friend favored the law which created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely. I was for it. I voted for over half of these things, and I am proud that I did, because I wanted your administration, your President, and you good Members to have every opportunity to raise this country out of its trouble. That is why I went along.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, former President Hoover recommended the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and I think it is a good thing.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. It is not the idea; it is in the administration where we excel, and always have. [Applause and laughter.]

While we are speaking of assets I want you to take these hearings; I want you to look at the bonds that are held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and by the Public Works Administration. There are over 350 issues that are in default. That is about 10 percent of the whole number of issues. They are scattered all over the country, but are represented by waterworks systems mostly, and that sort of thing, and then I want you to examine the column of reasons why they are in default.

Down in Winfield, W. Va., they report default on the water-revenue bonds because of "failure of officials to collect charges." That is in the record supplied by the Public Works Administration.

Down in the little town of Mineral, Va., they are in default because of "costly water supply and lack of interest in the management." Down in Strawn, Tex., they are in default because of insufficient revenue. Down in Marquez, Tex., they are in default because of "competition from private wells and systems." In Jamestown, Tenn., they are in default because of "poor management and insufficient revenue."

Down in Lynchburg, S. C., they are in default because of "lack of customers and nonpayment of hydrant rental." That is one of the best reasons I know why default should occur, because they do not have customers.

In my own State we have some rather interesting examples. They built a waterworks system by W. P. A. at Grafton, Ill., down on the Illinois River. When we asked why bond interest could not be paid, they said: "These people have a prejudice against river water." Extraordinary, is it not? Then there is the case of Shawneetown, Ill. Lafayette went up the Ohio River and landed at Shawneetown many generations ago—a beautiful old city, but the floods came, and they moved the city about 10 or 15 miles away. I believe all the Members from Illinois are familiar with it, but they left the system built by the W. P. A. before they moved. Evidently the town moved away after the W. P. A. had installed the water system, because in their report they say: "This community has suffered from flood. Now being moved to its new location. No improvement likely until city stabilized in its new location." So you see they just moved out on the W. P. A., and the bonds are in default.

There is one from Northport, Mich.: "Failure of official to operate system economically and efficiently." Finally there is one from Galatia, Ill., in default upon its water-revenue bonds because of "bad management and defalcations of city clerk." Amazing how one fellow could gum up the works like that, is it not?

But those are the assets that are disclosed in the report of the Federal Treasury in the form of recoverables against the billions of contingent obligations that we own. Mr. Chairman, I certainly would like to see a consolidated balance sheet to see just how we stand. How are we going to make an intelligent Budget estimate? How are we going to give an accounting to the people for their money that we have been disbursing and lending unless we know what these probable assets are and what we can realize on them if they must be liquidated? Oh, that report is pregnant with drama, and it will be more dramatic as the years go along. Now let me allude to a minor item concerning the Federal Housing Administration, a pretty good agency; but you know, I believe that when Uncle Sam enters into competition with private industry he ought to give private industry a fair show.

I asked Mr. Ferguson, the general counsel, what he advertises in this literature on title I, modernization loans, as the rate of interest, what statements they make in this brochure that is sent to the people. Here are some of these brochures of the Federal Housing Administration. In this they do not use the word "interest." They use the word "discount." Examine these and you will find they say about title I, modernization loans, "$5 discount per hundred."

When I was down here in December I saw the order of the Federal Trade Commission, dated December 11, 1939. They had Henry Ford, General Motors, Chevrolet, and others under charges for advertising 6-percent financing loans for automobile purchases. What did the Federal Trade Commission say to them? It said: "You must not do it; you must cease and desist from this practice if the true, simple interest rate is more than 6 percent." Well, it was, and so they have changed their system.

What about the Federal Housing Administration? I said—and you will find this on page 1104 of the hearings:

"Mr. Ferguson, what is the true interest rate that is reflected?"

He said: "The interest rate is 9.72 percent."

Almost 10 percent. But this record, this literature, these brochures they send out state: "$5 discount per hundred."

Suppose you got one of these, what would you think? You would say: "That is 5 percent"; yet the true interest rate is 9.72 percent. Do you think that is fair? It seems to me it is time for the Congress to get busy and make this agency state the exact fact, because it is absolutely unfair to private industry to put out that kind of statement. The Federal Trade Commission makes private industry toe the mark, yet the Federal Housing Commission goes unchecked. It would be great fun to sick the Federal Trade Commission onto the Federal Housing Commission, but, unfortunately, we cannot do it. It is one of those things where we are estopped.

It is one of those things where we are estopped, and we must make the best of it until in their wisdom and in their good conscience they decide that perhaps they ought to follow a better line of practice.

Let me allude to one more thing. May I admonish you to be on the alert about any building program for public buildings that may be proposed for the Nation's Capital. They want a new building for the General Accounting Office. They are in the process of acquiring land or want to acquire land to build an annex to the State Department. They also want a new Economics Building in Washington. They have gone on laying out a scheme and plan which will obligate the people of this country for another $40,000,000 of expenditures in the form of great white stone buildings to grace and adorn the Nation's Capital. I want my Capital City to be the most beautiful in the world, but I recognize when we do it in the present state of the Budget we are doing it with borrowed funds. Can we make a real conscientious accounting to the people of this country by building or undertaking to build or proposing to build or letting them get ready to build or propose to build fine buildings aggregating almost $40,000,000 in Washington when we are still writing the last line of the Budget in red ink? I merely submit it to you, because some of these proposals may come along. We must be alert.

Let me finally conclude by expressing my felicitations inasmuch as this is the first appropriation bill, that it comes to you today $95,000,000, approximately, below the estimate that was sent up by the Budget Bureau. I think that is a credible way for the Congress of the United States to start for the fiscal year 1941. May you be courageous and resolute in the faith as you walk down Economy Avenue and give the taxpayers of this country a break. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it was amazing to me, to say the least of it, to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] attack the Federal Power Commission for doing its duty in connection with the Conowingo Dam.

Every time a governmental agency, from the T. V. A. to the Federal Power Commission, tries to do something to protect the electric-light and power consumers of America from ruthless overcharges or to save innocent investors from exploitation at the hands of the Power Trust, immediately some old-guard Republican begins to wage an attack on that agency and to regale the House with repetitions of the propaganda put out by these special interests.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] complains that it has taken the Federal Power Commission so long to straighten out the Susquehanna Power Co. in connection with its construction and operation of the Conowingo Dam on the Susquehanna River near the Maryland-Pennsylvania line. Under the law it was necessary for the Federal Power Commission to determine the cost involved in the construction and operation of this dam in order, among other things, to determine what are reasonable wholesale rates for the power that is generated at this dam and as a rule shipped in interstate commerce.

The delay of which the gentleman complains has been brought about by the companies themselves. This case, which, as I said, is to determine the cost involving the Conowingo hydroelectric development on the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania and Maryland, which was sponsored and built by the Philadelphia Electric Co. through its subsidiaries, came up for hearing in March 1938. The hearing ended September 20, 1938, and briefs were filed in 1939. Whatever delay there was in bringing the case to final hearing was due mainly to the power companies themselves and to the unnecessary intricacies and complexities of the corporate ramifications and other similar arrangements through which the property connected with this project was acquired and the project itself constructed and operated—a great and intricate mesh of camouflage, if you please, to keep the facts concealed from the American people, and especially from the Federal Government and from the power consumers in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

The cost claimed by the power companies in this case was approximately $55,000,000, of which $38,000,000 was challenged and put in issue in the case. In other words, the Government contended that this alleged capital structure of $55,000,000 contained something like $38,000,000 of wind, water, or inflated valuations, upon which the people who buy electricity from this concern or its affiliates are compelled to pay dividends through exorbitant rates.

The Federal Power Commission undertook to hear this case as early as 1935, and set the time for hearing for June 4 of that year. It was continued indefinitely at that time upon the urgent appeals and petitions of the power companies themselves. The Commission first denied their petition for delay, but upon a hearing sought by the power companies, finally, on May 27, 1935, granted the petition of the power companies for an indefinite postponement of this cost-determination hearing. The gentleman from Illinois did not complain of that delay then; the power companies wanted it.

The Commission had required the power companies to file their claim-cost statement by December 1, 1933. They did not file it until March 1, 1934. When it was at last filed, it consisted of 14 large volumes containing 7,718 pages. The T. V. A. would have made a full and complete report of the costs of such a project in one booklet of not more than 50 or 100 pages; probably not more than 25 pages.

What if the T. V. A. had filed a report covering the developments on the whole Tennessee River—not on just one dam—that filled 14 large volumes of more than 7,000 pages? Every enemy of the T. V. A., every friend of the Power Trust in this House, would have raised such a howl of protest as has not been heard since the fall of the Insull empire.

The underlying records which they asked to be explored in connection with this claimed cost of $55,000,000, ran more than 100,000 items, and more than 50,000 vouchers were presented, each for separate expenditures. I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and his associates among the enemies of the T. V. A. would like to place a burden of that magnitude upon the General Accounting Office?

Remember that the acquisition of the power companies' properties and the organizations of the various successive corporations and groups in connection with this enterprise extended over a period of more than 20 years preceding the time of the hearing, and the corporate agencies and other instrumentalities involved in the acquisition of the property numbered, in all, at least 25—all sucking money out of the pockets of the power consumers to pay dividends on the water in their capital structures and to pay their enormous overhead expenses. They were scattered throughout Pennsylvania and Maryland, with original records difficult to locate, and in many instances their records were lost or destroyed.

What a pity we do not have a T. V. A. on the Susquehanna River.

The investigation which it was necessary for the Federal Power Commission to make touching the acquisition of property, the manipulations of stocks and other transactions, the costs and profits of predecessor interests and corporations by these and affiliated groups in order to get the actual, original, legitimate cost, extended almost back to the turn of the century. This shows what a stupendous burden is placed upon the Federal Power Commission when it comes to handling these vast holding companies that serve no useful purpose, but cost the American people—the electric consumers of the Nation—untold millions of dollars every year.

The investigation of this total claimed cost of $55,000,000, of which the Commission challenged $38,000,000, was rendered more appallingly complex and difficult by reason of the circuitous and intermingled—and I might say intangible, if not incoherent or fictitious—transactions and dealings of the power companies, their affiliates, and their predecessors in interest, and by the unnecessarily intricate and involved corporate structures set up by these companies to handle and construct the project, and to furnish a ready means and a handy manner for fortifying their excessive claims of capital costs and making it as difficult as possible for the Federal Power Commission or any other Government agency to get the facts.

It was also necessary for the Commission to carry on extensive investigations through the records of other corporations and interests which were brought into the picture by the power companies, including an astonishing number of outside experts whose services were supposed to be retained at cost, the very staggering amount of which cried out for investigation.

The final hearing began in March 1938, and almost immediately the power companies again moved for an indefinite recess. It was clear that the power companies had not come to Washington intending to try the case even at that late date. They were manifestly expecting to secure further delay. The representatives of the Power Commission in charge of the hearing, however, pressed the matter and managed to make progress. There were constant requests from the power companies for delay and for reducing the number of hours to be utilized by the hearing each week. There were requests for recesses and constant complaints on the part of the power companies that the hearings were being held in a manner too exhausting physically for the ones engaged in it. They said there was a limit to the amount of such labor human beings could endure. They had, perhaps, exhausted themselves compiling those 14 volumes of alleged cost reports.

In May 1938 an extended recess was at last granted at the pressing insistence of the power companies themselves. The hearing reconvened in midsummer, and the same tactics of obstruction and delay were employed by the power companies. Examinations and cross-examination of witnesses were unduly and unnecessarily prolonged. A multitude of petty and unimportant objections followed each other in quick and regular order. The representatives of the Power Commission in charge of the hearing, however, pressed forward and managed to keep the hearing going, over loud protests and complaints from the representatives of the power companies.

The hearing was concluded September 20, 1938. There then ensued several months of delay in "correcting" the record, for which delay the power companies were principally responsible. There next followed applications on the part of the power companies for extensions of the time allowed for the filing of briefs. Briefs were filed in 1939. Throughout the entire proceedings the Commission has been diligent, earnest, and constant in attention to the case and in pressing it toward completion with all the speed that the importance of the matter and the complexity of its involvements would permit.

The challenged items to be dealt with run into the thousands. There are approximately 9,000 pages of the latest transcript, exclusive of the first hearing held before the Federal Power Commission and the hearings held before the State commissions of Pennsylvania and Maryland; and, according to the briefs of the power companies, there are in the record of the last hearing more than 14,000 pages of exhibits, not to speak of the printed volumes, maps, and so forth, in evidence—which probably run to as many as 50 volumes, many of which comprise several hundred pages.

The tactics of the power companies from the beginning have been to delay the final determination of fixed capital costs and to burden the Power Commission to death with a cumbersome record. With $38,000,000 of their total claimed cost of $55,000,000 challenged, they have never displayed any anxiety to reach a final determination of the matter. The efforts made to press the matter to a conclusion have all been on the part of the Commission and its staff.

The power companies are demanding that the several thousand items in controversy in this case be separately considered and determined, each on the basis of what they term "its own facts"; almost every challenged item to constitute a separate problem within itself. There are 50,000 vouchers, each representing separate expenditures, in evidence. The challenged total of $38,000,000 does not by any means paint for the mind a complete picture of the gigantic task with which the Commission is confronted in this case.

To appreciate the task one would have to be familiar with and consider the many persons, corporations, groups, and interests who, since almost as far back as the turn of the century, have been interested in and have busied themselves for their own profit at different times in getting the Conowingo properties together and in "promoting" the project. It has been alleged that all of these different interests through 30 years were in the end "well taken care of" by the power companies who finally put all the properties together in one project, and that an effort has been made in this case to saddle not only all the cost incurred by all these corporations, interests, and groups upon the project's capital costs but also the fat profits and payments and rake-offs by which they were all finally "cared for."

Nothing should be permitted to interfere with the Commission's thorough consideration and development of the true facts in this case or with its determination to see to it that nothing but the actual, legitimate costs of the project shall be put into its fixed capital structure for purpose of its rate base and the price of recapture. The Commission has been more than fair to the power companies throughout the whole proceedings. The members of its hearing staff were careful to accord every requisite of complete fairness and due process. They acceded time and time again to the requests of the power companies for time and gave them every opportunity to establish their claimed costs. Now, in order to reach a just conclusion, the Commission intends to consider the evidence adduced and developed through the investigations of the grotesquely elaborate, involved, and top-heavy corporate and intercorporate set-ups and arrangements and the intricate dealings and circuitous trades of the past 30 years, by means of which the staggering claimed cost total of $55,000,000 was built up by the power companies and their predecessors, affiliates, and associates.

This is more or less a test case. Every one of the 27,000,000 light and power consumers throughout the country are vitally interested in the outcome.

These attacks on the Federal Power Commission and the T. V. A. all seem to be inspired by the same influences and designed to impede the administration in its efforts to protect the ultimate consumers of electric lights and power from the exorbitant overcharges now being imposed.

Since 1933 the Federal Power Commission has intensified its efforts to save the water power of the Nation and to protect the American consumers of electric energy. Under the power which Congress gave it in 1935 to collect and publish light and power rates throughout the Nation, it has given information that, together with the example set by the T. V. A., along with the other power policies of the administration, has already reduced the rates to the electric light and power consumers of this country more than $583,000,000 a year.

It has been stated here by enemies of the T. V. A. that the entire cost of that development would ultimately reach $535,000,000. Yet these reductions in light and power rates of $583,000,000 a year amount to $48,000,000 more than the entire cost of the T. V. A., including all its dams and transmission lines, to say nothing of the benefits of flood control, navigation, soil conservation, and so forth. This reduction in rates in 1 year is more than 200 times the amount appropriated in this bill for the Federal Power Commission.

If we were to make no further reductions, and the consumption of electricity remained as it is today, the American people would save in 10 years $5,830,000,000; and if we can get these rates reduced to the proper levels all over the country, we can save enough in a few years to pay off the national debt. Although we have reduced light and power rates to this extent, the record shows that in 1938 the American people were still overcharged $889,392,747, according to the T. V. A. rates; and $1,007,156,359, according to the Ontario rates; and that the people of Maryland were overcharged $13,191,408; and the people of Pennsylvania, $72,513,570, according to the T. V. A. rates. These are the two States that use practically all the power generated at the Conowingo Dam. It is distributed through the Philadelphia Electric Co., and could be distributed at the T. V. A. yardstick rates without loss to legitimate investors.

Last year that company purchased 1,299,138,369 kilowatt-hours of electricity produced at the Conowingo Dam at an average of 3.34 mills a kilowatt-hour, which is cheaper than any of the cities, towns, or cooperative associations purchased power wholesale from the T. V. A. This power could have been distributed at the T. V. A. yardstick rates to the people of both Maryland and Pennsylvania and still yielded a reasonable return on the legitimate investments.

Other companies in these States could also reduce their charges to the T. V. A. yardstick rates and make money on their legitimate investments. If that were done, as I said, it would save the power consumers of Maryland more than $13,000,000 a year, and the people of Pennsylvania more than $72,000,000 a year.

Although the rates have been reduced to the people in these States since the creation of the T. V. A. in 1933 by more than $8,000,000 a year in Maryland, and more than $56,000,000 a year in Pennsylvania, still the people of Maryland are overcharged more than $13,000,000 a year, and the people of Pennsylvania are overcharged more than $72,000,000 a year.

And I might say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that in 1938 the people of Illinois used 6,936,786,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $161,177,634. Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $91,262,377, which showed an overcharge of $69,915,257, according to the T. V. A. rates. If the people of Illinois had paid the same rates in 1938 they paid in 1934, the year the T. V. A. was put into operation, the cost would have been a little above $264,000,000, or $56,000,000 more than they actually paid, and $173,000,000 more than they would have paid under the T. V. A. rates.

So it will be seen that while we have a long way to go yet in bringing justice to the light and power consumers of Illinois, still we have reduced their rates since the T. V. A. was created by more than $56,000,000 a year.

I know the gentlemen will probably say that these overcharges of $69,000,000 a year are absorbed in taxes, but the record shows that the private power companies in Illinois pay in taxes, cash contributions, and free services only about $25,000,000 a year, which amount taken from this overcharge would still leave a net overcharge of $44,000,000 a year for which the people of Illinois get absolutely nothing in return.

In addition to compelling these private companies that have dams on our navigable streams, or who ship power in interstate commerce, to show their legitimate investments, and in that way squeezing the water out of their inflated valuations, the Federal Power Commission is rendering one of the greatest services that ever came to the people of this country by compiling and publishing the electric rates charged by both private and public power systems in every city, town, and community in America.

Anybody who desires to do so can write the Federal Power Commission and for a small compensation, of probably 10 cents each, secure these reports on each and every State in the Union. Then he can make his own comparisons.

I have on my desk at this moment a volume compiled by the Federal Power Commission known as the National Electric Rate Book, that covers every single State in the Union and shows the rates charged in every community. This volume is worth its weight in diamonds to the power consumers of America, for the reason that it provides that deadly parallel that all the Power Trust propaganda or inspired oratory cannot answer. I have introduced a resolution to have this volume made a House document in order that every Member may secure a few copies for his own use and distribution to those communities in his district that are vitally interested in this question.

If the Federal Power Commission never did anything else than to gather and publish these rates and compile this rate book it would not only have justified its existence throughout all the years to come but would have saved the American consumers of electric energy hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars, that would have otherwise been wrung from them through exorbitant overcharges.

So, Mr. Chairman, instead of criticizing the Federal Power Commission for doing its duty, I submit that the gentleman from Illinois should be offering thanks for the protection the Commission has offered the power consumers of the Nation, and especially of his own State.

Instead of criticizing the Federal Power Commission for doing its duty and attempting so to limit its funds as to render it impossible for it to carry on this great work, we should be applauding it and providing it with whatever amounts are necessary to enable it to perform these arduous tasks.

The electric business is a public business and must be publicly regulated or publicly owned, if the people are to be protected. If regulation continues to fail, then the whole country will swing to public ownership of power facilities—and the sooner they come to that conclusion the sooner we will be able to lift this burden of a billion dollars in annual overcharges for electric lights and power from the backs of the American people.

It has been universally recognized, ever since the establishment of the rule of Hale in England, that privately owned utility companies are "affected with a public interest" and cease to remain in the classification of ordinary private business. The very nature of the electric business imposes a high degree of public interest and, as I said, makes it a public business.

Following the celebrated Granger case of 1877—Munn against Illinois—the various States attempted to assume their sovereignty over this type of corporations. At first the States delegated their sovereign authority to their lesser subdivisions. Evils of great proportions then became a part of the system until exposed in the Hughes investigation of 1905.

Aroused public opinion forced a change from the older order. Out of the revelation came regulation by commissions. The Federal Trade Commission investigation of 1927 to 1933 disclosed voluminous evidences of fraud, political manipulation, and corruption, culminating in the fall of the Insull empire in Illinois.

Congress then attempted to curb these forces of evil through the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Holding Company Acts. Late evidences definitely demonstrate the fact that these forces still ride on. Congress has not accomplished the results intended.

In the midst of world-wide disorders, democracy must take stock. To survive it is necessary for us to drive the lepers from control within the body politic—both State and National.

The Department of Justice has lately concentrated its activities on corrupt politicians. These efforts are to be commended; but they do not reach the roots of the trouble. We must reach and punish the moneyed interests behind the alliance of politics and corruption. Public exposure is the first step in the process of driving out these lepers.

After the Federal Trade Commission's investigation the leaders of the Power Trust solemnly promised the American people that they would desist from their evil practices. But they have not kept the faith; in fact, their evil practices have been on the increase. Now is the time to call a halt.

You cannot place a veil of sanctity over these offenders by campaign contributions.

The refusal of the Securities and Exchange Commission to permit the $8,000,000,000 Associated Gas & Electric system to make dividend payments out of its capital has resulted in that vast holding company filing a bankruptcy petition. This intricate system, with a capital debt of nearly $700 per consumer, or about three or four times what it is actually worth, has been one of the worst offenders. This superholding company, operating in 23 States, has a highly intricate financial set-up. With all due respect to our Federal courts and the Department of Justice, it would be practically impossible for them alone to unravel the maze of book entries created by this huge octopus. Neither agency has the facilities to reach and point out the real facts. They need highly skilled assistance.

In New York State, for example, the Associated Gas & Electric system has 73,000 kilowatts of hydro power. This hydro power, from water belonging to all our people, has been used to extort revenues, through exorbitant electric rates, which revenues have in part been used to make political contributions or to corrupt public officials.

We have read recently in the Washington papers that the president of the local electric company was transferred to the Union Electric Co. of Missouri and Illinois to relieve the malodorous situation created by the charges of the St. Louis papers that the company officials were engaged in corrupting practices. The Securities and Exchange Commission was supposed to investigate this situation, but the real facts, as far as I know, have not reached the public. There is no reason for suppressing the facts or allowing these culprits to go unpunished.

No wonder the power consumers are overcharged $69,000,000 a year in Illinois, $14,000,000 a year in Iowa, and $21,000,000 a year in Missouri.

The Union Electric, a subsidiary of the North American Co., receives a substantial part of its electric energy from hydro plants located on the Mississippi at Keokuk, and on the Osage public power that should be used for the benefit of the people of that area. Technical assistance is needed to unravel the facts as to the company's investments, expenditures, political payments, and activities.

The North American Co. has also subsidiaries operating in Illinois and Missouri, which have been charged with engaging in atrocious political activities. The corrupting influences of the lobbies maintained by these companies in the State capitals is said to be beyond comprehension. Nearly a year ago in a speech here in the House I called attention to some of these activities, but they still go on. The Missouri Power & Light Co. receives a substantial part of its current from the Keokuk Mississippi Power's hydro plant. The Illinois-Iowa Power Co. has a hydro plant on the Illinois River at Marseilles, Ill., using Federal water, and also transmitting power from the Keokuk Dam in interstate commerce. I am firmly convinced that a thoroughgoing investigation will disclose wholesale corruption of public officials by the officials of these two companies, which are tied together by a subholding company, the North American Power Co.

To bring such activities to light, and to focus public attention, I propose a thorough investigation of these companies.

I also propose to do my best to see that before the demands of the State of Illinois for increased deliveries of water from Lake Michigan are given consideration, the beneficiaries of this water power desist from their evil and corrupting practices and operate within the letter and the spirit of the law. Regulation cannot be made effective until these vicious activities on the part of the Power Trust are stopped.

I am convinced that a thoroughgoing investigation of these four companies will reveal startling conditions. To allow such practices to continue unchecked is dangerous to our national security.

These are matters to be handled by the Federal Power Commission. So, instead of attempting to hamper the Commission by legislative penury or carping criticisms, we should let the world know that in these attempts to protect the electric consumers of the country the Commission has the enthusiastic backing and support of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, we have been listening to some interesting and able arguments with reference to governmental economy. For a few moments I wish to divert our attention to an outstanding instance of individual economy. It is an old saying and a true one that example is better than precept.

I think this is the first time during my service in the House that I have appeared on the floor with an article of exhibit, but in these days when so little accent is being placed on thrift and personal industry it seems proper to present this object lesson for its value in inspiration. Mr. Ripley thought it of sufficient importance to include it in his Believe It or Not. In its implications it carries us back to the spirit of the pioneers who made this country, a spirit that likely must be revived and renewed for the permanent preservation of this country.

There lives in my native city of Weatherford, Tex., Mr. G. A. Holland, a distinguished gentleman who on the 12th day of this month passed the eighty-first anniversary of his birth. It has been my privilege and pleasure to know him since my boyhood. He has served as president of a national bank in that city, was for many years its mayor, and for a quarter of a century the chairman of its school board. He has devoted a great deal of time to research and has preserved in a volume which he wrote and published the history of the pioneers who developed that section. He has equipped a most interesting museum which is keeping for posterity many historic relics of important significance.

These statements give briefly the background of explanation of the instance of unusual thrift to which I would call your attention. Mr. Holland has sent to me for presentation some homespun cotton towels of his own making. He wishes one presented to the wife of the President, one to the wife of the Vice President, and one to the wife of the Speaker. This statement of itself does not disclose the significance of these gifts or impress properly the lesson they involve. What I wish specially to call to your attention as an example of individual American industry are the facts that they were made after Mr. Holland had passed his eightieth birthday, that the most primitive methods were used, that they are the products of one man's effort, and that each was completed from the picking of the cotton in the field to the weaving of the fabric during the daylight hours of a single day. With his own hands he picked the cotton, with his own fingers he separated the lint from the seed, washed and cleaned the lint, carded it, spun it into thread, and wove it into a towel. He used the old spinning wheel and loom which his mother had operated in the early days of his youth.

Though an octogenarian, he is active and vigorous as a civic leader and presenting daily his fine example of self-reliant Americanism.

Is it not well to pause for a moment in these times in which we live to contemplate this splendid exemplification of the spirit that has made America great? Surely it should prove inspirational to the youth of our country. All our ills cannot be cured by legislation, but they can be cured if as a people we shall practice those time-honored traits of thrift and individual industry which have yielded us the civilization of a glorious democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to make a very important observation on the most important issue with which the country is confronted today.

In the first place, I want to pay a great tribute of respect to J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the men who work under him. They have done a fine job in picking up a number of men, although the number now is small, of the so-called Christian Front.

Some Members may think this is only a minor matter and does not amount to very much, but I assure you, as I have in the past, that when the whole story behind the arrest of these men will be told there will be an exposé of this so-called Christian Front and the Christian Mobilizers and other hoodlums that will startle the country.

I do not want to go too far back, but in the last 6 or 8 or 10 months every Congressman has been buttonholed to find out whether or not he is going to support the Dies committee; in fact, the newspapers have got some of the Congressmen afraid to say "no."

Anything I may say here is not personal. It is not in the form of criticism but in the form of constructive advice, as I have tried to give on previous occasions, but which the committee so far has not followed. I want to tell you now that I know something about this subject. Not alone was I responsible for the original McCormack committee, going way back to 1934, but I tried in vain to restore the McCormack committee in 1937, when some of the gentlemen on this floor on both sides ridiculed the proposition that un-Americanism existed in the United States. Some of them got up and cracked jokes about our looking for Nazis and Communists under the bed. I wish you would read the Record of April 8, 1937, and compare it with what we are asked to do now. I could not get anywhere then. Thirty-nine Members stood up for my resolution for the continuation of the McCormack committee at that time, and the rest of the Members sort of joked about the whole matter.

When conditions were becoming worse and our form of government was being undermined every day, I alone stood in the Well of this House and protested against the activities and propaganda of foreign agents, including Communists and Nazis. No; since my name was DICKSTEIN—now, take it for what it is worth—I could not seem to get the support of the Congress.

I drew a new resolution, which you are now sucking like a lollipop, to create the Dies committee. I drew that resolution and myself appeared before the Committee on Rules without any help from anybody. I fought for that resolution in the Rules Committee when I presented documentary proof of un-Americanism and the activity of foreign agents. I told you 2 or 3 years ago that there were hundreds of spies in this country. I have told you of propaganda material that is being transported from foreign shores to this country which is definitely not for the best interest of this country, and I have been ridiculed. Lo and behold! we passed the Dies resolution. I was not on the committee and I am not sore about it, and I do not want anyone to tell me I am making this speech just because I am not on the committee. More power to the Dies committee. They have done a good job to a certain extent, but they have not done the job the people expected them to do.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN McCORMACK, who was chairman of the original committee, would not have dared to issue statements attacking any individual or persons without having definite proof or positive evidence. The gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN McCORMACK, would not have dared to denounce individuals publicly and paint them as "reds" or "pinks" or "blues" or "whites" unless the evidence was there and the committee had approved the action of the group. In the last few months all we have had have been a number of front-page releases of a one-man committee or a two-man committee, without some of the persons concerned even having been given an opportunity to be heard and to defend their rights. Yes; the Dies committee has done some work, and I am proud of it, because I was the father of that resolution, but they should have done a still better job.

I now want to direct to you and to the members of the Dies committee who happen to be sitting on the floor this question: Why did you not investigate the Fascist groups in this country? I have seen press releases to the effect that you condemn nazi-ism, fascism, and communism. Fine; but you have not subpoenaed the men engaged in the activities which are the greatest evil to America, those connected with the Christian Front and the Christian Mobilizers and others. I could name the rest of them to you. You have allowed these men to organize in this country in one form or another to overthrow the Government. In my city last month and the month before blood was shed in numbers of instances because the so-called Christian Mobilizers, who were claiming backing from Father Coughlin, were parading and demonstrating on the streets of New York. There were bloody fights in that city, which has a population of 7,000,000 people.

This was because they preached racial intolerance and revolutionary tactics in condemning the Congress, the Government, and the President.

And, lo and behold, I recall 1937, when I appeared before you, asking you to give me further power to destroy this un-Americanism, how some Members got up on the floor and said, "We do not want any more investigations; we want laws." Why, the fact is that the McCormack committee brought out more laws than any other committee in the long past of such investigations.

As a result of the McCormack law to register foreign agents, we have convicted now dozens of men and women. If it was not for that law we would have had no law for their conviction.

So far the Dies committee, in its present report, has submitted nothing in the form of constructive suggestions for Congress to act. In August 1939 I gave the Dies committee the opportunity to do something constructive in investigating the Christian Front and similar groups. I exposed in the Appendix of the RECORD, volume 84, page 4042, this whole Fascist group, with the names of their leaders and their meeting places, in New York City at least. The very men who have been caught now by the Department of Justice with arsenals in New York are members of this group which, I feel sure, has other arsenals in other cities of our country. They have arrested only 17 now, but there will be 1,700 before the year is up. There are higher-ups in this proposition.

I am very fond of my colleagues on the Dies committee. I know they want to do the job, but why did they not follow up the suggestions I made in the RECORD? Why should they not have received the credit for this investigation of fascism, the Christian Fronters, the Christian Mobilizers, and other people who, under the guise of Christianity, are seeking to destroy America and what we stand for as a democracy?

I am not afraid of being criticized by any press because they might say I am attacking the Dies committee. Oh, let us have the Dies committee. Let us have the investigation, but do not let us pussyfoot. Let us stop this hullabaloo of press releases. Instead, let us attack the problem that is most essential to be attacked today—fascism in its worst form.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. As I recall the gentleman's remarks last year, he made nazi-ism his strongest plea for investigation. Has the gentleman changed from that, and is he now bringing up the question of fascism as his strongest plea for investigation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; the gentleman knows better than that, and furthermore, nazi-ism is a form of fascism. I think my friend from New Jersey was one of my good friends who laughed me out of court on the 8th of April about finding Nazis under the bed, and asking what I was afraid of and almost told me to sit down and pay no attention to it. If my friend is propounding the question whether I am trying to exempt any "ism," he is wrong. I am against fascism and communism just as much as the gentleman from New Jersey, and I want to call his attention to this fact—

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I do not think that answers my question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman asked me whether I had now changed my position.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That is right.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have never changed my position.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Your position is just the same today as it always has been?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. To get rid of all of them.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. The gentleman said the Dies committee should not get any credit for this action on the part of the F. B. I. in regard to those activities up in New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. None at all.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Who should get credit for that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Department of Justice did the job, not the Dies committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Has the gentleman from New York read the eight volumes of hearings before the Dies committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. My good friend, I have followed your reports and your hearings so religiously that if it came up as a question of law and if I were the court, I would strike out about 90 percent of it as incompetent and irrelevant.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. You would strike out 90 percent of it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. As not bearing on what we are seeking to investigate, which is un-American activities, as I proposed.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. But the gentleman knows that if he would leave in the other 10 percent he would have to come to the conclusion that the Dies committee also went into these Fascist organizations.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Have you subpoenaed any of them?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. We have subpoenaed many of them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Have you subpoenaed any one of those that appear in my speech in the RECORD of August 14, dealing directly with the Christian Front? You have not done it. Have you subpoenaed Father Coughlin?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let us get down to direct questions.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. One moment. I have told you that I have said you have done some good work, but you have been discriminating between one group and another, and you have not put them all on the auction block and destroyed them.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman knows that we have investigated Fascist organizations more than any other investigating committee in the entire history of the Government. Is not that true?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Then, it is evident that the gentleman has not read the eight volumes of testimony.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If you will read the record that I have pointed out to you—

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will in a moment. I just want to point out to you about 50 names that I have mentioned in my speech on un-American activities in this country that you now say are in a conspiracy against the United States. You have not subpoenaed any of those. You have subpoenaed Mr. Moseley, and you did a good job, but you did not follow through.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that we have done a good job, because it is the first time that he has said it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know I said that before.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I want to correct the distinguished gentleman from New York about some of the statements that he has made with reference to the special committee investigating un-American activities. The gentleman stated that the committee has not investigated Fascist groups. Evidently he has not read the record, because we had before us the national commander of the White Camellias, and we had before us the leaders of other organizations. Their names are set out in the report—Mr. Deatherage and Mr. Gilbert. We had a member of the Silver Shirt Legion, and we had Fritz Kuhn, the leader of the German-American Bund, and we had former members of many of these Fascist organizations. In August 1939 we received very positive testimony with reference to the fact that this Christian Front and the Christian Mobilizers were working hand in glove with the German-American Bund in this country. We made this information public, and it is a part of the record. When the gentleman from New York, or any other man, states on the floor of this House or elsewhere that this committee has shown favoritism in its investigation or that we failed to investigate fascism or Nazi activities, he is stating that which is not true and which cannot be backed up by the record. We understand also that the gentleman was a member of the McCormack committee, which did good work. We understand the gentleman's attitude about this present committee. I tell him that page after page and volume after volume of hearings of sworn testimony of the leaders of many of these so-called Fascist groups are a part of the record. I suggest to the gentleman that he stick to the truth.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish the gentleman would stick to the truth, and I wish he would confine himself to a more moderate way of speaking. The gentleman makes the charge that I am trying to exaggerate; that I am telling an untruth. He almost told the House that I am trying to camouflage or attempting to tell an untruth, and I resent that, because I do not intend to charge any Member of this body with bad faith. I am trying to present the facts as I see them. I say in answer that the gentleman's committee has not subpoenaed the real Fascist groups in this country, which are responsible for domestic fascism in the United States, tied up with foreign governments. I do admit that you subpoenaed the White Shirts and the Camellias, but that was only to scratch the surface. There is nothing personal about my criticism, and at the outset I said that I am not attempting to criticize any particular member of the committee; but that there is a time when a man must speak, and it is fortunate indeed that we still have free speech, even in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. And may I say to the gentleman that the records shows that we investigated many of these organizations and had the leaders, where they could be found, brought before us. We investigated and looked into many other organizations, practically everyone that the gentleman named in his speech of August, or whatever date it was, in 1939. We have voluminous records, voluminous statements of investigators, and material which they seized in connection therewith, which will be made public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is to be congratulated; but in this connection the prosecutions under the McCormack Act were brought about only after the expose by the Special Committee Investigating Un-American Activities had brought these matters to the attention of the country and the law-enforcement agencies of this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, that is all right.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to my friend.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman will recall that in 1933, when the first committee on un-American activities was appointed by the late Speaker Henry Rainey, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], myself, and many others then Members of the House who are not here today, brought the investigation and made a full report, a unanimous report, before the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] was a Member of the House. In that report, as a result of it, there were four bills introduced, one of which was a bill which I introduced, which made it a crime to advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence. What effect did that have upon this House? What effect did it have? I battled with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] to get it through the Judiciary Committee. Finally, we got it reported out of that committee, but we could not get it through the Rules Committee, and it was not until the last session that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Hon. JOHN McCORMACK, and the gentleman from Alabama, Hon. SAM HOBBS, offered an amendment that made it a violation to attempt to overthrow the Government of the United States by force or violence. I think the fundamental principles advocated at that time were brought out then. Is that not the fact?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is true, and I recall that you were in charge of the Pelley situation, and Pelley was convicted in Asheville, N. C. But let me say further, the Dies committee or its investigators did not even take the trouble to come over to the office to look over some of the files I had. I was willing to cooperate. In fact, I spoke to my good friend from Alabama and appealed to him to advise his chairman, if it would help this investigation. If we were going to have an investigation at all, let us not make it all pink or red or blue. Let us get them all. They have no business in this country.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KRAMER. I told the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], members of the new committee, that the files of the former committee were at their command, and not even once did they ask to be given any help.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not have time. I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman does not care to answer?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would be glad to, if I had the time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes to answer the question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. As you know, the Dies committee has met probably hundreds of days. We were meeting most of the time when the House was in session and also during the summer.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I cannot recall ever seeing the gentleman from New York at any of the meetings. I may be wrong, but would you tell us how many times you came over to the Dies committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I only came to the Dies committee once, not to be advised with or consulted with, but just as a spectator.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Are you drawing your conclusion that 90 percent of the testimony presented to the Dies committee is irrelevant just because of the one call you made on the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. That had nothing to do with the call at all.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will you tell us, then, how you drew that conclusion?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is not a conclusion at all and that is not an inference. When the Dies committee was created I sent some information to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and I got a letter 2 weeks thereafter from a third- or fourth-rate secretary stating that it would be called to the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] at a later date. It has not yet been called to the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. So what could I do? I was ready to serve the committee in any way possible, whether to advise or to show the records I had or tell them what was going on. I have gone through hell fire to get information for the benefit of my committee or any other committee which wished to take advantage of it, and you have not taken advantage of it. What is the use talking about it? I have the recorded records. I have advised one member of the committee that I had in my possession evidence sufficient to not only indict one but hundreds of people for un-American activities, seeking to destroy this Government. You have not taken advantage of it. Let us not go into all that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Why does not the gentleman turn over that material to the Dies committee? There are seven members of the committee and the gentleman knows where they sit every day. We would be very glad to see that material. I am sure the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] would be glad to see it, and I know I would be glad to see it. Will the gentleman turn it over the next day we meet?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now wait a minute.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman turn it over the next day we meet?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now, just a minute. Do not go so fast. These records are in code.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to turn them over to the committee now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have heard that story before and nothing came of it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman does not have to do it if he does not want to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You people have an idea that I am trying to steal credit from you. I tell you I do not care for any credit as long as I serve my country the best way I know how as a Member of this House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation bill we are now considering carries a total appropriation of $1,151,212,307. It provides for a year's program of over 30 separate agencies. It contains over 100 separate and distinct items. The entire bill has received extended and careful consideration by the Appropriations Committee of the House. Furthermore, any Member, under our rules, may offer an amendment to reduce, increase, or eliminate any particular item. So far as the House is concerned, this method of legislation is both fair and efficient.

However, when the bill goes to the President, a different situation is presented. He has no opportunity to give effective consideration to each item. He must sign or veto the bill as a whole. Because of this situation many improper appropriations are made which would not occur if the Executive had an opportunity to consider each item separately.

This raises the question of the necessity of a separate item veto in appropriation bills. Presidents Grant, Arthur, and Hayes during their respective administrations recommended a constitutional amendment giving the President such authority. I would, of course, favor such an amendment. However, it seems to me that the result can be accomplished without amending the Constitution.

In the hope of creating some interest in this problem, I have today introduced a bill along this line. It is purely suggestive. There are probably other and better methods of solving this problem legislatively.

I realize there is considerable dispute about the constitutionality of such procedure as a Presidential veto of separate items in an appropriation bill, but I hope to set out in my extension of remarks reasons which convince me that such legislation is constitutional.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement. The gentleman will probably be interested to recall that in the last session of Congress, or perhaps the session before, an amendment was offered in the Appropriations Committee to one of the appropriation bills and was adopted and reported out by the committee, which gave just the authority that the gentleman has in his bill. It created so much adverse feeling amongst Members and the public, however, that the gentleman from Virginia who is now speaking was severely reprimanded by his colleagues for slipping an amendment into an appropriation bill when the other fellows were not looking.

I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that there is no question about the fact that if the President had the right to veto separate items in appropriation bills that there would be found the finest opportunity really to effectuate economies and deficiencies in government; and when I say "the President," I mean any President, whoever he may be. Frequently he has to face the proposition that he must take it all or nothing; he must sign a bill carrying appropriations which he does not approve and which are not justified, or else scuttle some very worthy object in which he and the country are interested. If it takes a constitutional amendment to give the President this power, the Constitution should be so amended.

The gentleman from Iowa may also recall that the present Chief Executive has expressed himself as feeling that such power in the Executive would be a great help in trying to meet the economic situation.

Mr. GWYNNE. I believe there is not much question about the desirability of such procedure giving the President the right to veto items separately. As I remember it, however, the amendment offered to the appropriation bill to which the gentleman from Virginia referred carried with it the right not only to veto an item but to reduce an item. I doubt the constitutionality of such a provision.

The purpose of this bill I have introduced is simply to express the legislative intent that we consider each item in the bill a separate bill so far as the right of the Executive to veto is concerned. As I say, there is a great deal of difference of opinion as to the constitutionality of the measure and the proper way to accomplish it, but I believe it is a problem that some day will be solved.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. The constitution of the State of Michigan, and likewise the constitutions of many States, contains a provision authorizing the Governor to veto any one item in an appropriation bill. For a number of years until 1931 the Governor of Michigan, in the exercise of the power of vetoing separate items under that provision, also exercised the power of reducing items. In other words, if an item was larger than it should be, he reduced it. The Supreme Court, however, held that under the Constitution he had only the power to veto a separate item. He had the power to veto the entire item, but he could not reduce it. With the handing down of that decision, 90 percent of the benefit of the separate-item veto was gone. After that decision the savings were practically nothing.

I am assuming, of course, that if a constitutional provision of that kind were adopted Congress would have the right to override the Presidential veto by the usual two-thirds' vote.

Mr. GWYNNE. Oh, yes; that would follow, of course. If the President vetoed an item, the item would be sent back to the House and could be passed over the President's veto.

In regard to the matter of constitutional amendments, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that some 39 States have provisions in their constitutions allowing the Governor to veto items separately. Some States even grant power to the Governor to reduce items. This, as the gentleman from Michigan suggests, is a very valuable power.

I believe that perhaps the best approach to the problem in this Congress would be by way of a constitutional amendment. In the meantime I believe much good could be done by legislation giving the right to veto items separately.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GWYNNE. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. To illustrate the point I made with reference to the savings brought about in Michigan during the time the Governor exercised the power of reducing items as well as vetoing separate items—suppose Congress appropriated 50 percent more than the President recommended for a certain activity. Without the power to reduce the item the President would either have to veto or approve the entire item. The amendment, whatever it be, should specifically provide that the item should come back to Congress for reconsideration so that it could override the veto by the usual two-thirds' vote.

Mr. GWYNNE. Does not the gentleman believe that if the President had the right of vetoing separate items, especially an item that carried more money than he thought it should, that Congress then should have the opportunity to reduce it by its own action?

Mr. ENGEL. The difficulty is that the President does not act on a great many bills until after Congress has adjourned.

Mr. GWYNNE. Undoubtedly.

We usually think of legislation as an exclusive function of the Congress. The Constitution provides in article I, section 1 that "all legislative power herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." However, in article I, section 7, the Constitution also gives legislative powers to the President in the following language:

ART. I, Sec. 7. Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases, the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

The courts have held that this provision confers upon the Executive legislative power. The legislative power of the Executive is purely negative in character, and even that power of negation is subject to being overruled by a two-thirds vote of Congress. In brief, Congress is the sole repository of affirmative legislative power—that is, the power to say what the law shall be. The Executive has only the power to say that a certain measure adopted by Congress shall or shall not be the law. However, the right and duty of the Executive to exercise this negative power as his judgment dictates, is as clearly expressed in the Constitution as is the right and duty of Congress to perform its part of the legislative function. This is clearly borne out, not only by the language of the Constitution, but by the history of the veto power in Anglo-Saxon government.

The courts have, on many occasions, acted to protect this exclusive affirmative power of legislation in the Congress, and have declared unconstitutional certain laws wherein Congress had sought to delegate this power to someone else. However, the duty of maintaining the integrity of the Executive veto in a practical sense is left largely to the Congress itself. For example, in this present bill each separate item might be presented as a separate bill, or Congress might take the other extreme and put all the appropriations for 1 year in a single bill.

Many of the States in order to preserve to the executive an efficient and practical veto power have adopted constitutional amendments authorizing the Governor to veto an item separately. At least 39 States have such a provision. As opposed to this plan of protecting the integrity of the Executive veto by constitutional provision, the Federal Constitution leaves the matter to the good faith of Congress. The Constitution is, after all, not a mere compilation of legalistic rules. It is rather the pattern of a certain philosophy of government. It states general principles rather than detailed procedure. The fundamental object of the Constitution was to create a government of laws as distinguished from a government of men. It sought to accomplish this by dividing the powers of government among three independent and coordinate branches, each one of which should be a check on the other. It is to this fundamental principle rather than to any mere declaration in the Constitution that the citizen must look for the protection of his property, his liberty, and even his life. The Constitution does little more than to create these three branches and draw the line between them. It seeks to maintain that division for all time by setting up certain checks and balances. In the last analysis, however, the preservation of that form of government is not to be sought in any mere words written on paper, but rather in the acceptance of that philosophy of government of which the words themselves are the mere evidence. Such a government can only be maintained if each independent branch thereof recognizes the rights and duties of the others, and protects them as actively as it protects its own.

In the matter of legislative procedure, the Constitution simply says:

ART. I, SEC. 5. Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

This was intended as a broad and comprehensive grant of power and has so been recognized by all three branches of the Government. In construing the right of Congress to make rules, the Supreme Court has said, in United States v. Ballin (144 U. S. 1)—

It (the House of Representatives) may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained. But within these limitations, all matters of method are open to the determination of the House, and it is no impeachment of the rule to say that some other way would be better, more accurate, or even more just. It is no objection to the validity of a rule that a different one has been prescribed and in force for a length of time. The power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the House and within the limitations suggested, absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body or tribunal.

In that case, the Supreme Court called attention to the fact that the Constitution required the presence of a quorum, but set up no method of making this determination and that it was therefore within the power of the House to prescribe any method which would be reasonably certain to ascertain the fact. The right of Congress to make rules for the purpose of legislation is so broad and final that the Supreme Court accepts the complete law as it has passed Congress and been signed by the President and deposited with the Secretary of State, as the law which passed the House in accordance with their rules, and will not have recourse to the Journals of the respective Houses to prove the contrary.

Attention has been called to article I, section 7, which provides that—

Every bill shall be presented to the President of the United States.

Webster defines a bill, as follows:

A form or draft of a law presented to a legislature but not yet enacted, or before it is enacted; a proposed or projected law.

The term "bill" as used in the Constitution does not have any definite or technical meaning and apparently had none at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. It is simply a vehicle for carrying proposed law through the legislative bodies. There is no constitutional requirement that it shall be in any particular form, or that it shall contain any designated elements. It is simply a device by which the legislative will is expressed concerning suggested legislation. Neither usage nor constitutional limitation requires us to attach any technical or restricted meaning to the word "bill" which will prevent the carrying out of the real intent of the framers in adopting the Executive veto. We must, as in all construction of the Constitution, look to substance and not to mere form.

Article I, section 7, simply means that all legislation which has passed the Congress must, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President. The intent of the Constitution is that legislation shall be a result of the meeting of the minds of the Congress and of the Executive, the former affirmatively creating the legislation and the President exercising his right of affirming or denying. The method by which this result is to be accomplished is left largely to the discretion of Congress.

The House has already adopted substantially similar procedure in regard to private bills. Under our present rules we group a number of private bills in one omnibus bill. When such omnibus bill passes the House it is broken up again into private bills and each private bill goes separately to the Senate.

On a final vote on any bill each Member of the House votes for the bill as a whole. It is presumed that he exercised his right of affirmative legislation as to each item thereof during its consideration in the House. At least, the rules of the House give him that right. When the majority finally adopts a measure it does it with the understanding that it must all be affirmed or all vetoed by the President. There is no constitutional reason why the majority could not adopt the final result of its efforts with the understanding that items could be vetoed separately. All that is required is that there must be a mutual understanding between the executive and the legislative branches of government.

A somewhat similar situation has arisen between the legislative and judicial branches in decisions on the constitution-ality of separate parts of statutes. Sometimes these separate parts are so interwoven that neither can stand alone. In that case the unconstitutionality of one will carry all down. Many times, however, statutes contain separate provisions capable of operating, even though the rest of the statute is declared unconstitutional. The Court, in that case, is confronted with the question as to whether or not the Congress intended part of their work to remain if the whole were not held constitutional. In deciding that point the Court seeks to determine the intent of Congress in passing the statute. In so doing a separability clause; that is, a declaration by Congress that it is its intention that a part of the statute should survive, even though other parts are held unconstitutional, is usually respected by the Court.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in reading the printed hearings on the pending legislation I have found some very interesting testimony by General Hines, of the Veterans' Administration, relative to the practice of making compulsory deductions from the wages of civilian employees of veterans' hospitals for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, regardless of whether these facilities were utilized. I am happy to observe that, at last, General Hines has been made to realize some of the hardships that he has forced upon these employees of the Veterans' Administration and their families because of this practice.

I congratulate the members of the Appropriations Committee in exacting from General Hines the pledge that the practice of compulsory deductions for quarters, subsistence, and laundry shall cease except in cases where these services are actually used.

As I understand these hearings, General Hines has pledged that he will take immediate steps to abolish this practice. I shall await his administrative order with great interest. In the past I have found General Hines to be the most procrastinating procrastinator of all time, and I will not believe he is in earnest in this matter until his administrative order is issued. In the meantime, I shall continue to press for action on my bill, No. 2402, which would abolish this practice by legislation.

I note in the hearings that General Hines would much prefer that this matter be worked out as an administrative measure rather than as the result of legislation. If that is the case, then I warn General Hines to get busy, for most Members of this Congress believe as I do, and it would not be a difficult task to obtain the necessary number of names on petition No. 16, now on the Speaker's desk, which would bring H. R. 2402 to the floor of the House.

For the purpose of the record, many demands have been made upon General Hines to abolish the practice of making compulsory deductions for services not used by Veterans' Administration employees. Little attention was paid to these demands, most of which were made by Members of Congress.

More than a year ago I accompanied my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] on an inspection tour of the veterans' facility at Camp Custer. At that time we ascertained that the Veterans' Administration was actually making a profit from the deductions that were being made there. In fact, the net pay of many of the employees of that institution was $42.02 per month, as the result of the practice of compulsory deductions. In many cases these men were maintaining families in homes removed from the hospital reservation.

Following his investigation, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] made a report in writing to the Honorable JOHN RANKIN, chairman of the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee. I inserted this report in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 84, page 471.

So far as I know, the Veterans' Administration paid no attention to this report, which I now ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks at this point.

LXXXVI—26

The report follows:

FEBRUARY 4, 1939.

HON. JOHN RANKIN,
Chairman, World War Veterans' Legislation Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with your instructions, I visited the veterans' facility at Camp Custer, Mich., on December 8, 1938, and beg leave to make the following report:

1. Description: The Veterans' Administration facility at Camp Custer, Mich., is a veterans' hospital for mental and nervous cases.

2. Capacity: The official capacity of the hospital is 1,070. On December 8, 1938 (the date of inspection), there were 21 on the waiting list, 8 of whom had been notified to report.

Two new buildings are under construction at the present time with W. P. A. funds which will provide for 166 and 358 beds, respectively, within a year. The total capacity of the facility, including the 2 new buildings, will be 1,534. This will be adequate for present and immediate future needs.

While equipment is generally good, there are numerous beds which have been in use since the beginning of the hospital, in 1924, and should be replaced.

3. Ration and per capita cost: The average cost of the ration of the hospital is 45.4 cents per day. The ration includes the cost of preparing the food, overhead, etc. Guests and employees pay for meals. The total per capita cost, including ration, clothing, housing, overhead, and salaries, and all other costs, except capital investment, from November 1, 1937, to October 31, 1938, was $1.67. Out-patient cost was $1.94 per patient, including transportation.

4. (a) Nurses: Nurses work 5 days a week 7½ hours, and 1 day a week for 5 hours; holidays, 6½ hours a day. Each nurse works 1 month in 6 on night duty, with 1½ days off a week. Night nurses work 12 hours a night, or 66 hours a week. Nurses work on an average of 47½ hours a week. All nurses are under civil service.

(b) Attendants: Day attendants work on an average of 55 hours a week, while night attendants work on an average of 66 hours a week. The average for the year is 52.5 hours per week. These attendants are not under civil service, but expect to be on February 1.

5. Pay: Hospital attendants' pay ranges from $1,020 a year to $1,612 a year for head attendant. The majority are in the $1,020-per-year class. These attendants are compelled to live, as a rule, at the hospital, and the Veterans' Administration deducts $396 a year from their salaries for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, leaving the employee a net amount of $52 per month actual cash with which to support a family. After February 1, under the civil-service laws, there will be another deduction of 3½ percent, or approximately $3 a month, for retirement, leaving the attendant $49 per month.

I have a list of the attendants, showing the number of dependents, and wish to give the following illustration of a typical case:

Salary-----	$1,020.00
Quarters, subsistence, and laundry-----	396.00
Retirement deduction under civil service-----	35.70
Total deduction-----	431.70
Balance-----	588.30
Net pay per month-----	49.02

Dependents to support: Wife, four children—16, 14, 12, and 7 years of age, respectively.

There are numerous other employees receiving from $1,020 up to $1,260 per year with from one to six or seven dependents each. In one instance a messenger is receiving $1,200 per year with a $450 deduction, which will be increased to approximately $490 after the 1st of February, leaving him $710 a year or $60 per month with which to support himself, a wife, and six children.

I was amazed to learn that the Government is charging these employees with and deducting from their salaries $22.50 per month for a ration that costs the Government (in 1938) an average of 45.4 cents a day, or $13.62 per month. When employees take 30 days' leave, the Government deducts the $22.50 for the 30 days in addition to quarters and laundry, although the employee was absent and did not actually eat the food.

The Government makes the following profit from each of these employees a year:

Subsistence charged against the employee, 12 months at $22.50 a month-----	$270.00
Cost of ration, 335 days in the year, at 45.4 cents a day-----	152.90
Profit on each employee-----	117.10

While these employees are charged with quarters, subsistence, and laundry for themselves, they actually have to pay the same house rent, light, heat, and fuel for their families as though they lived at home. They also have to buy food, clothing, medical care, etc., for the family—all out of $49 a month.

*Congress, on the recommendation of the President, passed a minimum-wage and maximum-hour law. This law will ultimately require industry to pay a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour and will limit the hours of employment to 40 hours a week. These attendants, working for the United States Government, work as long as 66 hours a week with a year-around average of 52.5 hours a week, and receive as low as 37 cents an hour pay, out of which the Government takes $396 a year for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, and will take, after February 1, $36 a year for retirement pay. This little employee who is charged with this amount is paying the Government, according to these figures, $117.10 a year profit. There are 44 attendants with from 1 to 7 dependents in this class.

There are 52 attendants with an equal number of dependents receiving from $1,080 a year to $1,260 a year with $396 Q. S. L. deduction, plus a deduction of 3½ percent retirement pay after February 1. There are a total of 137 in this lower-paid employee class, each of whom contribute $117 to the Government each year in profit. The total profit the United States Government makes on these 137 low-paid employees amounts to $16,029 a year for Camp Custer alone. Multiply this by the number of hospitals or employees, and we find the United States Government, through the Veterans' Administration, is doing a land-office business with enormous profits, upon which there is no income or other tax levied.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, I watched Congress dish out $21,000,000,000 in various ways during the past 2 years. During the same 2 years I have seen that same Government take $32,000 in profits out of these low-paid employees at Camp Custer, who are trying to support from one to seven dependents on as low as $49 a month. I understand that this condition prevails in practically every similar institution in the United States, and that the total amount the Government takes out of these low-paid employees runs into thousands of dollars.

No employee should be charged more for ration, subsistence, or quarters than the actual cost. Married employees should not be compelled to live at the hospital unless absolutely necessary, and then they should be given additional compensation to enable them to live and support their family decently.

I was rather anxious to have Dr. H. G. Clarke, the superintendent, take me personally through the institution, which he did. We visited practically every ward. The fact that the patients knew Dr. Clarke and that Dr. Clarke knew the patients and their condition evidenced the fact that he had been making his inspection trips through the hospital frequently. Dr. Clarke has a personal knowledge of every detail in this institution and knows personally both patients and employees. Basing my opinion on the inspection of the hospital which I made, I think Dr. Clarke is doing a splendid job and is getting results.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT J. ENGEL.

Members of Congress who read the above report, I am sure, will agree that the practice of making compulsory deductions is unfair, undemocratic, and un-American. It is high time General Hines recognized this fact. It is gratifying to know that he has promised concrete action in the matter.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say to the gentleman there was no disagreement in the committee on the subject whatsoever, and, further, the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration was thoroughly cooperative in working this matter out. I might also add that the work of the gentleman who now has the floor, the gentleman from Michigan, was recognized in some of the informal discussions on the subject. The study he had made was given consideration, and it was recognized that the bill he had introduced was supported by a large number of the Members of the House, which was one of the factors taken into consideration in working out this problem.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. In connection with the gentleman's studies, can he tell us how much more this will cost than under the present method?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. The amount is contained in the hearings.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Those figures are given on page 613, part 1 of the hearings.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, in looking over the Budget for the fiscal year of 1941, there comes to mind the story of the young man who when asked if he could do what seemed an almost insurmountable task answered, "With the help of the Lord and a good outfield, I believe I can do it."

After rather carefully studying this Budget, I am afraid that Congress is going to need that same kind of help if we are to live up to the suggestions contained in the President's message.

All of us have heard the saying that "Good things come in small packages." Likewise it seems that big things are subjected to small attention. Tucked away, barely noticeable in the entire list of words in the dictionary we find a small word, "if," defined as "on the condition that." A little word, but what a meaning it carries. What a control it exerts over the everyday life and intentions of all people throughout the world. What an answer it oftentimes brings to a problem, well on the way to a favorable solution, only to find the machinery thrown completely out of gear and off direction because of a little insignificant word "if" to which we paid little heed.

And so it is with the Budget for the fiscal year 1941. No important document ever found so many "ifs" in the path of fulfilling its purpose as the present suggested Budget. This particular document certainly might well be termed an "if" Budget.

The President suggested in his message on this subject that the Congress do certain things in the way of needed appropriations for the coming year. He suggests expenditures of eight and four-tenths billion dollars, not including old-age insurance payments. His guess as to income for the year is approximately five and one-half billion dollars, leaving a deficit of two and nine-tenths billions. The present year the deficit will approximate three and nine-tenths billions.

From the two and nine-tenths deficit the President expects a decrease of seven hundred millions realized through a return of surplus funds from the various Government corporations. In addition, the message contemplates raising four hundred and sixty millions in new taxes. Should all Presidential expectations materialize, the net deficit for 1941 would be about one and seven-tenths billions.

Without close analysis the possibility of an eventual balancing of the Budget in the near future as pictured by the President's message seems bright indeed. But—and here is where the little "ifs" begin to creep into the whole scheme.

First. Will Congress make an honest effort to comply with the President's suggestions or has an example been set during the past 7 years of deficit financing and disregard for amounts spent which declares to the citizenry that we can spend our way to prosperity and that there is always more money where the first moneys came from? Are the people of our country in the frame of mind to expect more and more from the Government and are they organizing to get it? Have they given up in many instances of trying to help themselves by declaring to all, "Uncle Sam will take care of me"? When will they say, "We must not ask Congress for too much, let us not ask for more and better projects, let us not ask for subsidies, let us not get ours if the other fellow seems to be getting his, let us not get some for ourselves while denying that same privilege to others? Are we ready to call off pressure groups and say we will all take our reductions as they apply to each and every one of us as good citizens? The answers to these questions will dominate the action of Congress but is subjected to "ifs" of all kinds.

Second. Will the return from capital structure of the various Government agencies yield a seven hundred million item which can be deducted from expenditures? The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, stated in his remarks the other day that he did not know how this was to be done, that he had not figured it out, and that this was the headache of the executive branch of the Government. Certainly, if Mr. WOODRUM cannot tell us how this item will materialize, then no one else in the House knows, for we are all aware of the fact that the gentleman from Virginia is one of the most able and well-informed Members of the Appropriations Committee, and a Member who at the moment and for several years past has been intent in his efforts to start balancing the Budget. Accordingly one must conclude the whole item is an "if" proposition, and only time will bring forth the answer.

Third. Will Congress in an election year see fit to institute new taxes to raise the suggested $460,000,000 for national defense? At the moment the whole country is tuned to the thought that our Government must make additional preparations for an adequate national defense. It is true, they say, we need a larger standing army, a bigger navy, and more and more airplanes. All these items, naturally, are desirable only for defense purposes. Congress, too, feels the desirability of more efficiently setting our house in order from a defense standpoint. If the Government had sufficient funds available, there is little doubt but that ample appropriations for national defense would easily be forthcoming from the Congress. But if new taxes must be laid to meet the additional sums asked for defense, will the Congress so readily jump to check writing unless the money is borrowed? Furthermore, we cannot all forget the days of ups and downs within the ranks of our defense forces throughout the recent decades. Before the World War we needed but small appropriations for defense, but suddenly that war caused us to start on a terrific program of expansion. We never finished the task started because the war ended and we believed the world had been made safe from all future wars. The peace conference after the war saw us scuttle and destroy the greatest navy the world had ever seen had we completed our adopted program of that time. Yes; we did this in the interest of peace, and let it be said to the everlasting credit of America that our action was one of the most magnificent gestures toward peace that the civilized world has ever known. Following that peace agreement and up until very recent years, when trouble again started among our neighbors across the seas, national defense was a matter of secondary importance. But once more we find that expenditures for defense are again desirable and necessary, even to the point where taxes may have to be levied to meet such expenditures. But, again, will Congress lay these taxes "if" they can keep from it?

Fourth. Is the estimate on income for the fiscal year an accurate amount or purely a guess? History since 1932 records many guesses which have missed their mark by wide margins. Frankly, this item must be one of conjecture and hope together. We all hope; but "if" the guess is poor, hoping will not pay bills.

Drawing a conclusion, we face the undeniable fact that our Budget is based on "ifs," guesses, and hope. What the result of it all will be remains to be seen. The President now places the responsibility, after all these years, of saying to the Congress, "You can now spend the money, but be sure you know where it is coming from first, or levy taxes for it." Congress, of course, must do its part in an honest endeavor to travel the road that enables income and outgo to strike a balance. The Chief Executive must in no uncertain manner honestly make every effort to hold up his end of accomplishing this same purpose. To longer delay the day when we start to put our house in sound economic order is only to invite disaster. Should our Budget by every stroke of good luck conceivable be brought into position where the fiscal year of 1941 shows an operating deficit of one and seven-tenths billions, that will be but a step in the right direction.

We must realize that should this be done, and accepting as correct the figures presented, we, nevertheless, will find ourselves within $62,000,000 of our total authorized national debt limit. I hope we can stay within Budget estimates. Let us not stretch the rope any tighter in attempting to learn if we can survive under a larger debt load. Remember, our carrying charge on the public debt is now over a billion dollars annually and at the lowest interest rates in the history of our country. That amount of money was sufficient to run our great Government back in the days prior to the World War period. Of course, we do not want to go back to those days; but neither do we want to get too far ahead by mortgaging to the limit the future of the generations to come.

It is easy to talk, but talk will not balance a Budget. Lip service makes for promises that never seem to be fulfilled.

We must reduce our expenditures, cut out some of the unnecessary functions of Government and duplication of effort, and at the same time increase our revenue. This is a strong challenge to the Congress and the people of our Nation. But do it we must, and the sooner the better; for once we face the end of our borrowing possibilities, then it will be too late.

The President is on record as saying:

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policies. We must avoid that danger.

Those words are as true today as when uttered in 1933.

Members of the Congress, let us all sit tight, act courageously, and exert every possible and reasonable effort to start on the road toward balancing our Budget. A start is being made in this first appropriation bill. If we start in the right direction, we will contribute in no small measure to business recovery. Confidence in Government will again be restored, and we will be building on a sound and sane economic foundation. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the House when the letter of the President on the proposed Finnish loan was read. In the last few minutes I have been glancing over it. As far as I understand the letter from the President, it recommends that the Congress provide additional money for loans by the Export-Import Bank to foreign nations.

Reading in the press that the President would make a definite recommendation what should be done by the Congress in loaning money to Finland in its great emergency, I assumed that such a loan was urgent and that a request would be made upon the Congress to make the money available immediately. The Prime Minister of Finland is reported to have said that all the sympathy Finland had received would not help them one iota in carrying on the war or to carry the war to Moscow. The main point seems to be that if we are going to act at all we ought to act now. If there is this great need in Finland for immediate relief, which I agree there is, and if the Congress is to consider the issue at all, it should consider it immediately, and should consider the loan to Finland separately from all other loans for various sound reasons. Finland is the one nation that has paid its debts to the United States of America and deserves special treatment from the American Congress, representing the American people. I believe I am safe in saying that at least 90 percent of the American people are not only in sympathy with Finland in its hour of need and distress but would rejoice if the Congress could do something within its power to afford immediate relief to those in distress and suffering in Finland at the present time.

As I understand this recommendation—and possibly I have not had time to go into it carefully enough—it makes no direct recommendation but simply suggests that the Congress in due course should make provision for more money to the Export-Import Bank, which can then make loans not only to Finland but to other nations as well, not even naming the nations. I am not at all sure the Congress of the United States is prepared to set up an agency of the Government to loan money right and left to various nations. This is either an emergency recommendation or it is not. If it is an emergency proposal and applies solely for a loan to Finland, it ought to be considered immediately as involving a great emergency.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Why cannot Finland borrow money from the Export-Import Bank just as China has been doing? China borrowed $25,000,000. Such procedure would certainly be more neutral than to bring a bill into this Congress on that subject.

Mr. FISH. Finland has already borrowed $10,000,000 from the Export-Import Bank, or rather, has already made arrangements to borrow it. I do not believe the Export-Import Bank has that $10,000,000. Only $1,000,000 of the $10,000,000 has been used. However, I believe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has agreed to underwrite the balance, $9,000,000, whenever it is needed.

It has been very seldom that I have risen in recent months to uphold the administration on any of its foreign policies.

Ever since the President of the United States started, a year or more ago, to talk about quarantining certain nations I have been opposed to his foreign policies, and the whole Pandora's box of measures short of war, of determining the aggressor nation, of economic sanctions, and of provocative acts that are leading the United States directly into foreign wars. However, I am glad to rise now to uphold the President in part of the recommendation he has made to the Congress.

In his recommendation he states that no money shall be used to buy arms, ammunition, or implements of war. He uses the generic words "implements of war." I am entirely in accord with him on that principle. We in Congress must not finance foreign wars. We cannot remain neutral and still put up the money to send arms, ammunition, and implements of war to any nation in the world; but there is nothing inconsistent with American neutrality in making loans to foreign nations, particularly if the money is to be spent for food and clothing and other supplies except armaments. I may say that I am speaking for myself individually and not in my capacity as ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I want my Republican friends to know this. I want to do everything in my power consistent with American neutrality to help the Finnish people right now, before it is too late, not only by sending them foodstuffs and clothing but by sending them goods manufactured in the United States, including copper, gasoline, and trucks, or anything we manufacture, except arms, ammunition, and implements of war. This is what the President recommends, and I believe it is what the American people want us to do.

Finland stands by itself, not in the same category as other nations. Finland is the only nation in the world that has paid or is paying its debt to us. I was in Finland last summer and was deeply impressed by the democratic and peaceful spirit of the Finnish people, and, although I may be carried away with my sentiments, I say, "Thank God for little honest Finland." There is no more democratic people in the world than the Finns, and there is no nation in the world that is more friendly to the United States. The Finns are the frontline bulwark against Communism today and deserve both our sympathy and financial support. I am absolutely sure that 80 to 90 percent of our people want us to do something definite to help Finland in its hour of trial and distress as long as we keep within the confines of American neutrality and do not endanger America by becoming involved in any foreign wars.

Making foreign loans like this is nothing new. We have made such loans for years. We made loans to Finland back in 1919 for the relief of the Finnish people. We loaned them $8,000,000, and they have been paying installments on that debt regularly. I am in favor of canceling that debt, which amounts to approximately $8,000,000.

This proposal involves exactly the same principle, of lending money to a foreign nation to relieve distress and man's inhumanity to man.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Would the gentleman include airplanes in the category of manufactured goods?

Mr. FISH. I certainly would not, because airplanes are included in implements of war. The President uses those definite words, and it is understood at the State Department that airplanes are included in the category of implements of war.

That is why I am upholding the President's request. I regret he has not been more specific, that he has not come in here and asked for a definite sum of money for Finland instead of including other nations.

If we are to act, we must act now, because in a few months from now, when the snow goes and the summer months come, it is not conceivable that little Finland—little honest Finland, with 300,000 soldiers, can resist the might of Soviet Russia with millions of soldiers and great natural resources, for long unless she has funds to provide for her people and to feed and clothe her army. If they are to continue their resistance now and be able to oppose the Communists in the future, they must have certain resources at their disposal—not necessarily arms and ammunition, but trucks, gasoline, and many things that we produce and manufacture in the United States, including food and clothing.

I repeat, for the benefit both of the Democrats and the Republicans—I am speaking my own individual views—but I see nothing that jeopardizes American neutrality under our own laws and under international law in making a loan right now to Finland in order to help them in their present emergency. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, on January 3, at the beginning of this session of the Congress, I introduced a resolution authorizing a loan of $60,000,000 to Finland, an unrestricted loan, to meet the general requirements of that nation. Let me say at this point that if we have a will to help, it must be an unrestricted loan. An authorization to the Export-Import Bank or the R. F. C. will not help the Finnish nation.

The whole question is whether we are going to dilly-dally around about this question or whether we are going to have nerve enough to carry on negotiations with that nation as we have in the past. She has paid her debt and her credit is good.

This might seem like a foolish statement, but, officially, Finland is not at war. Yes; Russia has invaded Finland and we were a good neighbor to Finland. Previous to the time of that invasion we were carrying on peaceful negotiations with her, friendly negotiations with her, and the question in my mind is this: Is a neighbor a less good neighbor because some big bully picks on her? Finland is just as good a neighbor to us today as she was before she was picked on by Russia. If Finland was good enough to borrow in this Nation some $125,000,000 since the World War and pay back all but about $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, then she is good enough to lend to now when she is in need.

An Export-Import Bank loan or an R. F. C. loan will do no good. We have authorized a $10,000,000 loan to Finland under the Export-Import Bank and she has used less than $1,000,000. It is tied up with restrictions that make it impossible for her to use it to meet the best requirements of that nation. Let us stop dilly-dallying; let us bring a bill out here on the floor of the House and let us stand up and vote. If we do not want to help Finland, let us say so on the floor of this House. Do not kill it in committee. Let us bring it out and see whether we want to make a loan for the general requirements of that nation. If that nation wishes to use it for any purpose whatsoever, of course, that is up to her. We should not tell her how she is going to use the money we lend her.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman kindly explain for the benefit of the Members the rules of the Export-Import Bank and why this money is restricted?

Mr. HOOK. Because of the fact she must use it for the buying of civilian commodities in this Nation. She must lay down a bill of lading for every single, solitary thing she gets.

Let me make this statement. There is not any doubt, in view of the stress Finland is under now, that in all probability her currency may be affected. With a $60,000,000 loan she may be able to stabilize and protect her currency, but she cannot do that by a loan from either the Export-Import Bank or the R. F. C.

Mr. BLOOM. That is a general rule, and it is not a rule that is made just with respect to this loan to Finland. That is a rule of the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. HOOK. That is a rule of the Export-Import Bank; yes.

Finland is fighting the communistic red horde, the godless government, which threatens the whole civilized world. I have heard Members here propose the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Russia. I agree this is very commendable if it is offered sincerely. There is something that is far more important, however, and that is to help Finland with aid short of war to break the threat of the Stalin communism, which is a menace in all peace-loving democracies of the world.

If you are sincere in your attitude against communistic movements, then aid Finland in her valiant stand by voting for an unrestricted loan to be used for the general requirements of that nation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything about this Finnish situation at the present time until the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and his assertion that the President has made no specific recommendation. The President, of course, has not said in this letter to the Speaker that there is only one way to do this thing, and that it was to be done in that way or not at all. If he had, then there would have been a tremendous storm of criticism that the President is dictating to the Congress in what way it shall do a kindly turn to Finland. The President speaks of "ways" in his letter it may be done; that more money might get to Finland at this time; and it appears to me that he is rather specific in this. In other words, he expresses a preference, saying that he thinks this is probably the better way. The letter reads that the most reasonable approach would be action by Congress authorizing an increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank and authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase loans and securities from the Export-Import Bank to enable it to finance the exportation of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products not including implements of war. The gentleman from New York does not feel exactly as I do about the recent neutrality debate and action had in the House. Taking the other side from him, I stated that I thought we were passing an act to help us remain neutral; in fact, legally neutral; that that was the best way to keep this country out of involvement in this European situation. I still think that, and I do not want to do anything here that would run counter to the statements some of us made.

We have already under the law loaned Finland $10,000,000, or have given them credit in this country for $10,000,000. That money has been placed already to their credit, and they are using it for the purchase of agricultural surpluses. When they get those agricultural surpluses on the high seas, they can trade them, if they do not need them in Finland, to anyone they please, besides the United States, or its manufactures, for whatever implements they think will be the most helpful to them at the present time. As far as I am concerned, and I speak for myself alone, I would not like to see the United States Government under the direction of the Congress start making direct loans to any country involved in this war. [Applause.] We say that we want to help Finland. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that 90 percent of the people or probably a larger percentage of the people look with horror upon the rape of Finland by Russia, and I believe they are in sympathy with Finland, but if we make a direct loan out of the Treasury to Finland authorized by Congress, then we may have other little friends who would get into trouble, and some of the nations that now appear to be strong, may in defense of their rights and territories become weak.

Many questions are involved. The American people are the most peaceable and the most conservative people upon the face of the earth, and I am thankful for that every day, but they are also an inflammable people when goaded to a certain point by cruelties and barbarity. By our action and by our words in this House and in the Senate and in the executive branches of the Government I want this country to be as temperate as our feelings will allow us to be. Of course, we are legally neutral, but no law, no body, can control the spirit of people. Therefore, in reply to the gentleman from New York, I say that the President has made a specific recommendation to the Congress—not saying that this is the only way to do it, but that it is within the discretion of Congress, as he said in his letter, to do as Congress pleases, but he suggests that this is probably the best way to do it. As far as these loans are concerned, let me repeat what I said in a rambling way a moment ago. If Finland gets credit for agricultural surpluses in this country to the extent of 10 or 15 million dollars through the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and does not want those agricultural products, she can trade them for other products she does want, and it is no business of ours, and she can take the money she gets from the sale of those agricultural products and divert it for any other purpose.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Did Finland apply for this loan or is it being agitated simply by some Members of Congress?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, may I answer that?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I prefer to answer it myself than to not answer it. Frankly, I do not know whether the ruling heads of Finland have made a direct application, but I know their representatives in the United States have been very inquiring about this matter.

Mr. MASSINGALE. They would take the money, in other words?

Mr. RAYBURN. They would, and I think the American people would like to see them get it. If it does not involve the sale of war materials, I think the American people would be glad to have them get it, and I think it would in no way involve us any more in the quarrels of Europe than we are involved at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we had tentatively agreed that the Committee should rise at 4 o'clock, but some other matters have arisen which have prolonged the debate. I had tentatively promised to yield time to the gentleman from Indiana, so with the acquiescence of the gentlemen on the minority side, I now yield 35 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, in the old "horse and buggy" days—an era that had its virtues as well as its shortcomings—"Bring 'im up short" was an expression commonly used in rural Indiana, where I was born and raised at a time when the wilderness was more a fact than a memory.

When a fractious horse was bent on running away, someone would yell to the driver in the buggy, "Bring 'im up short!" and the driver would dexterously jerk the reins, applying all of his muscle to the operation, bringing the horse up on his haunches in an almost perpendicular position. This was a good thing for the horse, as it taught him discipline and obedience. It was a good thing for those in the buggy, for it tended to insure their safety and security. The mouth is a tender part of the horse's anatomy and the probabilities always were that after being brought up short a few times the most fiery charger would become docile and obedient.

I am recalling this pastoral of my boyhood because I think it conveys a lesson that ought to be applied right now to our national appropriating and debt situation. I would like to see the administration and Congress and everybody connected with the preparation and passing of laws brought up short on the question of runaway spending. Statistics and data I shall present will be submitted with the view to leading our public officials and the country to a realization of how far we have really gone in piling up the most stupendous debt of all time and how vitally necessary it is that we shall call a halt and make a start toward a balanced Budget.

I have a misgiving that my feeble muscle will not be equal to the task of bringing Congress and the executive establishments up short in this matter of prodigious spending. My associate on the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, BOB RICH, has patiently and untiringly devoted himself to that worthy undertaking and his muscle has failed. During the last regular session of Congress, especially, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] every day staged a little bring-'em-up-short performance all his own in the House of Representatives.

Regularly as clockwork, as soon as the reading clerk concluded his intonation of the daily Journal, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would rise in his place, strike a bellicose pose, and call the attention of the House to the orotund proportions of the national debt and the luxuriant growth of the national deficit. Every day witnessed exactly the same exhilarating proceeding. As soon as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would begin reading from the Treasury statement the membership, or a large part of it, would start to give him the raspberry. As the boos swelled in volume the voice of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] correspondingly rose in crescendo. In the final episode, with jeers and catcalls almost raising the roof, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would yell in a voice that ordinarily could have been heard as far as the Washington Monument: "Where are you going to get the money?" and having put that shot across the congressional bow he would sit down, his face beaming with satisfaction.

There are fundamentals of government on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and I never could agree, the irreconcilable differences between a Hamiltonian Republican and a Jeffersonian Democrat, but I join him in wondering "Where are we going to get the money?" and I shower upon him my warmest accolade for the public service he renders in using his leather lungs to call attention to the gargantuan proportions of our national debt and our national deficit.

HOPE EXPRESSED THE HARRISON RESOLUTION WILL NOT BOG DOWN

I am moved to speak at this time and in this way because I am afraid that Senator PAT HARRISON's plan for a joint committee of 24 Members of Congress—12 Representatives and 12 Senators—to coordinate revenues and expenditures will bog down in the House, and that would be a disaster which I trust will not happen. I hope and pray that the House leadership will not discard Senator HARRISON's proposal out of hand, without benefit of clergy, or treat it too lightly. It may be crude and it may need to be perfected by amendments, but it contains the germ of something worth while; something very fine and good; something that may become useful to the country in opening the way to a more businesslike administration of our national fiscal affairs. Its primal virtue would be in bringing into closer and more harmonious relations the revenue-raising and revenue-spending branches of our National Legislature. In the case of a business establishment, if the sales department is stymied by hard times and nothing is coming in, the purchasing department sensibly decides that now is not the time to give the president a new automobile or purchase a statue of the founder of the company for the front office. Something like the same common-sense coordination and cooperation for our National Government is envisioned in the Harrison proposal. The Harrison committee would cost nothing and it would create a large cohesive group to fight for balancing the Budget. I cannot see how such a committee could possibly do any harm, and I can conceive much good coming out of it in the years to come. The Harrison resolution has passed the Senate and is now pending before the House Rules Committee. I hope the House leadership will not oppose it and throw cold water on it, and that we shall be permitted to vote on it.

I am all the more cordial toward Senator HARRISON's resolution because it embraces an idea I have long had in my own mind. Last August I gave out an interview proposing the creation of a committee on fiscal planning, "to facilitate the balancing of the Budget and to keep it balanced." At that time I gave the press the following statement explaining the proposition:

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON FISCAL PLANNING

The new Committee on Fiscal Planning, or, in short, the Planning Committee, which I now for the first time propose, would establish a mechanism which would enable the Government to do for itself what every prudent businessman does in his own business. The businessman, if he is wise and forelooking, avoids going into debt, by first making a survey of prospective revenues and then cutting his cloth accordingly, so as not to exceed his income. The Planning Committee I suggest would have seven members—the chairman, ranking majority member and ranking minority member of the House Committee on Appropriations, the chairman, ranking majority member, and ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee; and the Director of the Budget. The Ways and Means Committee raises the revenues to support the Government; the Appropriations Committee appropriates the revenues, and the Director of the Budget coordinates the spending agencies. If these seven officials would get their heads together, they might accomplish much for the cause of economy by planning a campaign to make the revenues cover the appropriations annually and thus wipe out the deficit—a consummation devoutly to be wished. There is now no cooperation whatever between the revenue-raising and appropriating agencies. While such a planning committee would not be proof against big spending, it would be, I believe, a constant force operating in favor of a balanced Budget and a measured economy, especially if its plans are given widespread publicity so as to attract the support of a wholesome public opinion. A report from such a committee that a particular Treasury-raiding bill would be against the program of the Planning Committee and contrary to the public interest might have a deterrent effect in preventing unnecessary expenditures. It is a plan worth trying.

At this point in my remarks I shall present to the House the full text of the resolution I have introduced for the creation of a Committee on Fiscal Planning.

It is as follows:

Joint resolution to create a Committee on Fiscal Planning

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a Committee on Fiscal Planning, to be composed of the chairman, ranking majority member, and ranking minority member of the House Committee on Appropriations, the chairman, ranking majority member, and ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, and the Director of the Budget.

SEC. 2. The Committee on Fiscal Planning is directed to make a study of United States Government finances with a view to coordinating revenue and spending activities, reducing appropriations wherever it is feasible to do so, and ultimately eliminating the gap between Federal revenues and Federal expenditures.

It will be noted that my proposal does not embrace any Senators in its make-up. This is due to the fact that revenue and appropriation bills necessarily originate in the House and some sticklers for constitutional procedure and the prerogatives of the House may insist that my plan is preferable to that of Senator HARRISON, but my own reaction is that since the committee's functions are to be only advisory it may be wiser to strive for the wider accord which may be accomplished by joining a group of Senators with a group of Members of the House, thus bringing into closer relations a large group associated with the money-raising and money-spending functions of government.

I propose now to discuss a subject which I believe is uppermost in the minds of our people and that is the mounting cost of government. At the outset I want to make it plain that in every fiber of my being I am a Democrat, an old-fashioned liberal—a Jeffersonian Democrat, if you please—and I forswear none of my cherished and ingrained Democratic principles when I criticize big spending. Rather, on the contrary, I believe that I reassert orthodox and true Democratic principles, for the tutelage of Thomas Jefferson upheld and extolled economy as a primal virtue to be scrupulously applied in government. Our present national administration has done enough fine, constructive things to justify an honored place in history, such as its superb handling of the banking situation, the guaranty of bank deposits, the suppression of blue-sky vendors, the saving of innumerable farms and city homes from the sheriff's hammer, its care for the naked and starving, and so forth, in all of which splendid achievements I have been happy, within my limitations as a Congressman, to be a contributing factor. I yield to no one in my warm personal regard for Franklin D. Roosevelt and my admiration for his noble heart and humanitarian purposes, and I am not going to enter upon any hair-splitting dissertation to try to fix the responsibility for phenomenal spending, because I believe the executive and legislative departments are about equally responsible. All of the Members of Congress and all of the executive officials with whom I am acquainted come within the scope of my encircling love and I am not going to criticize any of them.

But I am fed up on big spending. I have voted against $8,000,000,000 of appropriations during the 10 years I have been a Member of Congress, and as I look backward my only regret is that I did not vote against more of them. I am sick and tired of seeing money scoop-shoveled out, as if the Treasury has no bottom. I believe that excessive spending not only atrophies business but weakens our national security and safety. Jefferson held that public debt leads to misery and decay; and I shudder when I think of the mortgage big spending is placing on our children and our children's children down to the remotest generation. I am genuinely fearful that unless the bung hole is plugged, the time is coming when we shall run headlong into the awful evils of (1) inflation, (2) repudiation, or (3) national bankruptcy, and then, unless the brakes can be applied, something still worse.

Whatever justification there may have been at one time for big spending as a stimulant to business and recovery, no longer exists. If we have a few more spurts of colossal spending, business, already in a state of suspended animation, will pass out with as loud a groan as its anemic condition will permit, and recovery, always skittish and hard to catch, will definitely and finally conclude that its place is not around the corner.

Our national debt has pirouetted upward to staggering proportions, and many thinking citizens, amazed and bewildered by present and continuing demands on the Treasury, are beginning to express wonderment and apprehension over where big spending is leading us.

A LOOK AT THE SPENDING PICTURE

Let us take a look for a moment at the spending picture. I agree with the late Speaker Reed that ours is indeed a billion-dollar country, but I am loath to believe that it is a thirteen-and-a-half-billion-dollar country, measured in terms of annual appropriations, especially when our expenditures are running three and a half billion dollars in excess of our revenues, and there is no way under heaven, on the basis of our present taxation, to make tongue and buckle meet until the heavy spending subsides. The appropriations of the recent regular session of Congress, including permanent annual appropriations and reappropriations, make up the amazing total of $13,480,216,000.39, the record of all peacetime appropriations in American history.

The Committee on Appropriations has authentic appropriation figures for every year since 1873, and we have an exact gage of how appropriations have been running year by year for 67 years. I know it will make the eyes of the big spenders bug out when I quote figures taken from the records showing how spending has pyramided recently, and if those who analyze these figures do not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Bob Rich, that we are headed straight for national bankruptcy unless a halt is called, I shall despair of the accuracy of their reasoning. In 1880 the population of the United States, as shown by the census taken that year, was 50,155,783. The unofficial estimate of the population in 1940 is 130,000,000. Population in the six decades has increased a little more than two and a half times. Now let us take a look at the appropriation chart. In 1880 Congress appropriated $338,865,031.29 to run the Government. In 1940 the appropriations total $13,480,216,000.39. In other words, while population has increased two and a half times the appropriations are 40 times greater in 1940 than in 1880.

AN AMAZING COMPARISON

And here is a comparison that will make the spenders jump: The total appropriations made by the United States

Congress from 1890 to 1910, a period of 20 eventful, expanding years in the history of our great American commonwealth, amounted to $12,982,473,918.85.

The appropriations made at the single session of Congress that adjourned on August 5, last, amounted to $13,480,216,000.39. By a little process of simple subtraction we find that Congress at the recent session spent $497,742,081.54 more than the total appropriations of the 20 years from 1890 to 1910. Lest there may be doubting Thomases who will question these facts, I quote from the committee records the official figures of appropriations for the years mentioned:

1890.....	$395,430,284.26
1891.....	463,383,480.46
1892.....	524,381,815.60
1893.....	507,376,397.53
1894.....	519,535,293.31
1895.....	492,477,759.97
1896.....	496,982,585.01
1897.....	515,852,380.27
1898.....	528,735,878.33
1899.....	892,656,775.65
1900.....	698,912,982.83
1901.....	705,653,298.01
1902.....	730,241,862.51
1903.....	801,682,773.42
1904.....	752,741,659.25
1905.....	781,288,214.95
1906.....	818,191,283.26
1907.....	881,953,644.09
1908.....	919,163,823.18
1909.....	1,006,431,726.96

Total..... 12,982,473,918.85

And here is another comparison that will curl the hair, metaphorically speaking: The total appropriations of the United States Government from 1873 to and including 1917, the year we entered the World War, were $27,946,170,839.85. The last regular session of Congress appropriated approximately half as much as was appropriated during the entire 44 years from 1873 to 1917!

The year 1890 was another census year. The total population as shown by the census that year was 62,947,714, almost half the population that is estimated in 1940. The total appropriations for 1890 were $395,430,284.26. The appropriations made at the recent session for the year 1940 were in amount 35 times greater than the appropriations for 1890. In 1900 when the next census was taken the appropriations were $698,912,982.83 in a country of 75,994,575 population. With 50,000,000 more people, or less than 70 percent increase in 1940 compared with 1910, the appropriations for 1940 exceed the appropriations for 1910 nineteen times. Skipping to 1930 when the official census showed America with a population of 122,775,046, only about 7,000,000 less than the official estimate of the 1940 population, the appropriations were only about one-third of the appropriations of the recent session, or in other words $4,665,236,768.04 against $13,480,216,000.39.

Peacetime regular appropriations for Army and Navy show the following growth:

Army: 1875, $27,788,500; 1917, $267,596,530; 1940, $723,187,871.

Navy: 1875, $20,813,946.70; 1917, $313,300,555.84; 1940, $773,049,151.

In presenting these figures I am not challenging the wisdom of adequate national defense, which appears to be necessary in a war-torn world, but not all of our appropriations have as good justification as our defense appropriations.

COMPARISON WITH CIVIL WAR ERA

The total expenditures of the United States Government for the 5-year Civil War period from the fiscal year 1862 to the fiscal year 1866, inclusive, were $4,173,189,827. This included the appropriations necessary to finance the greatest war in history up to that time. Yet for the year 1940, when the United States is at peace with the entire world, our appropriations of $13,480,216,000.39 are more than three times the expenditures of the Civil War period. Could any national treasury, even the treasury of the richest nation in the world, stand a continuation of such a strain?

I shall be unfortunate if I may have created the impression that the Appropriations Committee is responsible for permitting appropriations to be pyramided to dangerous heights. Wherever the fault rests it certainly is not primarily with the Appropriations Committee. As now constituted, the Appropriations Committee, under the leadership of that grand elderly statesman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], is an economy-minded committee, and it stands ready to assist him in bringing the big spending program to an end. I make this statement flat-footedly and I will stick to it, but always with the reservation that the committee will do whatever may be necessary to relieve human distress. In this great land of ours, dedicated to Christian ideals, people must not be allowed to go hungry and naked.

APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE ECONOMY-MINDED

The Committee on Appropriations, like every other standing committee of the House, is a creature of Congress, subject to congressional direction. If the House, whether pursuant to Executive recommendations or on its own initiative, passes bills authorizing the expenditure of vast sums of money, the Appropriations Committee is helpless. It cannot go on a sit-down strike and refuse to make the appropriations that are specifically authorized. Heat vigorously applied from above would not permit that. It sometimes ignores authorizations unless the pressure gets too hot, and sometimes it appropriates only a part of the amounts that have been authorized and gets away with it. But always the House, being the creator of the Appropriations Committee, has the whip hand, and it can force the committee to live up to the authorizations.

Authorization bills are the bete noir of the economist. Those bills are eternally knocking the economy program into a cocked hat. In these days, when the United States Treasury is as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard, the language of an authorization bill is a laugh. It reads:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

And so forth. Is there anyone in America with imagination elastic enough to lead him to believe that there is as much as a thin dime in the United States Treasury that is not "otherwise appropriated"?

And right here let me reiterate that the President is not alone responsible for all of our astronomical appropriations. Congress must bear a share of the blame, and the vehicle through which Congress usually acts when it wishes to put a drain into the Treasury is the authorization bill.

EVILS OF BLANK CHECK

This brings me to the "blank check." One of my first and foremost recommendations is that Congress shall eschew henceforth and forevermore the blank-check appropriation. Every dollar appropriated by Congress should pass the keen scrutiny of the Appropriations Committee and be justified by competent evidence. In the last few years vast sums have been appropriated en bloc to administrative officials in the form of so-called blank checks, and as a result we have witnessed time after time the allocation of funds through administrative allotments for purposes which the Appropriations Committee had previously flatly rejected. This is subversive of our theory of government. Under our constitutional system appropriation measures must originate in the House, and the House should assume full responsibility.

Summarizing, I recommend:

First. No blank checks.

Second. No further appropriations except for the most essential purposes until the Budget can be balanced.

Third. The creation of a committee on fiscal planning to facilitate the balancing of the Budget and to keep it balanced.

When I say that for the time being, at least until we can get the Government a little way out of the hole, we should suspend appropriations for nonessentials, I am giving what I believe to be one of the most salutary bits of advice I have to offer. When I speak of nonessentials I refer to such improvements as reclamation projects, roads, river and harbor construction, public buildings, and a large variety of other similar projects and improvements which, however desirable in flush times, can wait, now that our Government is on the edge of bankruptcy. On the one hand we have been spending enormous sums on reclamation projects to bring more land into productivity while on the other hand we have been killing little pigs and converting them into soap grease and plowing under every third row of cotton. How can we reconcile such inconsistencies?

And roads. Although the country is now beribboned from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf with hard-surfaced highways, there are those who would empty the mythical contents of an empty Treasury and place a bondage of debt on our great-grandchildren to build still more roads, forgetting that the cement dealers and equipment men get a large percentage of every dollar spent for road building.

SAVINGS BY ELIMINATING NONESSENTIALS

From 1933 up to and including the fiscal year 1940 our Federal appropriations for roads amounted to the prodigious total of $2,884,700,000. This includes both regular and emergency road funds. Of this amount, $1,893,700,000 has been disbursed through the Public Roads Administration of the Department of Agriculture and $991,000,000 through the three emergency agencies, W. P. A., C. W. A., and F. E. R. A. I wonder how many of our citizens can realize the magnitude of this outlay of the taxpayers' money on road building during the last 7 years. Perhaps it can be fairly well understood from the fact that it amounts to more than $4,000 for every day since the birth of Christ. In the interest of the retrenchment so vitally needed to reassure business and to bring about recovery, public-building construction can well wait awhile, as can improvement work on rivers and harbors.

There is nothing essential about reclamation projects, public roads, river and harbor works, and public buildings. The wise course is to put these and other nonessentials over without prejudice until better times. We have constructed public buildings all over the United States during the last 6 years but on top of these lavish expenditures we now find a demand for a new building program so that every member of Congress may have another new building in his district. In the name of common sense I do not know why every Member of Congress should get a new post-office building any more than a lighthouse or a Federal penitentiary. The needs of the public service and not the wants of suffering Congressmen, should be the sole guide in establishing these buildings, and there are congressional districts—plenty of them—where it is cheaper, more sensible, and just as satisfactory to the public to rent post-office quarters as it would be to invest a relatively large amount of Federal funds in a building not justified by the widest stretch of the imagination.

I have tried to show you the big spending picture. It is a sorry picture. It is a frightening picture, when we consider that we are already right up against the statutory debt limit. My motive in speaking is to call the attention of Congress, the executive establishment, and the country to what I believe is a very dangerous trend threatening a national debacle, and to recommend the enactment of the Harrison resolution as a possible means toward getting our national finances in better order. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a speech given by Colonel Knox at Chicago.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WHELCHER and Mr. TENEROWICZ were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the remarks I made this afternoon in Committee I may include a letter printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 84, page 471, from my colleague from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], to the gentleman from Mississippi, the Hon. JOHN RANKIN, chairman of the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and include a few extracts and tables from the hearings.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FISH was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RISK (at the request of Mr. SANDAGER), for the balance of the week, on account of important business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

J.) Post, No. 170, American Legion, on behalf of the continuation of the Dies committee; and also letter from A. C. Clark, president, the Industrial Association of Perth Amboy, Perth Amboy, N. J., advising that the members of that association feel that the Dies committee has done commendable work in investigating conditions and believe that their work should be continued for the next year; to the Committee on Rules.

6175. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Milwaukee County Industrial Union Council, Milwaukee, Wis., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the Dies committee; to the Committee on Rules.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, may we listen to Thy sovereignty over the world. The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. For He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in.

Heavenly Father, undisturbed by haste and unvexed by disappointment, let Thy Holy Word speak to us. Make plain to us that which we have not discerned of Thy truth and wisdom. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ACQUISITION OF FOREIGN CURRENCIES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] quoted a very serious charge against the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve System, which, if true, should have immediately received the attention of Congress and especially the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I am a member. I took the matter up with Mr. Eccles, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and he gave me a reply which shows that the charge is wholly unfounded.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert Mr. Eccles' reply to the charge in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
Washington, January 16, 1940.

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PATMAN: This is in response to your telephone call of this morning while I was in a Board meeting, in which you asked for an expression from me as to the accuracy of some statements made by Congressman ALEXANDER, of Minnesota, on the floor of the House, the remarks being printed on page 331 and following in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In the course of his remarks Congressman ALEXANDER referred to an article by a Mr. James McMullin, said to be a writer in New York, alleging, in substance, that the Federal Reserve banks are acquiring British and French paper currency. The quotation from Mr. McMullin's statement includes the allegation "that the New York Federal Reserve Bank is accepting British and French paper currency—on order from Washington—at the pegged rate of 176½ francs to the pound sterling. * * * Insiders are convinced that the amount is already substantial and steadily increasing. * * * Therefore we are in effect accepting large quantities of paper of dubious future worth at a valuation set by the nations that issue it."

While I already knew that operations of this kind were not being engaged in, I have checked the matter directly with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and can say that the reported statements by Mr. McMullin, unhappily repeated by Congressman ALEXANDER, are made out of whole cloth. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York or any other Federal Reserve bank is not acquiring either francs or pounds at a fixed rate or at any rate. This has likewise been true for some time in the recent past.

May I say that I am gratified that you brought to my attention the remarks of Congressman ALEXANDER, so that the erroneous statements referred to could be promptly corrected. I am sure Congressman ALEXANDER and yourself will be equally relieved to learn the truth of the matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. S. ECCLES, Chairman.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order today, Calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire or intent to cumber the RECORD, but in view of the many inquiries I have received from Members of Congress and others with respect to the source of a certain quotation I used in the eulogy delivered on the death of our late associate and colleague from Colorado, John Martin, running something like this—

That man is great and he alone
Who serves greatness not his own—may I say that that is taken from a poem written by Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton, Earl of Lytton, otherwise known as Owen Meredith, and the poem is A Great Man.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Iowa League of Women Voters in regard to the reciprocal trade pact program.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the Sino-Korean People's League of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short radio address by Mr. Leonard Farmer on the subject of electric-light and power rates.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to the Treasury statement of January 11, showing we have gone in the red $2,189,835,268. Since July 1 last that means a deficit of close to $4,000,000,000 this year. Terrible! Horrible! Awful! I have always wondered where we were going to get the money to meet current years' deficits, but it looks to me now as though there is a ray of hope in this direction, and I congratulate the leaders on the majority side and on the minority side on the result of their efforts on this particular independent offices bill. I believe the intent in the minds of these men is to try to economize in Government expenditures. I have always been for it and will continue to be. Will you Members of Congress do the same at this session? Nothing can be more to the welfare of America than efforts to try to save this Nation from bankruptcy, and I hope the Members of this body on both sides of the aisle will follow their leaders on this particular bill. If they do, I am sure there will be light ahead and that eventually this party which has created such a huge national debt will be able to get out of it somehow, and that we will be able to keep from going into bankruptcy, stop the wild orgy of spending, and we can do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GARTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I made last Saturday evening.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution that was passed by the Wayne and Holmes County Automobile Dealers' Association of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Daily Argus Leader of Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two respects, one to include an article by George W. Peavy, and the other to include an article by Harry Emerson Fosdick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922), making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall continue for 3 hours today, the time to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7922, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I presume there is no one here who has a higher regard for the Committee on Appropriations and its subcommittees than I have. I realize the very, very difficult problem that is ahead of it and I sympathize with that problem. Just so far as I can, with due regard to what I believe to be the best interest of the country, I am willing to go along with the committee. I feel, however, very keenly about one proposal in this bill. I fear that the Congress in its entirety is not always sufficiently familiar with the problem to consider it in all of its ramifications. I refer particularly to the cut which has been made in the appropriation for the Maritime Commission.

I am not impelled by any personal motives except my interest in the merchant marine after many, many years' service on that committee. I believe in some book it has been said that I come from a shipbuilding center, which is true, and probably that has caused me to devote a little more time and attention to the problem than I would otherwise. I would recall the Members' attention to the fact, however, that in the course of my service on that committee I have voted against measures that were advocated by the people in my town and sometimes incurred rather severe enmities, but they have passed away.

It is essential that America shall have a merchant marine and we should do nothing at this critical time to interfere with the program that has been outlined by the Maritime Commission. I wish that every Member in this House who is called on to pass upon this important problem could read the testimony of Admiral Land before the Appropriations Committee and his splendid presentation of the purposes, the objects, and the program of the Maritime Commission. May I say in this connection for Admiral Land that I think he is devoting his time to a splendid service at a minor compensation. Of course, he is getting $10,000, but he would get $6,000 or $6,500 as a retired admiral in the Navy without doing anything more than twiddling his thumbs. With $10,000 he is getting an additional compensation of about $4,000 for what I consider the most constructive work today being carried on by the Government.

The Congress in 1936, reiterating its declaration of 1920, founded upon its experience in the World War, based upon its knowledge of what we had gone through because of a lack of a merchant marine, founded upon the knowledge that we must have if we are going to protect the best interests of this country, declared its policy in a legislative declaration which is contained in section 1 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, and I read it:

It is necessary for the national defense and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine:

(a) Sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States, and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times;

(b) Capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency;

(c) Owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States insofar as may be practicable; and

(d) Composed of the best equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel.

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine.

Under that same act there was created a Maritime Commission, at the head of which today is Admiral Land. He would be false to the declaration of Congress itself, to the policy that has been enunciated in this act and to the people of the United States if he did not present a program that he believed would accomplish this purpose. When we had this matter under consideration in 1935 the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, having under consideration a bill for the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, in its report to the Congress of the United States called attention to the situation that was then before the country.

The evidence shows that during the period from 1922 to 1928 no vessels were built in American yards for overseas foreign commerce and under the 1928 act 31 new vessels were built for ocean-mail service and 42 reconditioned. In the last 5 years, in the construction of freighters, this country has built 4 while Great Britain was building 295, and for the 5 years previous, when we were constructing 4 in American shipyards Great Britain built 558. During the post-war period from 1922 to 1933 about 16½ million tons of oceangoing ships of 2,000 gross tons and upward were constructed throughout the world, of which the United States contributed less than 7 percent.

The gravity of the situation—

And this was in 1935, Mr. Chairman—becomes obvious when we consider that the useful life of a ship is 20 years.

The committee then recommended that there should be adopted a long-range policy of building up a merchant marine to restore it to the seas.

The Maritime Commission in 1937 in a report to the Congress of the United States called An Economic Survey of the American Merchant Marine again viewed the situation and presented a picture with which I wish every Member of this House would become familiar. It is a textbook on the needs of the people of the United States for a merchant marine, for two purposes, first, for national defense, and second, for the promotion of our foreign trade and commerce.

Carrying out this purpose of providing a merchant marine pursuant to the 1936 act and the survey of 1937, the Commission has worked out a long-range program covering 10 years whereby there should be constructed the necessary 500 ships at the rate of 50 a year. We were proceeding very nicely on that program until the European war broke.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion—and do not take my opinion alone; study these facts for yourselves—the people of the United States stand now with respect to their merchant marine at the crossroads. We have an opportunity now such as we have never had since the War between the States from 1861 to 1865, when the American merchant marine was transferred to British and other flags to protect the ships from the ravages of the Alabama, Florida, and other cruisers in the Confederate service. We have today an opportunity to restore that flag upon the seas, and it is being carried on by this long-range program.

The war has now come on, and the Maritime Commission, with the consent and the approval of the President of the United States, on September 7, 1939, accelerated this program beyond the 50 ships per year. Why? Because as businessmen they saw that there was going to be an increase in the price of everything; that materials were going up in price and the cost of construction was going up, and that unless the program was accelerated we would be unable to produce the result we wanted on an economic basis. They did that, and what was the result? They immediately advertised and invited bids for construction of ships, and because of the standardization of the ships that were to be constructed and because of the information and experience that they were able to secure, they found it possible to increase or accelerate the long-range program with the same unit cost per ship.

If you interfere with that, what are you faced with? If you ultimately bring about this result you will be faced inevitably with the necessity of paying more money for the construction of ships. I wish to call attention to the fact that there has been considerable agitation throughout the country for many years last past with regard to relief of unemployment. According to the testimony that was produced before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, 80 to 85 percent of the cost of a ship goes to labor.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia; and may I say that I hope, before the gentleman concludes his remarks, he will have something to say about the suggestion that has been made that in view of the fact that we are having to lay up ships on account of the international situation there is now no necessity for accelerating the shipbuilding program.

Mr. BLAND. According to an article that appears in the United States News this week—and I believe it is fairly authentic—many of these ships have now been put into other services. I would not say they are in services that are paying very much. It will probably be necessary to have an operating differential to take care of them. However, most of the ships have been taken care of except the ships of the United States Lines.

I wish to say in that very connection that there has been considerable criticism of the fact that consent has been given by the Maritime Commission to the transfer of certain ships foreign. I wish you would look at the hearings on that point. There are 117 ships involved. We will find, if we look at that, that there is no very great "hoorah" to be made about it. Is this not a good time to get rid of the model T Fords and put efficient, capable, and economical ships into the service for the time that is coming when we will need them upon the seas? That is what is being done. Old ships, 20 or 25 years of age, not subsidy-built ships, are being transferred foreign. The act of 1936 is the first subsidy legislation we have ever had. In 1928 we did have the Jones-White Act for the construction of certain ships under ocean-mail contracts, and I believe there were approximately 31 ships constructed under that act. You cannot build a ship overnight. It takes 2 or 3 years to build a ship, and if you are going to be prepared economically to get on the seas and win for America her place in the merchant marine world you will have to carry on your shipbuilding program from now on and get them there just as quickly as possible. You will do two things: You will save for America its present foreign trade and commerce and win for America the foreign trade and commerce of the world, if you have those ships ready to go upon the seas.

Furthermore, you will have available the ships that are ready to support the greatest navy building program that has ever been presented to this country. You will be building the second line of the American defense with auxiliaries, and you will not be confronted with the awful, drastic, and painful situation that confronted America in the time of the Spanish-American War, when we sent our Navy upon the seas supported by foreign-flag ships as our auxiliary defense line. You know we could not get them now and you know we do not want to trust to the other navies of the world.

Why, we have today the best and most efficient forces in the construction of ships in the world. The testimony of Admiral Land before this committee showed that they were getting 50 percent more efficiency from the new ships that have been turned out. One of the new ships has been put upon the seas and she is able to make 15 knots, thus a greater speed at less expense than the ships that were constructed during the war; and now you say we want to hold on to those old, broken-down, war-worn, obsolete ships and continue to run them when we can get new ships and probably in that way reduce your operating subsidy.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I wish the gentleman would also comment upon the provisions contained in the bill which gives an additional contract authorization to the Maritime Commission of $150,000,000, and in that connection recall the fact that in a shipbuilding program of this kind they cannot enter into contracts running 2 or 3 years unless they either have the money or unless we either presently appropriate the money or give them contract authorization to enter into contracts for such construction. In other words, what would be the effect if that contract authorization was not written in the bill?

Mr. BLAND. You have a commission now that is going to observe the law in every respect, and if the burden of slacking up performance rests upon the Congress, then they will have to assume that burden. Unless those contracts are made and unless they are able to carry out the authority for the awarding of contracts, then the shipbuilding program must stop; and what was outlined in the economic survey of the American merchant marine, and what was said by this committee in 1935, which has been repeated all the time, must stop, and that is the construction of ships necessary to carry on our trade and to protect it—not all of our trade, but a majority of our trade—so that we will be able to protect ourselves from the domination of other nations as to freight rates. We will have our own delivery wagons to carry our own commerce to the ports of the world, and we will be able to carry out an American policy based upon our own thoughts here and supported by an American merchant marine, and if you do not give them that authority you are not going to get it done.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will yield just briefly, I may say that while I am supporting the action of the committee, I also may say that I am sympathetic toward what the gentleman says, not only about the necessity for supporting the merchant marine but about the character of the men who are now operating the Commission.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman state whether this cut that has been made by the Appropriations Committee will prevent the accelerated program recommended by the Maritime Commission?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely; and I am going to extend my remarks, under leave that has already been granted me, and include a statement of just what it is going to do to the program, and further, I am going to deal with the transfer of these 117 ships that has started such a hullabaloo and show that some of them are sailing ships and tugs and little, old ships that never could figure in the building of an American merchant marine, but under the act that was passed here they could not be transferred, foreign, or sold.

May I say this: The gentleman helped me pass just a year or two ago a "turn in and scrap" bill. What was that? We were to get rid of these old, obsolescent ships. We were going to let them turn them in to the Maritime Commission. We were going to buy them and then we were going to start a replacement program and we were going to put on new ships. Why, bless your soul, if we can sell them to somebody else and get the money from a foreign country, or get the money from somebody else to help out that program, is it not a blame sight better than with Uncle Sam buying those ships and paying a scrap price? These very people whose ships are transferred could scrap those ships. They send over here and buy for cash and carry munitions of war and they buy everything under the sun. Why, in the name of heaven, cannot they buy an old, broken-down, obsolescent ship that is running at a terrific cost or laid up because too expensive to operate in the American trades. When we had the merchant marine bill before the committee it was reliably stated that $5,000,000 of subsidy of our ocean-mail contract was going up the stack. What do I mean by that? I mean that the ships were built for wartime purposes. They were not economical, they were not constructed for the purpose of carrying on the merchant marine but for bridging the ocean with ships in carrying on the war, and by reason of the uneconomical construction they were costing us $5,000,000 more per year than modern up-to-date ships would. According to the testimony that appears in the record of these hearings, the Challenge, one of the new ships, could get 50 percent more speed and yet cost $35,000 a year less to run than these old ships. So that in the course of her economic life of 20 years, it will be 20 times $35,000 that will be saved to the people of the United States. Put it another way: The old vessel made 10,600 ton-miles per barrel of fuel at 10½ knots, while our C-2 ships make 15,450 ton-miles per barrel of fuel at 15½ knots. The Maritime Commission is doing a magnificent job.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Will this cut made in the appropriation interfere in any way with the construction program set up by the Maritime Commission prior to this accelerated program agreed to last September?

Mr. BLAND. I think it will. I know it will interfere with the conduct of the program already in force under contracts entered into. I do have a statement that I shall put into the Record of both the ships that have been transferred and also the effect on the program that will follow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much more of your time, but I am going to ask you to read these matters to which I have referred. I have worked with the best information I could get last night and the night before in the preparation of what the effect would be on this accelerated program. It is not alone the seacoast cities, it is the South and the Middle West and all America that are affected. We showed in the production of evidence before our committee that even these broken-down maritime ships which had meant $600,000,000 to the people of the interior of America at one time, because we were able to put them on the seas. I am speaking now, not for the shipbuilding people, but I am speaking for the people all over the United States who wish to control the agencies that are going to carry that commerce, and not at the conclusion of this war be submitted to the domination and control of other nations of the world. I am speaking more for the Navy of the United States that needs these ships as auxiliaries to go along with them, to serve their needs, because, according to all the testimony that has been produced, they are the second line of defense. Some of the merchant vessels may be converted into auxiliary cruisers, some of them into airplane carriers, and thus serve and protect the people of the United States. This is a troubled time and we want to protect ourselves.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I have not heard all of the gentleman's speech, but I am wondering if he knows how much money would be required to carry out the outstanding contracts.

Mr. BLAND. I am something of a prejudiced witness, but I have no hesitation in saying that I think it would require the amount provided by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the gentleman's opinion as to the probability of suits being filed for the enforcement of those contracts?

Mr. BLAND. I am not prepared to say; I have not studied that; but the carrying out of the contract is not just an obligation to the person with whom the contract has been made; it is an obligation to the people of the United States, pursuant to the declaration in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, pursuant to the economic survey that was made in 1937, to protect this Government and to carry on its policies, so that we may preserve economically upon the seas that independence which we assert. That is the great purpose. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman in order to answer a question.

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. How long will it take to build these ships?

Mr. BLAND. Usually it takes 2 or 3 years to build one ship.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I did not realize it took nearly as long as that.

Mr. BLAND. It takes about 2 years, and not only that, but this shipbuilding bill has brought great benefit all over the United States, because they are building on the west coast, in the South, in sections of the North. They are not confined to any one particular section, and it serves as an opportunity to employ labor at all those points, and the material that goes into a ship comes practically from every State in the Union. It is the labor back home that is benefited. Eighty to eighty-five percent of labor is being helped by this shipbuilding program.

Inquiries and references have been made here as to the Maritime Commission's program of construction, the speed-up of that program now under way, and the money needed for the program. I want to give you just a brief outline of these matters so that the Congress will be better advised on the problems involved in this appropriation.

Under the long-range construction program adopted by the Commission, 50 ships a year for 10 years were contemplated. In the end of the calendar year 1938, 51 ships had been contracted for under this program. Up to September 1939 just prior to the outbreak of the European war, 23 additional ships had been contracted for.

Upon the outbreak of the European war the Commission reconsidered its construction program in the light of the conditions resulting from the European situation. This reconsideration indicated that it was highly desirable to accelerate the program by contracting for 66 additional ships, all of them being cargo vessels.

The progress made under the construction program had involved the development of efficient and modern designs for cargo vessels and the development of shipbuilding capacities and improvement of shipbuilding facilities. It was practical as a construction and engineering proposition to embark on an accelerated program.

The accelerated program was decided upon, because—

First. Reasonable prices in effect at the beginning of the war could be availed of, while future prices were wholly uncertain.

Second. Some prices, particularly of auxiliary and equipment material, were already hardening.

Third. Disregarding emergency possibilities, prospective purchasers or charterers, or both, were available for about 90 percent of the additional 66 ships.

Fourth. Awarding of the additional contracts would enable the distribution in an orderly and reasonable manner to the various shipbuilding firms and propulsion machinery firms. Geographical distribution of construction work was possible.

The accelerated program was submitted to the President and was approved by him on September 7, 1939.

Additional contracts were awarded pursuant to the program adopted bringing the total contract awards on December 31, 1939, up to 141 vessels. As of that date, 36 ships have been launched, and 21 delivered and put into service.

Before adopting the program of awards under contemplation for the remainder of the fiscal year 1940—18 vessels—and for the fiscal year 1941—44 vessels—the Commission carefully considered the uncertainties resulting from European conditions, the length of time required for the building of the contemplated vessels, the prospects of putting the vessels into service either through sales or charters upon their completion, and the advantages of making use presently and during 1940 and the first half of 1941 of available shipyard facilities. Good judgment in the interest of the United States, its national defense, and its needs for foreign-trade shipping, the possibilities of making prompt use of a program of merchant marine rehabilitation already under way—all justify the conclusion that the program of construction should be speeded up rather than slowed up.

The letting of the contracts took advantage of existing construction facilities at current reasonable prices. One of the objects of the accelerated program was the immediate and continued utilization of available shipways. If these facilities had not been tied up with American vessel construction, they would have secured business for construction for foreign account; this would have undoubtedly meant a rapid and serious increase in ultimate cost to American shipowners. This possibility is not imaginary; tentative negotiations on account of foreign interests with American shipyards had taken place.

Now, what does the appropriation cut mean to this program now under way? I would like to give a few simple figures and comments on this vital matter.

At the end of the fiscal year 1940, on an obligation basis, the construction fund of the Commission will have become exhausted. This is in contrast with the status of the construction fund at the beginning of the fiscal year 1940. On June 30, 1939, there was a carry-over of $33,415,272 which was, of course, available for expenditure for the fiscal year 1940, and which, together with the appropriation of $100,000,000, made a total appropriation of $133,415,272 to the Commission for the fiscal year 1940. This was predicated on a construction program of 50 ships and made it unnecessary to have as large an appropriation for the fiscal year 1940 as is now necessary for the fiscal year 1941.

However, the Commission accelerated its program and during the calendar year 1939 contracted for 91 additional ships, or a total of 141 ships. These contracts will require a net expenditure during the fiscal year 1941 of approximately $137,000,000—an amount in excess of the appropriation of $125,000,000, as recommended by the Appropriations Committee.

Awards for construction of 18 vessels are proposed to be made during the remainder of the fiscal year 1940. Net expenditures during the fiscal year 1941 under these awards will be approximately $32,400,000.

So far no account is taken of proposed awards for construction for the fiscal year 1941. The program of the Commission calls for awards to be made for 44 vessels during that fiscal year. This would require an additional net expenditure during that fiscal year of approximately $23,000,000.

The total contemplated expenditures under the proposed construction program up to the end of the fiscal year 1941 will call for net expenditures of approximately $173,000,000.

It is clear that an appropriation of $125,000,000 will not even take care of the construction contracts already entered into.

The Commission under its accelerated long-range program contemplates a total of 159 vessels—141 now let, plus 18 to be let—by the end of the fiscal year 1940, with awards to be made during the fiscal year 1941 for the construction of 44 vessels, making a total of 203 vessels under the program by June 30, 1941. Obviously, the Commission cannot carry out this program with only an appropriation of $125,000,000 for the fiscal year 1941.

Considering only obligations on account of the 141 vessels contracted for, and without any further awards for contracts during 1940 or the fiscal year 1941, deficiency appropriations will be needed for the fiscal year 1940 of approximately $18,500,000; for the fiscal year 1941, $12,440,000; with an additional appropriation of approximately $5,000,000 for 1942. Thus the deficiency in funds under the existing obligations for construction, disregarding entirely all other items of expense on the part of the Commission, will be approximately $36,000,000.

This reduction below the Budget estimate of needs means the loss of the advantages to the United States contemplated under the accelerated construction program; that is, deferred construction will almost certainly face increased costs; American shipyards will be occupied by construction for foreign account; there will be a sacrifice of the opportunity for the United States to place itself in the lead of maritime nations at the end of the present European disturbances.

These figures as to construction-program costs do not take into account other necessary and authorized expenditures on the part of the Commission. For example, for the fiscal year 1941 expenditures of almost $4,000,000 are contemplated for the United States Maritime Service. General administrative expense is estimated as $5,650,000. Operating-differential subsidies will require expenditures approximating $18,000,000. Other items include reconditioning and outfitting of vessels, laid-up fleet expense, cadet-training expense, contingencies for insurance, and other claims.

The total estimated expenditures of the Maritime Commission for the fiscal year 1941 amount to $210,294,243, less receipts of $10,294,243, or a net Budget estimate or appropriation fixed at $200,000,000.

The Budget estimate takes into full account all receipts from ship mortgages and secured notes held by the Commission. It also takes into full account the estimated receipts for principal and interest collections on newly constructed vessels. This item amounts to approximately $5,000,000 as progress payments on partially completed vessels and $1,500,000 for completed vessels, the balance of the amounts due on completed vessels representing loans to operators secured by mortgages on the vessels and to be repaid in 20 equal installments with interest at 3½ percent per annum. Repayments from secured and miscellaneous accounts—other than new ship construction—amount to approximately $5,400,000. Sales of vessels from the laid-up fleet are estimated to bring in approximately $700,000 during the fiscal year June 30, 1941. Every one of these items are accounted for in connection with the estimates of funds necessary for the fiscal year 1941.

Bear in mind that the receipts on account of principal and interest collections on newly constructed vessels are now and will be during the fiscal year 1941 comparatively small, because only a small proportion of the new vessels have been completed and delivered to purchasers. Some of the vessels constructed under title VII are allocated to charterers, others are operated by the Commission on existing trade routes, and several have been sold. Their final disposition is contingent upon prospective purchasers. The return to the Government on account of newly constructed vessels will not amount to its fullest extent until an appreciable number of the vessels being constructed under the program are delivered to purchasers who at the time of delivery of the vessel make a 25-percent down payment on the foreign construction cost, the balance funded as shown elsewhere in this memorandum.

Of the money spent by the Commission for ship construction, approximately half is repaid to the Commission with interest by private ship operators, whether the vessels are sold under title V or chartered under title VII, but the payments extend over a period of 20 years, requiring relatively larger net outlay during the early years of the Commission's program.

The reduction of the item, $5,650,000, for administrative expenses to $5,000,000 has the effect of reducing the amount available for expenses of running the Commission, but the item is a part of the appropriation to the construction fund and there is no real saving in the Budget totals.

The reduction of the money for administration is short-sighted and false economy. It means that the Commission will have an impossible burden, even under the existing construction program, in properly supervising the construction of ships and in auditing the construction operations of the shipbuilders. Vessels, whether for private or Commission account, are constructed under Commission plans and supervision in order to protect the Government's interests in every way. Profits of shipyards constructing these vessels are limited under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, but an inadequate auditing force may mean losses of funds which should be recaptured for the Government by the Commission.

Questions were asked here yesterday and today about the Commission's policy in approving transfers of vessels to foreign registry.

Most of these questions were answered in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee, but I believe they can be stated shortly and simply to clear up all this confusion on the matter.

From October 26, 1938, to October 25, 1939, 88 vessels were approved for transfer to foreign registry; from October 25, 1939, to November 30, 1939, 29 vessels were transferred, making a total of 117 vessels, 2 sales being subsequently canceled by owners.

Forty-three of the 88 vessels and 10 of the 29 vessels were sailing vessels, yachts, motorboats, tugs, and barges, making a total of 53 miscellaneous craft.

The remaining vessels total 64—48 cargo ships and 16 tankers.

How old were these ships? The 29 cargo ships transferred prior to October 25, 1939, average 23.5 years in age—20 years is the assumed useful life of a vessel. The 19 cargo vessels subsequently transferred average 19.7 years old. The 16 tankers averaged 21.3 years old—assumed useful life of tankers being 15 to 20 years.

Of the 29 ships transferred between October 25, 1939, and November 30, 1939, as previously stated, 10 were miscellaneous yachts, motorboats, tugs, and so forth. Fourteen of the remaining 19 ships consisted of the old Moore & McCormack ships transferred to the Lloyd Brasileiro for operation in the Brazilian trade. This transaction was under consideration and discussed in the public press long before the present European war, and was made in consideration of new construction by Moore & McCormack.

One of the five remaining ships—the President Madison—was transferred to Philippine registry for Philippine trade. Approval was given to the trustee in bankruptcy of the American Mail Line, and may enable the creditors to set up a new American steamship company.

One of the four remaining is a whaling ship; one was owned by the Southern Pacific Golden Gate Ferry Co.; one is exceedingly small; one was sold to a Greek citizen.

It has been asked here, How many vessels transferred received operating-differential subsidy at time of transfer or at any previous time?

Ten vessels were under subsidy contract under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, at the time of transfer. Nine were part of the Moore & McCormack-Lloyd-Brasileiro deal; are to operate between this country and Brazil, and all will be replaced by new American construction. The subsidy ceased when the transfer was approved.

Five vessels received subsidy at some time prior to transfer. Two of these were included in the McCormack-Brazil deal; one was subsidized when owned by a line which no longer exists; one was subsidized when owned by a line which no longer receives subsidy but operates under the American flag without it—this ship is 28 years old. The remaining ship will continue to act as a Latin-American feeder for an American-flag line.

Reference has been made to transfers or sales by Lykes Bros. of certain vessels. The facts are that 12 vessels of these lines, driven off their route by the Neutrality Act, have been chartered to the Chilean Sales Nitrate Corporation for a few months. There is no change of registry, no change of ownership, but only a charter contract. The owners received operating subsidy for these vessels before they were driven off their route. They do not receive operating subsidy while under charter.

The question has also been asked, Did the Government ever have any financial interest in any of the ships transferred?

The Government had no financial interest in any of the ships at the time of transfer.

Formerly the Government was interested in 17 of the vessels in this way:

Four vessels had Government construction loans which were paid off in full in 1938—these ships were part of the Brazil deal.

Eleven of the vessels were built by the Shipping Board during the World War period and were sold to private citizens by the Government for the best price obtainable; at least one being sold with the contract privilege of transfer to foreign registry.

Two vessels were requisitioned by the Shipping Board while under construction for private owners during the World War. These ships were completed by the Shipping Board and transferred back to the original contract owners after the war, the owners paying the full cost of construction to get their ships back.

Are American owners transferring registry while keeping ownership? Yes; five of the cargo vessels, but one of these will constitute feeder service—operating between Latin-American ports—as an adjunct to an American-flag service. Two others originally were built abroad and registered under a Latin-American flag, and were returned to their former registry. In all cases there were such special circumstances for permitting the transfer of American vessels. Fifteen of the tankers were transferred to related Panamanian corporation owned by American citizens. These vessels were released under the conditions they be returned to United States registry upon request.

All of the vessels here discussed are still subject to requisition by the United States in case they are needed for war or other national emergency needs.

Thirty-one—15 cargo vessels and 16 tankers—were permitted to transfer only in connection with agreements for new construction. Of course, most of the other transfers involved small or nondescript craft.

The tanker transfers will result in placing 17 new modern tankers under the American flag which will have an aggregate dead-weight tonnage considerably in excess of the vessels being transferred; further, the sale and transfer were conditioned upon the agreement on the part of the owner guaranteeing to redocument said vessels under the laws of the United States upon demand of the Maritime Commission or of the President of the United States by general proclamation.

In exercising its discretion under the law the Commission considers certain essential facts with reference to the particular vessel to be sold or transferred foreign. These considerations are:

First. Whether the United States Government has any financial interest in the vessel.

Second. Whether the vessel is obsolete or approaching obsolescence.

Third. Whether the owner will agree to a program for the construction of new vessels needed by the merchant marine.

Fourth. Whether the vessel is needed for national defense purposes or required for the transportation of our commerce.

Fifth. Whether the removal of the vessel from United States registry would improve the prospects for suitable allocation of other affected vessels to certain trades.

The Commission also imposes administrative restrictions or conditions, one or more of which is imposed by the Commission on each particular vessel on which approval is granted, as follows:

A. The commodities which the vessel may carry on its first outward voyage from a United States port are restricted to certain type of cargo. The purpose of this restriction is that the vessel should not compete with other established American carriers. It puts the vessel in the same status as if it had been purchased from any other nation besides the United States.

B. The vessel is restricted in its trade with United States ports for a given number of years to prevent competition with other American-flag vessels.

C. The vessel is required to be scrapped.

D. There shall not be any liens or encumbrances on record against said vessel in the customhouse at its last United States home port when the outstanding marine document is surrendered.

E. The funds obtained from the sale of the vessel are to be impounded by the United States as a commitment on new tonnage contracted for or to be contracted.

F. The owner must agree to redocumentation of the vessel under United States registry upon request by the Maritime Commission.

G. The vendee must agree not to sell the vessel without prior approval of the United States Maritime Commission; the vendee will agree to conform to conference rates and practices when operating the vessel in competition with United States services; and the vendee will agree to sell or charter the vessel to the United States Government on the same terms and conditions upon which any American-flag vessel could be requisitioned for purchase.

Except as to liens and encumbrances which are matters of record, a bond is required of the vendor and/or vendee to insure compliance with the conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein quotations from the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, from the different hearings of the Reorganization Committee, from the so-called Government Manuals of 1936 and 1939, from the President's message to Congress, and to insert certain tables which I have prepared, showing the source of funds for some of the operations which are going on with reference to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARDEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, when the President came before us he inserted in his message on page 6 a statement which I shall include in full, but which berates arguments and rabble-rousing operations on which dictators ride to power.

The paragraph to which I have referred is as follows:

Doctrines which set group against group, faith against faith, race against race, class against class, fanning the fires of hatred in men too despondent, too desperate to think for themselves, were used as rabble-rousing slogans on which dictators could ride to power. And once in power, they could saddle their tyrannies on whole nations and on their weaker neighbors.

I want to call the attention of the Congress to an operation which is going on and which the Executive, according to his statement in last night's paper, is still trying to put across, notwithstanding the Congress has failed to provide any legislative authority for it—two schemes known as the National Resources Planning Board and the Office of Government Reports.

The first of these outfits is a propaganda outfit, designed to embark the Government on all kinds of programs which have never been regarded as Federal functions; to embark the Government upon all sorts of things that will bankrupt the Government of the United States.

The second of these outfits is an outfit which has been designed to establish the Executive in great power and to build up his authority, and increase the trend toward dictatorship.

In 1921 we passed the Budget and Accounting Act, and there we provided, in section 301:

There is created an establishment of the Government to be known as the General Accounting Office, which shall be independent of the executive departments and under the control and direction of the Comptroller General of the United States.

When we held the reorganization hearings in 1937, the President's Reorganization Commission, headed by Louis Brownlow, and containing, among others, Mr. Luther Gulick, were before the Joint Reorganization Committee, and during the hearings on February 16, 1937, on page 14 of those hearings, this question appears:

Representative COCHRAN. The Congress set up the Accounting Office under the Comptroller General. It was set up as an agency of the Congress, not as an agency of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. GULICK. That is right.

There had been certain criticism of the operations of the Comptroller General, and Mr. COCHRAN said, on page 15:

You would not deny the Congress the right to limit appropriations?

Mr. GULICK. No.

Representative COCHRAN. When the Comptroller General limits the expenditure of a certain sum of money that Congress intended for a given purpose, why should not the Congress be criticized if you are going to criticize anyone? Congress laid down the law, not the Comptroller General.

Now, just prior to the passage of the so-called reorganization plan, the so-called National Emergency Council at that time, which is operating under another alias at the moment, got out what they call the United States Government Manual, and I have the chart in front of me. That sets up the functions of the different agencies of the Government and to whom they are accountable. In that set-up there appears under the lines covering the legislative branch and Congress the General Accounting Office. That is on the chart that appears on the first page of that publication.

After this so-called reorganization law was passed last year, they got up another United States Government Manual, in October 1939. I have it here. In that document appears another chart, on page 467, and there appears the set-up of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches. There the General Accounting Office is set up under the President. They got Congress down so that Congress had nothing to it except the Senate and the House and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Can the gentleman tell the Members of this House how in the world the Executive got authority to transfer this General Accounting Office over under the executive department, according to that document, rather than to have it remain where it was?

Mr. TABER. Well, that is an item of propaganda that this so-called office of Government reports is putting out—to build up the impression amongst the people and amongst the Congress that the General Accounting Office is set up not as an agent of the Congress, but as the agent of the Executive.

The planning of this Office of Government Reports came largely through the direction and operation of one Louis Brownlow, who was chairman of this so-called outfit. This Louis Brownlow has a great lot of organizations. I am going to put them in the Record in detail. Charles Merriam, a professor who formerly served at the Chicago University, is a member of this National Resources Board and one of the moving spirits behind it. He is the head of the Spellman Foundation, which has contributed, in the last 6 or 7 years, a total of $3,953,000 to these different Brownlow outfits. The Spellman Foundation was one of the outfits that Mr. Rockefeller set up in his lifetime. In some of these outfits Mr.

Brownlow and, as I understand it, Professor Merriam, are employed. Professor Merriam, you know, is head of the Spellman outfit.

I do not criticize Mr. Rockefeller. I do not think he knew anything about this attempt that was being made by Mr. Brownlow and that set-up to break down the fundamental guarantees that the Congress has set up to protect the integrity of the appropriations that it has passed in the Budget and Accounting Act, and in the office of the Comptroller General.

As a result of the recent opposition of the reorganizing of the Federal Government proposed by none other than Charles E. Merriam and Louis Brownlow, the National Resources Planning Board has been moved directly into the Office of the White House. This is the same Brownlow whose organizations have been given unstinted financial support by the Spellman fund, of which Merriam is chairman. With few exceptions, the annual report of the Spellman fund shows that that organization has been the financial support of the Brownlow affiliated groups for years. One might conclude that the sole, or main, purpose is to supply financial lifeblood of the Brownlow units.

The following table presents figuratively the distribution of Spellman funds to the big 12 engaged in municipal administration:

¹ Of this amount, $503,000 represents stock in the United States Daily.

I do realize that both of these organizations are a menace to the welfare of the American people, and they are a menace to constitutional government. I feel that the Subcommittee on Independent Offices and the Appropriations Committee are to be complimented in having cut out all appropriations for the National Resources Board and the Office of Government Reports.

This Government Manual that is gotten out has hardly a thing in it that is not in the regular Congressional Directory published by the Congress twice every session and which gives everyone the needed information that they ought to have to find out what is going on, and which sets up those things properly and as they ought to be set up. I hope that the Congress will have in mind as they approach this problem and as questions are presented to it the absolutely destructive character of these outfits and of the way they are operating, and that they will not allow these two destructive outfits to be placed upon the pay roll of the United States Government after the 1st of July next.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I will.

Mr. MAY. I notice in the newspapers this morning, or yesterday, a report to the effect that two of the agencies the gentleman is talking about had been eliminated from consideration for appropriation due to the fact that there was no legislative authority for their existence. Are these the two groups?

Mr. TABER. These are the outfits.

Mr. MAY. Furthermore, I understand that we are going to be asked to enact legislation to legitimize them and authorize them so you can appropriate for them. If this is coming up, I believe the House ought to begin thinking about whether they ought to create additional agencies.

Mr. TABER. That is why I am here now, because I want the House to know something of the background. Under permission that has been granted to me I am going to insert considerable detail with reference to this set-up because I want the Congress to begin thinking about how subversive they are and how destructive they are to the powers of this Congress. Let me say to you that the minute the Congress gives up its control over the appropriating power and over the auditing done by the Comptroller General that that minute the liberties of the American people are gone; and any tendency by propaganda or otherwise to bring about that idea in the minds of the people must be stopped.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is this the first cut by the Appropriations Committee that has been applied against some particular project which the President himself desires to keep going?

Mr. TABER. I would not say that. I believe the Appropriations Committee a great many times has attempted to cut projects that it did not believe should be carried on.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman misunderstands me. I meant in this current session of Congress.

Mr. TABER. This, of course, is the first regular appropriation bill of the session. These things are not authorized by law; and the committee, I understand, felt that they should bring no appropriations in here for outfits that were not authorized by law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If this is a proposition which has not been legislatively approved, we will say, and is one of the pet projects of the President, and he is going to take this attitude with reference to reductions in expenditures which the committee attempts to make, then what should he expect Members of the House and the citizens of the country to take as their attitude on projects they themselves want continued—projects which have been more or less legislatively approved? It seems to me the President is setting an example here for the whole Congress to follow; that is, cut everything except my particular projects, but do not cut my projects, whether they are legitimate or otherwise; I am going to insist that money be spent to keep my particular projects going.

Mr. TABER. That statement pretty thoroughly describes the attitude that the President is taking.

I say to the President and to the Congress that it is absolutely impossible to cut this Budget down where it belongs unless there be cooperation on the part of everyone in doing away with the things the country does not need and that Congress does not need. We have got to cut out all of those superfluous activities that get us into trouble. Unless we do it we are never going to bring the organization of the Federal Government into such situation that we can raise taxes enough to support it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to make this observation, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with his statement and wish to say that I have no pet project of any kind which I want protected insofar as this Budget is concerned, and I shall be pleased to go along with him.

With reference to the National Resources Board, I ask whether the operation of the National Resources Board is not of such nature that it tends to promote a demand for those projects which have been more or less described as self-liquidating projects, but which call for great appropriations?

Mr. TABER. It is not confined to self-liquidating projects.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not intend so to confine it.

Mr. TABER. Nor is it confined to allegedly self-liquidating projects; it goes way beyond that scope, and goes even beyond the wildest dreams of the biggest spenders of Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One other question with reference to the two publications which the gentleman has called to our attention. From a utility standpoint, it seems to me that the first publication—that is, the loose-leaf publication—is much more informative and more adaptable to one's needs, if one is going to use either of the publications, than is the latter. I understand the former publication, the loose-leaf publication, has been discontinued and that the red book has been substituted for it.

Mr. TABER. The reason is that they have changed their theory and they want to advertise something that is not so in fact, that the Comptroller General's office is the agency of the Executive. This is not true.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am interested very much in the question of the General Accounting Office. I understood the gentleman to say—and I hope I did not misunderstand him—that by reason of the reorganization bill the General Accounting Office has now been put under the Executive instead of under Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. I did not mean to say that; I meant to say that after the passage of the reorganization bill they changed this Government Manual and their chart to place the Comptroller General's office under the Executive instead of under the Congress and legislative branch where it belongs.

Mr. MAY. In other words, there has been no Executive order attempting to change it.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; there could not be.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Comptroller General's office is an independent agency?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. COCHRAN. It does not belong under the Congress, then?

Mr. TABER. On the other hand, it is supposed to be, as the gentleman from Missouri so well said in questions to Mr. Gulick, an agency of the Congress.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is more closely related to the Congress than any other Government agency.

Mr. TABER. It is required to perform certain functions for the Congress on the request of the Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand, then, that the published organization charts lead the people who use these manuals to believe that the General Accounting Office is directly responsible to the Chief Executive and an agency of the executive branch of our Government?

Mr. TABER. That is what this document put out by the Office of Government Reports attempts to do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, this week we are celebrating throughout the country the fifty-seventh anniversary of the enactment of the civil-service law, which became effective on January 16, 1883. This act has remained on the statute books with no radical changes during this entire period of 57 years. It confers upon the Commission, composed of three persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, authority to make rules and regulations, to be approved by the President, dealing with the personnel problems of our Federal Government to the extent that the act covers this problem.

There are many misconceptions about the civil service. Many of the failures of administrators in the executive department and many of the happenings there which bring complaint to Members of Congress are blamed upon the civil service without reason, and, in fact, many are matters over which the Civil Service Commission has no authority and is helpless to remedy. We had here on the floor the other day a complaint from one of our colleagues from Tennessee with reference to a thing that happened to him; but that was not an agency covered by the civil service. I speak of that, not for the purpose of getting into any discussion about that particular incident but to show that many of the complaints which come to Members of Congress and many of the irritations they suffer arise in agencies that civil service has nothing to do with and whose employees are selected without regard to the Civil Service Act. There is an erroneous opinion that civil-service employees have life tenure of office.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Recently one of the Cabinet officers complained of a "clique of civil-service" employees interfering with the operation of the Bureau of Mines and said he could not discharge them without giving them a trial. He simply did not know the civil-service law, or its rules and regulations, because all he had to do, if any employee under civil service had been insubordinate or had failed in any respect to discharge his duties satisfactorily, was to give the employee the charges in writing, give him a reasonable time in which to reply, and then discharge that employee. The employee has no right of trial, he has no place to appeal, and the Cabinet officer is the judge, jury, and "executioner," as one of our circuit courts recently stated with regard to one of the agencies of our Government. As a matter of fact, it is oftentimes easier to discharge a civil-service employee for just cause than it is to discharge a patronage employee who has strong political backing.

What I want to do here this afternoon is to call the attention of the Members of Congress to the vast proportions to which our personnel problem in the Federal service and throughout the Nation has grown. When the act was originally passed in 1883, it covered less than 25,000 employees. Today we have in the Federal service more than 900,000 civil employees and the pay roll amounts to approximately one and one-half billion dollars annually. It is the largest single item in the normal cost of operating the Federal Government, and I state without fear of contradiction that the payment for personnel services of public employees takes up the largest single proportion of the tax dollar in not only the Federal Government but in State and local governments as well.

Today we have more than 640,000 Federal employees under the civil-service law. It is the largest number that has ever been covered by the merit system, although the percentage of the total number of employees in the Government service today covered by the act is less than it was 7 or 8 years ago, due to the fact that we have created numerous agencies and provided by law that the employees shall be appointed without regard to the civil service.

There is one thing I want to point out about the present number of Federal employees. On November 11, 1918, during the World War we had 918,000 civil employees, which at that time amounted to nine-tenths percent of the total population, and while we have as many employees as that today in the Federal service it amounts to only six-tenths percent of the population of the United States. So, as a matter of fact, while we have largely increased the personnel of the Federal Government, we have not increased the number of employees in proportion to the increase in population of the United States.

The total public servants of this country, National, State, and local now comprise over three and one-half million persons, and the total annual pay roll is in excess of $5,000,000,000. In a period of 6 years the number of public employees in the United States has increased over 16 percent and the total pay roll by almost 25 percent. In State and local governments the appropriations for personnel services make up from 30 to 50 percent of the annual budgets. Yet, only 16 of the 48 States operate under a civil-service law, while in some of these having civil-service laws on paper the merit system takes on more of form than of substance.

I am giving you these figures as to the large proportions to which the problem of public-employee administration has grown in the hope that in the future we may take a deeper interest in the proper selection of, and the proper plans for, promotion, transfer, and training of Federal employees. To my mind, the largest and most important single problem we have in the Federal service is how to select and how to deal with the more than 900,000 employees who today are administering the acts which Congress has passed.

You can pass the finest law the mind of man or woman can conceive, but if you turn over the administration of that act to incompetent, inefficient, or prejudiced or biased personnel, you are going to have rotten administration, and you will not get satisfactory results from the administration of the law. We hear a great deal of complaint these days about the administration of the National Labor Relations Act. My judgment—and my judgment is based upon a careful study of many of the cases that have come before that Board, and it is also based upon hearings covering a period of 12 weeks before the Committee on Labor—leads me to believe that 95 percent of the trouble with the National Labor Relations Act can be traced directly to personnel that were improperly selected, without adequate experience in the field in which they were to operate, and to the fact that in many instances they had preconceived ideas on how the act should be applied and what it should contain.

We are faced here today with a bill appropriating money for the Civil Service Commission and for certain other activities connected with this personnel problem. The subcommittee handling this bill has seen fit to deduct from the Budget estimates approximately $295,000. I am not here to criticize their action. I presume they did what they thought was right and proper. I am glad they gave the Commission an increase over the appropriation for last year, because it is a fact that the Civil Service Commission is faced with an unprecedented load of work due to the large number of applications for positions that they receive when examinations are announced. For instance, in the fiscal year 1932 applications received totaled 221,494, whereas in the fiscal year 1939 the applications numbered 718,178.

The Commission cannot do a good job, it cannot give satisfaction to the operating agencies of the Government, and it cannot be satisfactory to the Members of Congress, unless it has adequate finances and can have a staff equal to the work load which they face. Therefore, I am glad to see the committee give them an increase. I am sorry the committee did not see fit to give them the balance of what the Budget recommended, which related primarily to the personnel set-up which the President initiated in his Executive order of June 1938.

In the early days of this country we had a government devoted primarily to the protection of person and property. Today we have a government that is what you might call an administrative state. We have set up literally hundreds of new activities for the Federal government and dozens and dozens of new agencies whose duties are as foreign to the original concept of this Government as it existed more than 100 years ago as anything possibly could be.

They are not dealing with questions of property or the protection of life. They are rendering a direct service. Consider the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Social Security Board. You find there new activities for which we must have trained and expert personnel, and we do not find that any outside agency sufficiently trains these persons to enable them to perform these new activities, the parallels of which do not exist in private employment. Therefore, many of the agencies have found it necessary to spend money on training employees after they have come into the Government employment. They have been doing that for several years.

The President visualized a personnel set-up with a Council on Personnel Administration for the purpose of drawing the personnel officers together for consultation in order that they might study the best plans in use in each agency for handling and training personnel, and in order that they might take the best plans, those that have been found most successful in a given agency, and apply them throughout the Government service on a uniform basis. Another thing this Council on Personnel Administration is doing is studying the problem of handling the grievances of employees and adjusting them without any expensive set-up and making the adjustment of them a uniform practice in all the agencies.

It was intended to set up what we call "in-service training," that is, training on the job, but I think unfortunately much misapprehension has arisen in the minds of the members of the Committee on Appropriations as to what was intended by the "in-service training" program. It is not proposed that they should go out and hire school teachers to come in and train Federal employees, but it was proposed and intended that employees working for the Government should receive training so that they might perform a better job in the occupation in which they were engaged, and so that they might be prepared for larger responsibilities in order that we might make the civil service more of a career service, so we might develop more men like Daniel W. Bell, who entered the Government service as a $700 a year clerk, and is now Under Secretary of the Treasury, and who is recognized by everyone who has had occasion to come in contact with him as one of the best qualified employees in the Federal service; in order that we might develop more men like William H. McReynolds, who is now one of the secretaries to the President, dealing with personnel matters; and in order that we might develop more men like E. K. Burlew, of the Department of the Interior.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman called attention to the fact that the increase had been cut down by the Committee on Appropriations. As a matter of fact, they have made funds available to the extent of approximately $1,300,000 more than before, have they not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. As I understand, they have given them an increase of about $750,000 as compared with previous appropriations.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman called attention to the number of Federal employees during the World War, when Federal employment hit a peak of 918,000. Did not this number decrease during the years until about 6 or 7 years ago?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true, the number did go down for several years, but it started up before this administration came in office.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Tell us how many employees have been added since this administration came into power.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Several hundred thousand employees have been added.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Many of them have been outside the civil service. But we have also rendered a great deal more service to the people, I may say to the gentleman from Kansas, than did the previous administration.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The percentage of employees who are now under civil service is lower than it has been through the years.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I stated that, but I also made the statement, which the gentleman has overlooked, that we have more actual employees under civil service today than at any time in the history of the Government. We have not reduced the number in the civil service. We have created a lot of new ones outside, I will admit, and I am sorry that was done, but it was done by the Congress.

Mr. REES of Kansas. How many employees have been put in the civil service by the blanketing system during the last 2 or 3 years?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There has been none put in by blanketing. They had to take a noncompetitive examination. The gentleman's own party always blanketed them in without any examination at all, with one exception, as the records will show.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But the present Executive, during the last few years, has put something like 100,000 under civil service.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; and I commend the President for that action, and I wish he could put the rest of them under civil service, but the Congress would have to give him that authority.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman would be in favor of putting them in without competitive examination?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; without competitive examination, but with a noncompetitive examination, which is more than was done by the Republican administration which preceded this one.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Then the gentleman favors putting the rest of them under civil service without competitive examination; is that it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Personally, if I could pass it, I would like to have competitive examinations, as the gentleman knows, being a member of my committee, but we cannot pass that sort of bill, and I would rather have them put in by noncompetitive examinations than to leave them out and have them subject to political handling.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to my colleague on the committee from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman stated that the Republican administration always blanketed these people in without any examination. In the case of the inspectors on the Mexican border there was a provision for a noncompetitive test. Of course, the gentleman will recall that in the case of the prohibition unit there were noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That was the one exception.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman will find there were other exceptions.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There was a reason for that. The agency had become such a stench in the nostrils of good government that they put the burden on the civil service of eliminating those that had to be thrown out, and it developed that about half of them had criminal records and were barred from taking the examination.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think if the gentleman will examine the matter carefully today he will find certain postmasters and others now in the service that had been dishonest.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, in 900,000 people you will find some, perhaps, who are dishonest, but I think the record of the postmasters under this administration has certainly never been equalled by those of any other administration. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under the authority granted me to extend my remarks, I include the following excerpt from an article written by Ralph E. Turner, who is connected with the Social Security Board:

THE NEED FOR TRAINING

The need for the training of Government employees does not arise so much from their inability to perform the jobs to which they may be assigned as it does from the types of jobs which today constitute more and more the burden of Government work.

IN THE POLICE STATE

In ancient states government was mainly an instrument of exploitation, the institutional means of transferring wealth from groups not possessing political power to a group exercising political control through military dominance. In exploitive states the essential tasks of government were performed by arbitrary action supported by violence. Military training was the chief preparation for this kind of work. In modern western states, although the exploitive function has disappeared slowly, the chief task of government has been to protect wealth acquired in the competitive economy and to arbitrate the conflicting claims of individuals engaged in economic competition. In these passive policemen or arbitral states, governmental action has been mainly legalistic in character; it has consisted of the judicial determination of right claims to wealth and the executive enforcement of such claims. The correlative circumstance was the policy of laissez faire, which denied the right of government to interfere in the competitive economic processes. Traditional attitudes surviving from these antecedent political organizations may obscure the conditions which are now important for the training of Government employees just as they confuse much thinking about governmental institutions and policies.

IN THE ADMINISTRATIVE STATE

The functions of government today have their origin in the cultural change which may be summarily described in phrases such as "the rise of democracy," "the advancement of science," "the elaboration of technology," and "the growth of social interdependence." In general the effect of these developments has been to expand the administrative action of government, indeed, to create the administrative state, which acts through the continuous performance of tasks that constitute services to the people. Clearly it is hardly possible to make science or technology function as services in the lives of persons merely by military, or judicial, or legislative action. Such actions may be required to support these services, but by themselves they cannot give the services which originated in science, or technology, or social cooperation, or any combination of the new developments. Social services can be instrumented only by administrative actions. Further, in addition to raising administrative action to a new prominence in government, these cultural advances have multiplied and are likely to increase further the kinds of services to be rendered through administrative action. The administrative state is still young and, therefore, growing.

From this circumstance arises the need for training of governmental employees: They must understand the types of services rendered by governmental action, the conditions which have led the people by democratic decision to establish the services, and the variety of actions which will give these services. Inasmuch as most of the services are new, there are no traditions to guide those individuals who are assigned to perform them; and although the general education of those assigned to perform them may be excellent, it has not equipped them for the performance of the particular acts which will give the services. Only by training which makes clear the significance of a particular job in the rendering of a service to the people and brings into the performance of the job that knowledge and those techniques which will give the service a quality as high as possible can the employee assigned to its function be brought to the proper efficiency. The employee requires orientation toward the social world where his job has significance in a concrete service and direction in the application of the knowledge which gives the service. Since neither traditional attitudes nor general education provides this orientation and this application, these results must be accomplished by training.

There recently appeared in the Washington Star the following recital relative to Daniel W. Bell, written by Raymond P. Brandt:

Until Daniel Wafena Bell, of Kinderhook, Ill., was promoted to the Under Secretaryship of the Treasury, the position had been filled by ambitious and comparatively young men who qualified politically under the Hamiltonian tradition of government by being "rich, well born, and able," whether they were Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. Bell, now No. 1 man in the classified civil service, is a different type of public official. During the last 28 years he has risen from a $700-a-year clerkship to the second highest office in the Treasury Department. He is a "career man" who has dedicated his life and his talents to the Government. He says he would rather have a $15,000-a-year Government salary than a $75,000-a-year business salary in New York.

Of his nine predecessors in the office of Under Secretary, five were graduates of Harvard College or the Harvard Law School, two were graduates of Yale, one of Dartmouth, and one had been a student at Cornell. Two were elevated to the Secretaryship of the Treasury, one, the late S. Parker Gilbert, became a partner of J. P. Morgan & Co., and the remainder won substantial success in law or business.

EXPECTS TO STAY IN SERVICE

In 1911, when Mr. Bell was 20 years old, he arrived in Washington with a diploma from the Gem City Business College of Quincy, Ill., which certified to whom it might concern that he had completed the "full commercial" course, including bookkeeping, shorthand, and typing. He also had passed the civil-service examinations for clerk and bookkeeper. While in the Treasury Department he obtained a law degree from the National University and a degree of bachelor of commercial science from Southeastern University, where he specialized in higher mathematics. He expects to stay in Government work and if the Under Secretaryship reverts to its customary political status, he will return to a classified civil service position in the Treasury.

To the hundreds of thousands of employees in Federal, State, and municipal Governments who have been encouraged to believe in the merit system, Mr. Bell's recent promotion is a noteworthy—and needed—demonstration that the civil service offers outstanding careers to industrious, ambitious, and intelligent young persons. It also draws attention to some of the glaring deficiencies of the present law and the need of greater and more permanent incentives in the form of higher salaries and larger retirement benefits.

Mr. Bell's rise to high governmental position by the hard way of continuous work is not unprecedented. Elbert K. Burlaw, who entered Government service in 1910, is now First Assistant Secretary of the Interior; William H. McReynolds, formerly of the Treasury Department, who entered the Post Office Department in 1906, is an administrative assistant to the President; George S. Messersmith, who started as American consul at Fort Erie, Canada, in 1914, was recently named American Ambassador to Cuba after serving as an Assistant Secretary of State; Wilbur J. Carr, former Assistant Secretary of State and Minister to Czechoslovakia, started his public service as a clerk in the State Department in 1892, and the late Alvey A. Adee became Second Assistant Secretary of State during a half century of service.

AN "INDEPENDENT" VOTER

When Mr. Bell's appointment was proudly announced at a press conference by President Roosevelt before Congress had convened, reporters, knowing the past political implications of the Under Secretaryship, tried to find out if he was a Democrat or Republican. He is an "independent" voter and is so registered in Illinois, where he has regularly voted. Not one of his ballots, he says, has been unscratched.

Mr. Bell regards his present post as one which will give him his greatest opportunity for service to the Government and the classified personnel. He knows the machinery of Federal Government as few other men have ever known it. He has rejected business offers of three to five times his present $10,000 salary, because he believes that by staying in the Government service he can raise the standards and increase the security of his fellow workers, thousands of whom he knows by name and by their accomplishments.

When he was commissioner of accounts and deposits, a position sometimes called the "greatest bookkeeping job in the Nation," he refused to accept President Roosevelt's proffered appointment to the directorship of the Budget, although his compensation would have increased from $8,500 to $10,000 a year. His reason was simple and sincere. He did not want to lose his civil-service status by taking what was essentially a political appointment. He became Acting Budget Director and continued supervising the work of the Division of Accounts and Deposits. As Acting Director he completely reorganized and enlarged the Bureau of the Budget to give it direct and intimate insight into the workings of all the executive departments of the Government. With this task almost completed, he turned his organization over to Budget Director Harold D. Smith, who is carrying out his detailed plans. Without losing his civil-service status, he became an assistant to Secretary Morgenthau, and he would not take the Under Secretaryship until he had been assured that his promotion did not jeopardize the classified standing for which he had worked for more than 25 years.

SEES SALARIES RISE

Mr. Bell has seen improvements in the civil service during his stay in Washington, and he believes other great changes are coming. "For instance," he explains, "I came to Washington to a job paying $700 a year. That same beginner's position today pays at least $1,440. In those days even civil-service positions were greatly affected by changes in politics. When one administration went out, division chiefs were demoted to mere clerks and clerks were promoted to division chiefs. Thousands of lesser employees were let out to make places for political appointees. When the other party was returned to power, the shifts were reversed.

"Within the last 10 or 12 years only the top positions have been affected. Promotions have been made on merit. Salaries have been increased so there is less temptation for valuable men to take higher-paying business positions. Some of the very best men were lost annually that way.

"But there is still waste and insecurity because of politics. In this department there is every reason why deputy collectors of internal revenue should be given permanent civil-service standing.

As it is now, we spend 4 to 8 years training these men and women, and when a new administration comes in out they go, with all their experience."

AGREES WITH PRESIDENT'S PLAN

Mr. Bell is in hearty accord with President Roosevelt's recommendations to Congress to raise the limits of classified compensation from the present $10,000 to a figure which will insure the retention of the relatively small number of highly trained men who hold positions of great responsibility. He likewise believes that eventually the pensions on retirement will be increased. In his own case he can retire under the present law when he is 68 years old, after 48 years' service, on a pension of $1,600 a year, to which he has made a 50 percent contribution. Any large financial establishment wanting to get an executive of Mr. Bell's ability could well afford to buy an annuity for triple this amount if it wanted to lure a highly trained person from the Government service.

When the President announced Mr. Bell's promotion, his immediate predecessor, John W. Hanes, urged Congress to make the position of Under Secretary permanent so long as it is held by the incoming Under Secretary.

Perhaps Mr. Bell's friend, Chairman PAT HARRISON, of the Senate Finance Committee, will sponsor such legislation. But Mr. Bell and others intensely interested in the civil service are expecting that the White House Commission, headed by Justice Stanley Reed, of the Supreme Court, will soon recommend that in every executive department now headed by a political appointee, the position of permanent under secretary be created, to be held by a nonpolitical civil servant who will serve through all administrations, as is now the general practice in the British Government. These permanent under secretaries would insure a continuity of Federal policy which is now lacking. The Reed commission also is expected to support the President's recommendations for higher top-bracket civil-service compensation and more equitable retirement benefits.

Mr. Bell's career is a model of how an industrious, ambitious, and intelligent young man without political pull can attain one of these high positions.

His father was a farmer and thrasher-machine owner, who later became a carpenter after he moved to the town of Kinderhook, with its population of 300. Daniel was the oldest son and the third child in a family of six children. None of his family, he says, had any inclination toward figures and he took the "full commercial course" at the Gem City Business College in nearby Quincy because he wanted to go west with a little business training. He earned the money for his schooling by working on the railroads and in the ice-cream parlor at Kinderhook.

GOT $100 INCREASE

His first assignment was that of bookkeeper and clerk in the office of the Treasurer of the United States. The next year he was transferred to the office of the supervising architect at an increase of $100 a year.

The President and Mr. Morgenthau lost no opportunity to praise and advance this nonpolitical Government official. In 1935 it was found that he could be appointed an assistant to the Secretary at $10,000 a year and retain his civil-service classification. This was done, and he continued to act as Director of the Budget. After he had completed plans for reorganizing this Bureau and Mr. Smith was appointed Director, Mr. Bell was put in charge of the Department's fiscal operations and acted as a liaison officer between the Treasury and other branches of the Government.

Until he became Acting Budget Director Mr. Bell was not well known outside the Treasury Department. He was so self-effacing that he would not allow reporters to quote him even when he merely explained the daily Treasury statement for their benefit. With each increase of responsibility he has grown in confidence and praise, but he has retained the modesty and industry that have marked his career since he left Kinderhook.

There is herewith included an article written by Alfred Friendly, which recently appeared in the Washington Star:

Fifty-seven years ago Tuesday the Nation decided that there was a better way to choose its public servants than by appointing the ward heelers, friends, and family of the victorious political party. It sealed that decision by securing the passage of the Pendleton Act, organic law which set up the present civil-service system.

Beginning today, a week-long celebration is in order for the anniversary of that legislation. And lest anyone claim that a week is too long a time to celebrate a single birthday party, let it be noted that the celebrant is an organization of more than 600,000 persons entitled at least to 7 days of jubilation.

Never has a birthday of the Pendleton Act dawned under such encouraging circumstances.

The Ramspeck bill, to bring under civil service the last great group of Government workers now exempt, has the best chance of passage of any time since it was first proposed.

The Civil Service Commission, hopelessly swamped in its necessary work by decades of congressional niggardliness, has an estimate on Capitol Hill for $1,000,000 more for its running expenses next year.

The Council of Personnel Administration, conceded to be a fine idea in theory, is living up to its expectation in practice.

President Roosevelt has named as his adviser on personnel affairs a man who is unchallenged for the title of the most accomplished administrator in the Federal service and one of the keenest minds on personnel problems.

A Nation-wide resurgence of interest and support for the merit system has made its appearance.

MANY FORESEE DIFFICULTIES

Despite these encouraging auspices, the fifty-eighth year of the civil-service system may be one of the most difficult in its history.

It comes at a time of transition, when the negative aspects of the merit system battle—the fight against the spoilsman—are being converted into an even more difficult warfare—the establishment of a positive program to obtain for the Government and keep in its service the Nation's finest talent and capabilities.

There are many, however, who believe that much remains to be accomplished in putting the civil-service system on the right track. Sincere believers in merit rather than spoils, ardently interested in the problem of Government personnel, they are outspoken in criticism of the status quo and view the future through smoked glasses.

The basis of their argument—and it can be heard in a dozen different offices of a score of Federal agencies—is that the merit system advocates are still fighting a battle that has already been won. In other words, lances are still being raised against the evils of the spoils system, when the 57-year-old knight should be charging against a different citadel.

This, in brief, is the argument:

POLITICAL SPOILSMAN NO LONGER A TARGET

For all practical purposes, the spoilsman is dead. The Post Office Department, of course, still sends up to Capitol Hill the names of postmaster candidates for political clearance. One-third, approximately, of all Federal positions, including most of the top-ranking ones, are not under the competitive classified system. Now and again political pressure is exerted in the civil service itself.

But these situations are not nearly as serious as the weight in numbers would indicate. The fact is that, generally speaking, the political boss no longer stacks the Federal pay rolls. Federal Government jobs are no longer political booty in anything like the degree they were 60, 30, or even 10 years ago. Congressmen and political committees still try to place their ward heelers on the Federal pay roll, and still meet with some success. But the writing is on the wall and the momentum of merit-system support is not to be withstood. The era of "to victor belong the spoils" is in its twilight stages, and nothing can stop the coming of night.

According to the critics, the trouble is that few knives are being sharpened for the new battle—converting the civil-service system into a merit system under which the political hack is not merely barred from a Federal job but the best man among all others is actually chosen for it.

It is admitted that the trouble does not lie exclusively with the Civil Service Commission. It simply has never been given a chance to do anything but battle the spoilsman and make routine efforts to get nonpolitical personnel for the Government.

In this case the root of the evil is lack of money. The majority of Congress has not yet progressed to the stage of liking the agency which rotted the plums on its tree. It has therefore never given the Commission adequate funds. And the rest of the Government has, in the past, not fought with any noticeable valiance arm and arm along with the Commission.

The Commission's annual report, released a few days ago, told the story. In a nutshell, it is that the Commission is from 6 months to a year in arrears on its regular work of examining, investigating, grading, and hearing appeals. Snowed under with the deluge of its necessary routine work, it has had little time, and certainly no money, to take the steps necessary toward a positive personnel policy, toward fulfilling the function of a central recruiting and personnel agency, determined to get the best man into the Government service and develop his capabilities to the utmost.

On the other hand, it is not difficult to find those who have much to criticize in the Commission itself.

Their bill of particulars includes the charges that the Commission conceives of itself as the sole guardian of the merit system; that it is temperamentally inclined to view any suggestion for a change in procedure made by an outsider as an encroachment on its domain; that anyone who disagrees with the Commission's methods is a spoilsman, not honestly interested in the merit system.

The fact is, some honest merit system advocates insist, that the Commission has yet to develop a satisfactory examination method to select the most competent people for key executive, administrative, and nonscientific professional positions. Be it said, however, it is finally beginning to take promising experimental steps in this direction.

Nor has the Commission ever seriously attempted a thoroughgoing recruiting campaign. Its present policy of sending announcements of examinations to the press and posting them on post-office bulletin boards is admittedly less than adequate.

MUST COMPETE WITH PRIVATE INDUSTRY

The Commission is accused of showing professional jealousy in the framing and holding of its examinations, declining more often than not to let the agency for which the candidates are being examined have an adequate part in the whole procedure, from framing the questions to judging the results.

Finally, and this is the bitterest as well as the commonest complaint, the Commission has been too prone to consider itself a governmental Calpurnia, above reproach, and to answer criticism by the convenient method of ducking the issue and charging that the critic is a spoilsman.

Some other obvious difficulties in the year ahead:

With increasing improvement in national economic conditions, Government salaries will become steadily less alluring to qualified job hunters. The Government will have more and more difficulty in meeting the competition of private industry for the best lawyers, engineers, scientists, and administrators. A Government salary, in depression relatively high, so that it attracts the best man, induces only the second or third best in times of prosperity.

Increased emphasis on a national defense program is liable to result in neglect, both in thought and in money, to the Federal civil personnel picture.

Even with the addition of $10,000,000 to the Civil Service Commission's budget, it cannot possibly come abreast of its arrearages, meet new demands of the limited national emergency and still speed up its regular procedure to the point of ending widespread criticism by Government administrators that the civil service system is too slow to be practical. This feeling, as the commission is the first to admit, grows into a vicious circle, eventually resulting in a general condemnation of the merit system itself, and its steady sabotage.

This may, or may not, be the picture of the debit side of the ledger. On the credit side, however, there is no room for doubt.

It is a fact that the fifty-seventh year of the Federal Civil Service was one of the most successful in its history, and its fifty-eighth dawns with promising potentialities.

Here are a few of the tangible, important, forward steps taken in the Federal personnel system since this time last year:

President Roosevelt appointed, as his adviser on personnel affairs, William H. McReynolds, whose inaudible drawl hides as wise and knowing a mind and as prodigious an experience in administration and personnel matters as there is in the Government.

The President also appointed a Committee on Civil Service Improvement, consisting of seven sage and unbiased authorities, to give the merit system a much-needed overhauling "from keel to truck." Their report, expected within the month, should be a landmark in personnel philosophy.

The President created the Council of Personnel Administration, under the chairmanship of Frederick M. Davenport, to bring together for the first time more than a score of Federal personnel officers to lay out a modern program for employee relations.

The Civil Service Commission itself took the first step last year for a Government-wide program of in-service training and a uniform system of promotions. It also continued earlier tentative efforts to recruit well-trained personnel by "catching them early" with examinations of recent college graduates for junior professional positions. It conceives of these young men and women brought to the Government with a sound academic background as the nucleus of a professional career service.

GRIEVANCE MACHINERY TO BE SET UP

These developments of last year, however, are really just the seeds that promise to flower in the coming 12 months.

For the future, the Federal employee may look forward to the President's Committee report as setting up the basis for an employment system in the higher Federal brackets, comparable in fairness and open competitive characteristics to that which may obtain in the clerical grades, and which, at the same time, will not sacrifice quality at the expense of formula.

In this year also the Government worker may expect the pronouncement of a uniform, Government-wide departmental machinery for hearing grievances. This program is expected to be announced within a few weeks by the Council and the Commission. There is also a probability that it will be supplemented by a higher appeals court, set up by Congress. Hearings on the matter are expected this session before the House Civil Service Committee.

The first steps in providing a uniform plan for an equitable pay-raise program are expected to be outlined by the Budget Bureau within the next few months.

Further development of promotion-from-within programs and in-service training can be anticipated.

No summary of the civil-service system on its fifty-seventh birthday can be complete without the mention of the civil servants themselves. It is a fact—and will continue to be one—that achievements in improving the merit system have been and will be the direct result of pressure and agitation for them by the employees themselves.

They have been responsible for getting better wages, liberalized retirement provisions, shorter hours, and better working conditions. The eventual achievement of a complete promotion-from-within program, a workable appeals system, and a sound career service will be achieved eventually only because Federal workers will not rest until they have them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me as we approach these matters of appropriations we do more or less as I am doing right now as I hold this sheet too close to my eyes, and that is getting our problems right up too close to our noses rather than getting them back away from us where we can read; where we can see what the problem really is. As I thumb through the pages of this bill, H. R. 7922, I ask myself the question, which no doubt many of you have asked yourselves, What benefit to the general public of the United States, our taxpayers, are a lot of these commissions, or what benefit are they to any of us, and why should we continue to spend these millions of dollars?

I want to point out two or three of them that I think we could well do without to a large degree, if not entirely, and thus save ourselves considerable millions of tax money. However, that is not the question we are discussing at all, it seems to me. We are not discussing the question of justification for these expenditures, of whether we can do away with these commissions by refusing to make any appropriations; it is, rather, how we can cut down the appropriations a few dollars, whereas we should be saving the whole sums in many cases.

Why not cut out a few of these commissions and administrative agencies which have been set up during the last fifty-odd years in this Nation, starting with the great Interstate Commerce Commission? Who of us would miss them, and how much would it affect the general welfare of the Nation?

I understand that in the last 7 years there have been 51 additional administrative agencies established, which are today legislating, interpreting, and determining rules of law and taking away from Congress its powers that were established under the Constitution.

Another matter of detail in connection with this problem of increasing taxation and increasing appropriations every year is that we lose sight of the fact that the Federal Government in appropriating money is only one of some 176,000 similar, if lesser, tax-appropriating or tax-creating and levying bodies throughout the Nation.

In other words, have we not gotten this thing up to the point where it is just too big, too cumbersome, to be practical? Why should we not start tearing this cumbersome thing apart, we, as Members of the House of Representatives, with the idea of getting rid of some of these things, instead of wondering how few dollars we can cut down their requests for appropriations?

As I said a moment ago, as I thumb through this bill I find here several commissions and boards that I believe we could well do without entirely in the economy of this Nation. For instance, here is the Federal Communications Commission asking for an appropriation of $2,116,340. Here is the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for an appropriation of $9,058,750. Here is the Tariff Board asking us for an appropriation of $920,000. Of what benefit are these commissions to any of us or to the people of the United States? What are they doing for the people to justify these expenditures?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sorry, but I have not the time.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman asked a question. The gentleman wants to know of what benefit they are.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will tell the gentleman of what benefit they are. They are of benefit only to the members of the commissions and to the organizations they are set up to protect and promote the welfare of. That is all the benefit they are. They are of no benefit to the citizenry of this country in general, who are paying the taxes and putting up millions of dollars to support them. Of what benefit to us is the Interstate Commerce Commission? It is only of benefit to the railroads.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I cannot yield now. My time is too limited.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman has asked a question, and I would like to answer it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will answer it. Let me read this paragraph which I have here, taken from a recent speech delivered by Joseph B. Eastman, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and I ask the gentleman to carefully mark these lines. I quote Mr. Eastman:

The old purpose of regulation, when it was first instituted, was, I think, protection of the patrons of the railroad.

Sure! Away back in 1887 that was the idea that we had in mind when we set up the Interstate Commerce Commission—protection of the patrons, small-business men, and weaker railroads. I go on and quote Mr. Eastman, as follows:

That has changed. Now the purpose which is practically paramount is the protection of the carriers—the utility.

This is taken from an address by Mr. Eastman before the New England Shippers' Advisory Board at Burlington, Vt., and is reported in Railroad Data, volume 17, No. 20, of December 29, 1939, at page 41.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am sorry, I cannot yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suggest this: If you and I are members of any particular professional or trade organization or commercial body, what do we do? For instance, take the owners of large office buildings, real-estate owners. What do they do? Also other organizations, such as the coal men, labor unions, dentists, and the doctors, and all of the other trade and professional groups.

Have they come here and asked Congress to set up an organization and have they asked for millions of dollars to operate their trade organizations as the railroads and the radio and the other communicating agencies of this Nation have done? No, they have set up their own trade associations, and they have assessed their members for the costs of operating same. In view of the fact just quoted from Chairman Eastman's speech, protection of the carriers being paramount, why not do the same thing in connection with the railroads? We could save over $9,000,000, a nice saving, by letting the railroads pay the cost of their trade organization, the Interstate Commerce Commission. What good is the Interstate Commerce Commission to anybody except to the railroads? I cannot seem to find that anybody, even some of the railroads, are getting much benefit out of it. If I am to read correctly from this annual report of November 1, 1939, from the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, here is what I find in this interesting document: Here is a 10-year report on debts. The debt in 1928 of the railroads was $12,303,510,000 and in 1938, last year, under this report, as here recorded, the debt is $12,373,685,000, including $733,778,000 of defaulted debts, or an increase of over $70,000,000 in that indebtedness under the magnificent supervision and control and operation jointly of the Interstate Commerce Commission and high-salaried railroad executives. What do we find with reference to the stock of the railroads? In 1928 the capital stock in the railroads amounted to $9,722,078,000 and in 1938, 10 years later, the stock issued and outstanding by the railroads amounted to $9,788,413,000, or an increase of sixty-six-million-odd dollars during that 10-year period instead of paying up and retiring their stock issues. Is there any improvement in the situation of the railroads under the benign operation and influence of this Interstate Commerce Commission? I contend that no benefit is being derived by either the people or by the railroads; but if the railroads want this Interstate Commerce Commission, if these other trade groups want these commissions, why not throw them onto them and let them pay the cost; let them assess themselves the cost and not put the cost of these millions on the general public that has no great interest except incidentally in many of these groups.

As I go into this matter I find we the people have to pay the cost in connection with the Interstate Commerce Commission operation of the railroads. Many of the railroad boys, especially the presidents, are receiving high salaries.

If we are going to pay a commission to operate the railroads, as the I. C. C. is, why pay these railroad executives the high salaries that are being paid to them? I think it would be much better to either do one thing or the other—either have complete Government control or none. If we the people are going to put out money for a Government-supported institution, the Interstate Commerce Commission, to operate the railroads, why not take over the railroads? We could save in that way the dividends to the stockholders which amount, in some cases, according to information I have just received, to $10 a share, and the average yield on stock, according to information that I have here, was 6.7 percent. For 1938 it was 4.34, according to this I. C. C. report. We could also save in the money we are borrowing for the railroads on this $12,373,685,000 debt that I just mentioned. They are paying an average of some 5.41 percent for the money they are borrowing, or at least railroad bonds are yielding that percentage of earnings for their holders. We could save a lot of money if we would take over the railroads, for by assuming their debts the Government could borrow the money for much less. As a governmental proposition I understand we are only paying 2.6 percent for the money we are borrowing today. Is it not common sense that we do a few of these things and cut out this tremendous expense for dividends, interest, and salaries which, in the latter case, is duplication? We are paying railroad executives for holding down an easy chair and we are paying the Interstate Commerce Commission to tell them how to hold down that easy chair. Let us get busy on this thing and not look at these things with the book too close to our eyes. Let us say, "What good are these commissions?" and if they are no good to the general public, throw out the entire appropriation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], I discussed an appropriation for a building for the General Accounting Office recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. I regret to find myself in disagreement with the committee, but I know that what I have to say now will not be beneficial insofar as this bill is concerned, but I want to tell the Members of the House something in relation to the housing situation that affects the General Accounting Office today.

Their activities are scattered in 15 different places in the District of Columbia. The main office is in the old Pension Building. I do not know who designed the old Pension Building nor why it was designed in such a way, but if it is to be used to house Government agencies, it should be remodeled.

The General Accounting Office is now paying $169,026 annually for rent. Some of the places rented are old stables and garages, where records are kept. It is costing $129,400 to maintain the properties that they rent, or a total of $298,426 annually. The Comptroller General, who is the head of the General Accounting Office, says that as long as the situation now existing prevails it is impossible for him to coordinate the activities of the Office or to increase the efficiency of the personnel. The fact that the offices are scattered all over the city of Washington means additional expense for personnel; also the work is slowed up.

Every claim filed against the Government in courts, in departments, and by individuals must be answered by the records of the Government in possession of the General Accounting Office. The records of the General Accounting Office can never be placed in The Archives Building, because they are being used from day to day. Claims a hundred years old are almost a weekly occurrence. Now, just imagine what will happen if those records are destroyed by fire or water. Practically 85 percent of the claims against the Government the General Accounting Office is able to defeat. On thousands and thousands of claims they will find the voucher where the money claimed has been paid. Some relative of a former soldier, some relative of a former contractor will make a claim.

They go and consult the old records, and their decision is based upon their findings. They also supply the Attorney General with records to use in the courts in suits against the Government. They also supply the Attorney General with records on the many bills that we pass here, certifying claims to the Court of Claims.

All that Members of Congress have to do, in order to get a real picture of this situation, is to get the Annual Report of the Comptroller General for this year, turn to page 81, and read what he has to say. Then get in your automobile and drive around to the various places as I have and see for yourselves where the valuable records of the Government are stored. I will go further and say "the most valuable records that the Government has." The money we are paying out every year in rental and maintenance for the rented buildings is far more than sufficient to pay the interest on the money that would be necessary to build a proper place to house this permanent agency. When I say "permanent" I mean permanent, because it is one agency of the Government that will never be destroyed. Nearly all of the other agencies and departments have been taken care of. The General Accounting Office, as I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] today, is more closely related to the Congress of the United States than any other Government agency. Still we have never taken care of it by providing for a proper building.

You talk about self-liquidating projects. If we can borrow the money to build a building for less than the annual rental that we are paying, it looks to me like it is good business to do so. In time it would be a self-liquidating project. I am not asking the committee to build one of the marble palaces. I have never approved of some of the buildings that have been constructed in Washington. I think on some we went too far. Put up a real substantial concrete building, some place down by the Procurement Division, or any other section where land values are not too high. That is all that is necessary for this agency.

Look at the Procurement Division Building. That is not a bad looking place. It is not marble. It is not limestone. It is concrete. The Navy workshop up on Constitution Avenue and the Munitions Building on Constitution Avenue are not marble or limestone. They are concrete and brick. They are fireproof and afford a healthy place for personnel to work. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War do just as good work in a concrete building as they would in a marble structure. I am not asking for the full appropriation. I do want to see a start because, as I said yesterday, hundreds of millions of dollars in records might be lost in event of fire.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have been sponsoring building, and my committee passed legislation to authorize the reconstruction of the Army Medical Library Building, that is now 132 years old, a building where there is no fire protection for the most valuable collection of medical authorities on the face of the earth. I have hesitated, on account of economy and a few other things in which I believe—hesitated to urge that, and I have not even been before the Appropriations Committee on it. I would, however, like to suggest to the gentleman that the proper solution to the problem is not to build some kind of building as large as the Social Security Building, or warehouse construction of any kind to house these records. The thing to do is to cut out a lot of the agencies that make the records which have to be stored.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman going to offer some amendments to the bill to cut out some of the agencies that he feels are useless? We hear a lot of talk about economy but see little action from those who talk. We heard the gentleman from Minnesota a moment ago state that the Interstate Commerce Commission should be abolished, that it is useless; that the Communications Commission is useless; that the Tariff Commission is useless. Did you ever hear a more silly statement in your life? Anybody who knows anything about the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Communications Commission or the Tariff Commission knows they are an absolute necessity. What would happen if you repealed all laws affecting communications in this country and destroyed the Communications Commission? Just imagine what would happen. Everybody would use any radio wave length he wanted, there would be no regulation of radio, no regulation of communications of any kind whatsoever. If you destroy the Interstate Commerce Commission what are you going to do with the rate-making powers? Would you turn them back to the States again? What will you do with the regulation of transportation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; let them regulate themselves.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Interstate Commerce Commission was delegated by the Congress of the United States power to make rates and to regulate transportation.

The gentleman's suggestion is in the same class with his original statement. If you destroy them, how can they even regulate themselves? Let the gentleman offer an amendment to destroy them and see how many votes he will get.

I appeal to the committee to inspect the buildings where the General Accounting Office is housed, and if you do you will bring in an appropriation to build their building. Act before it is too late. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill has been well covered by other members of the Committee. I merely wish to call attention to some information carried in the hearings on the estimates and possibly point to a few steps that Congress could well take in the hope of making some of the savings we hear so much about. The printed hearings are in two volumes. The Federal Loan Agency, the Federal Works Agency, and the Tennessee Valley Authority are in part II, the several other activities in part I.

When I hear this discussion about cutting and Budget balancing, I am reminded of a story that is told by Ote Anderson, chairman of the State barbers' board in my home State. Ote's favorite story is of a customer who came into his shop one day, slumped into the chair but kept his hat on. Ote said to him, "Want a haircut?"

"Yep."

"Would you mind removing your hat?"

"Nope, keep it on."

And with that the customer pulled his hat down a little further.

"O. K.," says Ote, "the customer is always right," and proceeded to give him a haircut without removing his hat.

My observation is that the Government has too many customers who talk of haircuts but want to keep their own hats on and have the trimming done somewhere else—any place other than on their private "dome" or their private domain.

The hearings on the independent offices bill are an amazing encyclopedia of governmental activities. I want to call your attention to a few of the agencies covered. Any Member of the House can run through these hearings with profit to himself both for the information that they give as to the ramifications of Government and also for specific information with reference to activities and the answering of questions that come across every Member's desk.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY AND AIR SAFETY

Little has been said in the debate thus far about the work of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. You will find many pages of the hearings devoted to the interesting work of this agency, so important at this time in our national life. I want especially to call your attention to the safety record that has been established in passenger travel.

In the 4 years from July 1, 1934, to July 31, 1938, there was 1 passenger fatality for every 12,754 passenger-miles, but in the 17½ months following July 1, 1938, there was only 1 passenger fatality for every 78,368,315 passenger-miles. I believe every Member of Congress is entitled to take some feeling of pride in the accomplishments that have been made in the improvement of the safety record of the airlines of the country. In 8 months and 20 days between March 26 and December 15 the domestic air lines carried 1,500,000 passengers and amassed a total of 598,000,000 passenger-miles without an accident that resulted in an injury.

This is a remarkable record, and some of the credit should go to the work of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Some of you will be interested in the statistics and the data given on civilian pilot training in the hearings.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Does the gentleman have similar information with reference to fatalities and mileage on other transportation facilities that would be comparable to this?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think we asked some questions in the hearing with regard to the effect on insurance rates, and an encouraging statement was given on that particular point.

PAYMENT FOR VETERANS' HOSPITAL BEDS

Yesterday, during the discussion of the Veterans' Administration, a question was raised with regard to the beds in the Veterans' Administration hospitals used for people who are not veterans; that is, enrollees of the Civilian Conservation Corps and other Government patients. The question was asked whether or not the Veterans' Administration is reimbursed for all of the beds so used.

This morning, to be sure on the point, I called the Veterans' Administration and talked with Colonel Ijams, the Assistant Administrator, and he assured me that there is a reciprocal agreement among the several Government agencies, the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Veterans' Administration, for payment covering the patients of their respective responsibilities hospitalized in any institution related to any of those agencies. Only one or two agencies are not covered in this agreement. At the present time the rate of reimbursement is $3.75 per day. That is gone over and fixed each year by the Federal Board of Hospitalization.

However, veterans are always given preference, and Colonel Ijams said there was no known emergency veteran's case on a waiting list at this time. The Veterans' Administration section of the subcommittee hearings gives much additional information to anyone who is interested in the welfare of the veterans.

STATISTICS ON TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Chairman, there is also a section devoted to the Tariff Commission. Those Members who are interested in the problem which will confront this Congress with reference to the proposal to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act will find a wealth of material in that particular section of the hearings. You will find a list of the several trade agreements in existence at the present time, the date on which they were placed in operation, the terms of their expiration.

To those of you who have been interested in trying to establish the principle of cost of production as a gage for a proper tariff rate, I call your attention to the testimony of Mr. Ryder, given at pages 484 and 485 of the hearings. When that question was put to him, Mr. Ryder answered:

If you want to take into consideration the cost of production and attempt to make the tariff protect that larger cost of domestic production, it is a good way of abolishing the trade agreements.

I commend that to the attention of those who say they want to protect the domestic cost of production and also want to extend the trade-agreements program on its present basis. Mr. Ryder says it cannot be done.

Permit me to make an observation at this point. We hear a great deal of talk about totalitarian governments in the world today. It seems to me a perfectly foolish proposition that we should be condemning totalitarian governments while at the same time in this country we give more authority to bureaus and boards. That certainly is a step away from rep-representative government. The times challenge this Congress to put the Government of the United States back into the hands of the people and their elected representatives. Every time we delegate these powers to bureaus or agencies and surrender the right to review the findings, we are destroying representative government.

PUBLIC ROADS AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS

You will find in our hearings two agencies that have not been in the independent offices hearings before. One is Public Roads and the other is Public Buildings, both now in the Federal Works Agency.

Formerly the Public Roads hearings appeared in the report of the appropriations subcommittee for the Department of Agriculture. Public Buildings appeared in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation hearings. Those of you who are interested in post-office buildings in your district will find information of interest in the hearings under the general heading of "Federal Works Agency."

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], who spoke just before I took the floor, made a plea for buildings in the District of Columbia. The subcommittee was unwilling to put into this bill a proposal to start a twenty-four or twenty-five million dollar building program in the District of Columbia when there were no estimates for an equally needed public-building program throughout the country. More than that, some of us had a distinct feeling that a survey should be made of the buildings within the District of Columbia to see if space could not be found to assign to some of the agencies now in rented buildings.

MOUNTING CIVIL-SERVICE COSTS

You have heard a discussion this afternoon of the action of the committee relative to the Civil Service Commission. It is true that the committee denied about a quarter of a million dollars of the recommended increase for the Civil Service Commission, but I call your attention to the fact that the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission in 6 years has multiplied five times. In 1934 the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission was $1,028,000. The request for 1941 was $5,295,000. It is true that from the standpoint of the work of the Commission there is some justification for an increase, and the committee did give it about three-quarters of the million-dollar increase requested.

Let me call attention to some startling figures brought out before the subcommittee. Today the Civil Service Commission is behind in its work to the extent of 384,000 examination papers that have to be graded. It is behind in its work to the extent of 186,000 applications to be reviewed. This takes on some meaning when you realize that the 384,000 papers to be graded exceed the total number of papers graded in the last fiscal year. The total number of papers graded in the last fiscal year was 361,000. So that the Civil Service Commission is more than a year behind in the grading of papers, in spite of the increases that have been given that Commission.

In addition to that the increase in the number of applications creates a cycle of increased burden, so to speak. The more papers to grade, the more the examiners get behind. The more they get behind, the more the requests for an explanation of delay. Members of Congress no doubt have received many requests from constituents who want to know when the examination grades will be announced for the position of lay inspector. There were 240,000 examination applicants for the position of lay inspector; in other words, two-thirds of the entire examination load of the Civil Service Commission for a year could be taken for grading those papers alone.

The committee gave considerable attention to this problem. We found that many States and many cities operating a merit system charge a small examining fee. This has two values: It yields some revenue, not enough, probably, to cover the cost of giving the examinations, but it yields some revenue, and it does tend to reduce the number of applicants for some of the examinations. One of the cities reported that a small fee reduces the load by eliminating the curiosity seekers and what was termed fly-by-night applicants. Tables in the hearings give the experience of several cities and several States.

Personally, I think that a 25-cent fee on simple examinations, and $1 on technical or professional papers would yield $100,000 in revenue annually, and save twice that in reducing the handling load.

It was suggested that the Committee on Appropriations might consider trying to do something about that problem in the appropriations bill. On the other hand, it was felt that it was properly legislation. As one Member, at least, of the subcommittee I hope that the Civil Service Committees of the House and the Senate will propose legislation on the subject. It is all very well when this load accumulates to come before the Committee on Appropriations and say, "We must have increased appropriations because of this increased load," but it would be better to see if something cannot be done to reduce this load.

SAVINGS BY REASSIGNING SPACE

I referred a few minutes ago to the possibility of reducing the building and rental load in the District of Columbia by a survey of the available space in the District. In spite of all the reorganization economies that were promised practically every agency asked for more money.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It was amusing also to find that some of the transferred agencies could not be housed by the agency to which they were transferred. They were like orphan chickens, so to speak. An example of this was the Bureau of Biological Survey, which was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior. We have a magnificent new Department of the Interior building down here, and we also have the old Interior building, and yet we were asked to make an appropriation for an increased rental allowance in the District of Columbia so the Bureau of Biological Survey could be housed in rented quarters.

In fact, evidence before the committee revealed an increase in the rental appropriations in the District of Columbia of over 20 percent in 2 years, in spite of all the new buildings. Demands for new furniture and more space, in spite of all the talk about economies to come from reorganization and consolidations. Therefore, it seemed to us that someone should have authority to do something about this problem.

We asked the Administrator of the new Federal Works Agency and members of his staff with respect to this subject. Testimony indicated that if one agency in the Government was empowered to have custody over all public buildings in the District of Columbia and authority to assign the space and the furniture properly, important savings could be made. We asked for appropriate language to put in the bill as a limitation on the appropriations. However, the language suggested was so patently legislation that we did not incorporate it in the bill. You will find the suggestion on pages 1340 and 1341 of the hearings.

The language suggested should be introduced as a bill and considered by the appropriate legislative committee. Personally I believe we can save real money by giving one agency authority over the furniture and the space in buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If there is to be another agency for that purpose, would it be made up of persons already in the Government employ or would they be new officers?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This proposal was to give the authority to the Federal Works Agency, already in existence, which is charged with the responsibility of proposing the construction of new buildings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This will just let some of the Federal employees do more work along that line?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That will be good.

LIMITING UNITED STATES HOUSING ADMINISTRATION'S PUBLICITY FUNDS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wish to mention the United States Housing Authority. You will find in the bill before you a proviso that may possibly be misunderstood. It is the proviso on page 49 that expenditures for the informational service of the United States Housing Authority shall not exceed $152,000. This proviso will be difficult to understand unless you know that this agency came before the subcommittee with a supposed justification for spending $227,000 in its informational service. The proviso is a limitation, not an authorization; a restriction, not a permission. U. S. H. A.'s far-flung informational activities embrace a coordination section, a press-service section, an editorial section, an information section, an exhibit section, and a motion-picture and radio section. All these to tell the people of the country how they can avail themselves of subsidized housing. In other words, we were asked to authorize the appropriation of nearly a quarter of a million dollars so that the Santa Claus housing program could be sold to the country. Remember that the taxpayers provide a Federal subsidy that takes care of the principal cost of this building and housing program.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Why should the United States Housing Authority be granted one single penny for this sort of propaganda?

I happen to be familiar with this propaganda, and I would like to know why they should have one nickel to spend for it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say to the gentleman that, personally, I tried to go further in the subcommittee, but the only agreement we could reach was to reduce the amount by $75,000; and, remember, if we had not put in this proviso, the agency would be spending $227,000 for this purpose next year.

EMPHASIS ON CITIZENSHIP

I also want to call your attention to one further proviso in the section relating to the United States Housing Authority. Some of you may recall that when the Housing Authority bill was passed in 1937 I offered an amendment to provide that in the assignment of the housing facilities to be provided preference should be given families of citizens of the United States. No one could justify taxing citizens living in $1,500 houses to provide $6,000 houses for families of people who were not citizens. The amendment was adopted by the House but went out when the bill went to conference. Members of the House who were interested at that time will be glad to see a proviso which the subcommittee wrote into this appropriation bill. On page 50 you will find it—

That, except for payments required on contracts entered into prior to the date of enactment of this act, no part of this appropriation shall be available for payment to any public-housing agency for expenditure in connection with any low-rent housing project, any portion of which is occupied by any person other than a citizen of the United States.

The committee went further in its emphasis upon Americanism in this particular bill, for on page 78 you will find section 4, which provides:

No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States, or a person in the service of the United States on the date of the approval of this act who being eligible for citizenship has filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States.

I do not believe there will be any quarrel on the part of any Member of the House in connection with these provisos.

We have had a good deal of discussion about Americanism during the past year, and this bill comes to you with two provisos in it at least that attempt to translate that sentiment into action. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, we have before us here a bill containing a variety of items, many of which have been cut by the committee. I want to say that wherever it is possible to reduce the overhead expenses of government or to eliminate any functions not really essential I am for doing so. I do not propose to address myself in these few moments to any of those specific items, or even particularly to this bill, but I do want to point out one or two basic things.

Up to this time we have not done anything to put on a workable, scientific basis the monetary system of the United States. We do not have a means yet whereby the increase in the Nation's wealth and the Nation's capacity to produce goods will be adequately translated into an increased volume of active consumer purchasing power, which to my mind is the central problem we face; and because that is true, it has therefore been also true that to the extent that savings were made out of the current income distributed by industry and agriculture to our people, to that same extent we have found a failure of market demand to be able to take the goods off of the shelves and the crops off of the farms at decent prices.

The real reason for Government expenditures or the real economic basis for Government expenditures has been to compensate for the failure of savings promptly to be invested. The real reason that they are not promptly invested, of course, is that people are afraid it will not be profitable to do so, and the basic reason they are afraid of that is because of the fact they are afraid that goods produced by the new capital created will not find an adequate consumer demand.

Now, the main thing I want to say right now is this: When we come a little bit later in this session to a consideration, which I am afraid will be all too brief, of the unemployment problem still existing in the United States, I hope we will remember one or two things. I hope we will remember the factors I have just spoken of and I hope we will remember also that to the extent, under our present monetary system, that private debt is not contracted, either you suffer a net deficiency of the medium of exchange in circulation or else Government debt must be increased. I do not believe that is right, or that it should be the case, but it is the present situation, and to fail to supply active consumer-buying power in some manner is as certain as the sun rises to lead to bankruptcies and a worse depression.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In just a moment.

Therefore, when the time comes to consider the matter of public works or other matters having to do with employment of the unemployed, I want to state now that I feel that what is done about that should be done on the basis of what the national need is; first, the need of our people who are unemployed, and, second, the need of the national economy as a whole.

I am frank to say that I do not believe the Budget figures suggested for employment items is enough. I do not believe employment is going to be stimulated to any considerable extent by national defense expenditures such as are proposed to be increased. I do not mean that I am against such expenditures for national defense, as may be required at this time, but I think it must be recognized that they will not provide anything like the same volume of employment as certain other types of expenditure will. This is not just a question of W. P. A., though this year, once again, it will probably be our main reliance. For my part I would like to see a bill brought in which would give us a long-range program of public works which could be opened up as needed in accordance with the amount of unemployment. Above all things we need a consistent program for reemployment, and until we have something better, Mr. Chairman, we have no logical answer to our people except the programs used in the past few years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, we have no logical answer to our people except to say that we propose to see to it that all the people are busy producing real, worthwhile things in this country, and that they are not maintained in idleness.

Mr. PATMAN rose.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am in duty bound to yield first to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that this increased buying power is better produced by private activity or by Government expenditure?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would rather see everybody in the country employed in private industry, if possible, but I point out that, although our production has increased up to or beyond the 1929 level, employment has increased only about one-quarter as fast as production, and I submit that that is evidence of the fact that you have to take some action in this field of the relationship between the producing power of the country and the consuming power of its people.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Has the gentleman ever seen any evidence of any particular effect by Government expenditure except a depressing effect upon private industry?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. On the contrary, the worst effect that was ever gotten since I have been a Member of Congress was in 1937, when a sharp reduction was made in the expenditures for employment of unemployed people, and it was not 6 months before we had the sharpest decline in the business of the country that the country has ever experienced. In addition to that there were certain factors connected with social security, but the basic reason for the slump was the sudden reduction in the amount Government had been feeding into the income stream. This, of course, offered no permanent solution by itself, but if the method is to be used at all it should be used vigorously enough to actually stimulate increased production and a large enough national income to balance the Budget. I am not in favor of a lot of people being employed by the Government. I want them to be employed in private industry, but I do say that the volume of consumer buying power is the key to it, and every time that has been increased, you have increased employment, and every time it has been decreased you have decreased employment.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. JOHNS. I ask the gentleman from California if he does not think that a public-works program would be much preferable to the W. P. A. or relief?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I answer the gentleman briefly and say that I would like to see a program which would have scope for projects to be carried on, on either the P. W. A. plan or the W. P. A. I think there are some kinds of work that can only be done by free account, and there are other jobs that could and should be done by contract. I would like to see a program which could be run either way. Certainly I am for public works rather than relief.

Mr. JOHNS. Would not the public-works program be preferable if it could be handled?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I cannot answer that categorically. In some things I do not think it would. I would say that wherever it could be handled well I would think so, and I would be in favor of it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. In addition to the things that the gentleman named had a harmful effect on the country in 1937, does not the gentleman believe that the doubling of the reserve requirements of the banks in 1936 and early 1937 was harmful to the country and one of the greatest contributing factors to the decline in 1937?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think so. I might add that I favor a 100-percent reserve system for demand deposits, but I agree with the gentleman that under the circumstances existing in 1937 the action he mentions probably contributed to the slump.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in every attempt to destroy republican democracies in the world there have been certain straw men built up to be knocked down at will. Stalin has as his straw man the capitalistic nations. Mussolini has as his straw man the democracies of the world. Hitler has as his straw man the Jews and the Catholics. We must be careful in America that the bankers and the industrialists do not become the straw men of the New Deal. In all of these regimes there have been certain methods by which the activities of these straw men are constantly reported to those who destroy them. Hitler has his Gestapo. Stalin has his OGPU. And we must be cautious in America that the New Deal or any other subversive influence in America does not create a similar secret police force. It came to my attention a short time ago that the W. P. A. is being used in many instances as the secret police of this Government; and so that we might be forewarned that similar attempts might not be used to overthrow this republican democracy, I call the House's attention to what I consider a most flagrant abuse of a position by a man in authority in the W. P. A. in New York State. On the Republican side of the House there is a man with whom sometimes we disagree, but in whom we have the utmost confidence; a man of fixed integrity, a man of high purpose, who alone has saved this Government millions upon millions of dollars, and who is constantly calling our attention to the necessity for reducing Government expenditures, having in mind that unless we do so there is a probability that the American form of government might be destroyed.

That man has been attacked by this organization, which sets itself up in some particulars as an American OGPU. I call the attention of the House to a report which was given—

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. What was the name of that organization?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we should characterize it as "an American OGPU." I do not know what that means, but it is the secret police that Stalin uses to find out what is going on in his country.

I wonder if possibly all Members of Congress are not subject to the same scrutiny in all their actions by this American secret police that this particular Member of Congress was? I wonder how many reports are going into Washington and how many reports are going into the administrative branches of government on the activities of Members of Congress from all over the United States? I do not think I need mention the fact that the Member of Congress to whom I refer is the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER. He can very well speak for himself. It does not make any difference whether it is the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER, or any other Member of this House. The W. P. A. has apparently launched upon a new and very unusual project—that of snooping and reporting to headquarters what Members of Congress are doing and saying.

A year or so ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] called attention to a project in his district, and it appears on page 129 of the hearings on the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938. He was quizzing Mr. Hopkins, and this is what happened. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said to Mr. Hopkins:

Now, I have a picture here which shows the kind of work which has been going on in my territory. I would like to have you look at it.

I have since been informed that it was a picture from a newspaper. A local newspaper took this picture and published it. It was only natural that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], in representing his district, would have this information and would be quizzing Mr. Hopkins with reference to it.

Mr. Hopkins answered:

It looks like good propaganda.

Mr. TABER. It is not propaganda at all.

Mr. HOPKINS. It has all the earmarks of it.

Mr. TABER. It happened to be in the papers.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can tell from the kind of heading they have what it is. I will be glad to look into that and answer it for you. It may not have been a W. P. A. road at all.

Mr. TABER. They do not say it is a W. P. A. road, but they say it is a W. P. A. sewer job. I have seen this thing myself, and I know it looks like that.

A member of this new American Ogpu who happened to be on the pay roll of the W. P. A. was asked to make a report, and on the letterhead of the "W. P. A. of New York State, District No. 7 of Onondaga County, interdepartmental memorandum, avoid verbal orders," under date of August 25, 1939, we have this following very unusual report on the activity of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] in his particular district. This is addressed to Mr. Willis D. George and is from Mr. William M. Coyne, who bears the very novel and unusual title of information-service representative.

Did you know that W. P. A. had information-service representatives throughout the Nation on the W. P. A. pay roll, reporting to W. P. A. headquarters, and perhaps other administrative agencies, on the activities of Members of Congress? After giving a report on this particular job, Mr. Coyne has this to say of Mr. TABER's activities:

There have been persistent reports, which were never refuted by any source, that on the eve of congressional action on the original reorganization bill Mr. TABER conspired with Auburn manufacturers to have industrial employees send telegrams of opposition to the bill to Washington, and that they went out of the telegraph offices in Auburn and other sections of Cayuga County in wholesale lots.

Information reached us that employees of the Auburn Rope Co., one of the larger of Auburn's industries, distinctly were given to understand that they were doing a favor for the Congressman and for Cayuga County in sending out the telegrams.

This is signed by William M. Coyne, information-service representative.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this Congress intended, when it set up the W. P. A. and provided moneys by which relief was to be given to the poor and needy of this Nation, that we were creating a secret police to inform administration offices on the attitude of Congressmen on particular bills. It does not make any difference who this Member is. Do we favor a continuance of this particular brand of activity by the W. P. A.? What was it to the representative of the W. P. A. what the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] happened to think about the reorganization bill? How does it concern the W. P. A. what you and I and every other Member of Congress may think on reorganization, the Townsend plan, or any one of the thousand other controversial subjects which may be brought to the floor of this House for consideration? Surely we should guard ourselves and the people whom we represent against any attempt whatsoever to set up in the name of relief a secret organization which is prying into our secret matters and reporting them to heads of departments here in Washington, in order that the information may be used in our districts, as well as among the lobbyists here on the floor of Congress, in respect to legislation which we have to consider.

I hope that the forewarning which these remarks will give to the membership of the House will be sufficient that we may check this business, not for ourselves, because, after all, the life of every Member of Congress is like an open book. We never do anything which we do not want our constituents to know; we do not do anything on the floor or in our private lives which is subject to criticism. What I object to is the principle of the thing, that there is growing up in this administration, under the control of a political head, a secret police which might eventually be as destructive to a republican democracy as the Ogpu of Stalin or the Gestapo of Hitler.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Does not the gentleman believe that this should apply also to the Army and the Navy and several other agencies?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no knowledge that the Army or the Navy or any personnel of the Army or the Navy is being used as a part of an American Gestapo. I say to the gentleman frankly that if it became known to me as a Member of Congress that the Army of this Nation was being used in any manner to help in the destruction of American democracy, then the men responsible for it should be removed from their places, and the members of the Army and the Navy who are doing it should be court-martialed and summarily dealt with, as the gentleman or I would have expected to be done during the World War in case of any like activity.

Mr. HOOK. I am pleased to hear the gentleman say that; but will the gentleman enlighten us as to whether he has any other instance in the whole set-up of the W. P. A. like this?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I have not. I am merely voicing this as a warning, so that there may not be other instances, and we can guard against their attempting such things. It is the duty of the gentleman as a Member of Congress, representing his constituency, as he always does, intelligently, to bring any such activity to the attention of Congress in order that we may be forewarned, in order that if we ourselves do learn of them we may recognize them as attempts to overthrow democracy and guard against such attempts. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I secured this time primarily for the purpose of talking a little about more money for the construction of post-office buildings throughout the United States, but before touching that subject I want to compliment the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the valuable information that he gave us yesterday morning with reference to a break-down of the cost of the Veterans' Bureau.

He forcibly called to our attention that the Government is required to expend over $500,000,000 a year in that connection because of expenses and pensions. I feel, in the face of that enormous expenditure, that in many instances the Government has been very tight and selfish in its treatment of the men who served their country in those wars from which they are now pensioners. This information emphasizes the fact that we must keep out of wars unless we are forced into them as a matter of self-defense in the future unless we court national bankruptcy. That is not touching at all upon the humane side of the question. We must also consider, in connection with wars, the human wrecks that are thus caused. We have the humane side as well as the economic side to consider.

I want to call attention now to a specific act of Congress that was passed in the Seventy-fifth Congress in which $60,000,000 was authorized for the purpose of building post offices throughout the United States over a period of 3 years. That act did not provide that any specific amount of the $60,000,000 should be appropriated during any particular year. That act was amended by Public Resolution No. 122, which in title III provided an additional $70,000,000, making a total of $130,000,000 authorized for the purpose of constructing new post-office buildings throughout the United States.

According to my figures, $89,000,000 of the $130,000,000 heretofore authorized has been appropriated. The pending bill would appropriate an additional $15,000,000 of the balance, leaving twenty-six million unappropriated of the amount heretofore authorized. As stated, Congress in the act approved in August 1937 made provision for this money to be spent during the 3 years which will expire in August 1940 this year.

This amount of money, if we pay any attention to the direction of Congress, should be used for the construction of post-office buildings throughout the United States where they are needed. If we do not raise or up the amount that is provided in the present bill, we shall at the end of this year have $26,000,000 left which has heretofore been authorized but unappropriated out of the money that was supposed to be used for the purpose of building post-office buildings throughout the United States.

I have prepared an amendment which I am going to offer to the bill when we reach page 41, providing for upping this appropriation to the sum of $37,000,000. This will assist in the construction of post-office buildings throughout the United States.

I call your attention specifically to Public Document No. 177, which contains the numbers of post-office sites that are eligible, but for which no money has been appropriated. Take, for instance, my own State alone. In the district I represent we have secured one post-office building in a town where the postal receipts run far in excess of the requirement. There are 16 other cities that are eligible, according to the list published by the Post Office Department. What happens when publication is given to the list of eligible cities in a district? Your people believe that the money is available for the construction of these buildings and they believe that their Congressman is derelict in his duty in not securing the necessary appropriations. I have cities in my district where the Federal agencies are required to be housed in the courthouse basements, even close to the furnace, because we have no buildings sufficient to house them. It is my personal belief that the Government is in business to stay for at least some time, and we must find some place to house these public agencies aside from the post-office requirements.

Consequently we should do one of two things—either provide sufficient money to meet the needs of people in the way of post-office buildings and Federal agency requirements or we should not publish to the country the list of cities that are eligible for post-office buildings. As I said before, the public is misled.

I want to include in the RECORD the names of the cities in my district that are eligible and in which many agencies of the Government are housed in different locations all over the cities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, even a casual reading of the Appropriations Committee hearings pertaining to the Federal Communications Commission should convince every Member of the House of the need for an immediate congressional investigation of the entire subject of radio, particularly the apparent inability of the members of this Commission to protect the public and to eliminate or set aside the present radio monopoly.

It was my intention at this time to discuss certain activities of the Commission, especially its apparent acceptance of false statements as they apply to a licensee who now possesses some nine or more licenses; but in view of certain other evidence which I find in the hearings pertaining to this favored individual, I will postpone my remarks on that matter to a later date.

However, I believe every Member of the Congress will be interested to find that this Commission, through its present

Chairman and through one of its retiring members who has served for several years, while blandly pointing with pride to its "holier than thou" attitude, yet ignores its own conclusions when proper pressure is applied.

The Appropriations Committee was told last year and again this year by the Federal Communications Commission that when false statements are made by an applicant for a license and such false statements come to the attention of the Commission such application will be denied or the license possibly revoked.

I note on page 973 of the Appropriations Committee hearings that an applicant for a license who presented sworn statements to the Treasury Department to the effect that he was virtually bankrupt and unable to pay notes held by a closed bank presented allegations to the Commission that he was possessed of many thousands of dollars.

Despite the fact that the Treasury Department of its own volition called this matter to the attention of the Federal Communications Commission, even to the extent of furnishing the Federal Communications Commission with a photostatic copy of the sworn statement indicating the apparent bankruptcy of the applicant for a radio license, this application for a license was granted by the Commission.

I note that even the new Chairman of the Commission admits that he has reason to suspect that in many instances these radio licenses are issued to or are actually in the hands of or under the control of persons or corporations other than those to whom the license was issued.

This Commission has under way a report on monopoly in radio. This Commission has been making such a study for the Lord only knows how long a time. Last June the Congress was told that such report would be available in a short time, perhaps 60 days. Last month the Appropriations Committee was told it would be ready the middle of January. To my mind, we will have such a report when the Congress decides to institute its own investigation and not much sooner.

These radio licenses are governmental property, temporarily loaned for a period of not more than 1 year to an applicant who presumably and under the law must serve public interest. I challenge anyone in the radio industry to allege that other than for the purpose of obtaining the license much consideration is given to public interest.

These licensees pay no tax to the Government despite the fact that the possessors of such licenses yearly reap millions of dollars in profits.

One part of this radio monopoly, the Columbia Broadcasting System, with an investment of less than $1,600,000, as we are told by the Security Exchange Commission, yearly pays dividends to its stockholders of some 150 percent on the original investment; and yet, despite these extortionate profits, these licensees, as I said before, pay no tax to the Government for the use of this highly profitable Government franchise.

On the basis of these earnings, I fear that unwary investors have been influenced to purchase stock in these radio monopolies—which monopolies depend for their profits entirely on the continuance of these governmental grants. Once any of these monopolists are deprived of the governmental license they hold, the investment in such concerns will be worth almost nothing.

You will be interested to know that this property for which the Columbia Broadcasting System has invested some $1,600,000 is selling on the New York Stock Exchange on the basis of some $50,000,000 and paying dividends of more than $2,000,000 yearly. Also, it is my understanding that on an investment of some $3,000,000 in National Broadcasting Co. the Radio Corporation of America, the parent company, which I will discuss further and in more detail at a later date, earns a profit of some $10,000,000 yearly.

Yet this Commission admits it has done nothing to protect the innocent investor from being virtually defrauded of his savings by the false picture which is painted to those who do not realize that radio monopoly possesses but little other than a governmental grant.

To my mind there is not a Member of this body who will condone anyone trafficking in governmental franchises. Yet this committee's report not only proves that such trafficking in radio licenses exists but that such a practice has the approval of the members of the Federal Communications Commission.

I note on the chart opposite page 937 that recently a radio station which, the Commission states, had a replacement value of $286,507, and which the Commission states had a claimed value of stock transferred, including physical and intangible values, of $1,191,890, was sold for $1,826,000. Apparently the radio franchise in this case was valued by the purchaser at some $634,000; and bear in mind that the Commission also states that the purchaser acquired not 100-percent interest but a 70-percent interest. In other words, if he had acquired a full hundred percent and paid for this franchise on the same basis the franchise would have been valued at approximately $1,000,000.

I note also another transaction wherein the station, with a replacement value of $23,000 and a claimed value of stock transferred, including physical and intangible, of $25,000, was sold for $125,000. As the purchaser acquired only 62 percent of the stock, he must have valued such franchise not only at the $100,000, which is the difference between the claimed value and what he paid for 62 percent, but this transaction would show that the estimated value of the governmental franchise was some $175,000.

I note another transaction wherein the station, with a replacement value of $84,000 and with a claimed value of stock transferred, including physical and intangible values, of $89,000, was sold for $160,000. This would indicate that the purchaser placed a value of at least $70,000 on the governmental franchise in which he has obtained a 60-percent interest.

I note also a station where the replacement cost of the fixed assets is set at $55,000 and for which $33,333 was paid for a third interest, thus placing a value of some $45,000 on the governmental franchise.

I find another instance wherein a station with a replacement cost set at $81,000 and which had a total claimed value of physical and intangible assets of $107,000 was sold for $300,000, leaving an apparent value of some $200,000 for the governmental grant, which presumably cost nothing and from which the Government receives no tax.

I find another instance wherein a station with a replacement cost of some $45,000 and a total claimed value of physical and intangible assets of some $25,000 was sold for $75,000. Again we find an apparent value of $50,000 placed on this governmental grant.

I find another instance wherein a station with a replacement cost set at $15,000 and a total claimed value of physical and intangible assets of some $10,000 was sold for $50,000, apparently a value of some $40,000 being placed on the governmental franchise.

I will not take up the time of the House, but will suggest the insertion, as a part of my remarks, of these tables, which I think the Members of the House might overlook in the hearings.

In closing, I might call to the attention of the House one other illustration: A power company, I find, sold a station wherein they allege an original cost of $163,000 and a replacement cost of fixed assets of $162,000 for some $450,000, with the approval of the Commission. This was an approximate value to the purchaser of at least $300,000 for this governmental franchise, for which the Government received nothing.

Mr. Chairman, I cite these illustrations to you in support of my resolution, now pending before the Rules Committee, for investigation of the Radio Commission and the radio monopoly. I appreciate the number of calls upon every Member of the House, and how difficult it is for the average Member to find sufficient time in which to go through the Appropriations Committee hearings in their entirety.

However, I have no hesitancy in saying that Congress must investigate the radio monopoly—must investigate the Communications Commission. And I believe in that old saying, Mr. Chairman, that if and when one finds he has to do something, the sooner he does it and has it done with, the better for all concerned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, namely:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we are about to begin the reading of the independent offices appropriation bill. There are many matters of great interest in the bill, and I think the membership of the House should be notified in order that they may be here. I therefore make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial on trade agreements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleagues the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN] are necessarily detained by reason of a meeting of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Labor Relations Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered over station WSUI on our national-defense system.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by reprinting an editorial from the Chicago Herald-Examiner on reciprocal-trade agreements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of a letter I have written my colleagues on the subject of soil conservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], who is ill in a hospital, may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of mine safety and the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922), with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the work of the Council of Personnel Administration, created by section 7 of Executive Order No. 7916, dated June 24, 1938, including personal services in the District of Columbia; traveling expenses, including, when specifically directed by the chairman, not exceeding $800 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the furtherance of the work of the council; printing and binding; books of reference and periodicals; and the payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the council, $25,040.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section beginning on line 20, page 15, and ending on line 9, page 16, that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly there is language in this section which changes existing law, particularly the language on page 16 beginning on line 4, after the word "periodicals" and reading as follows:

and the payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence.

This language unquestionably changes existing law and would make the paragraph subject to a point of order. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the paragraph, and the gentleman from Virginia concedes the point of order. The point of order is therefore sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Electric Home and Farm Authority, salaries and administrative expenses: Not to exceed $600,000 of the funds of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 7139 of August 12, 1935, and continued as such agency until June 30, 1941, by the act of March 4, 1939 (Public Act No. 2, 76th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses of the Authority, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); not exceeding $3,000 for expenses incurred in packing, crating, and transporting household effects (not exceeding 5,000 pounds in any one case) of personnel when transferred in the interest of the service from one official station to another for permanent duty when specifically authorized in the order directing the transfer; printing and binding; lawbooks and books of reference; not to exceed $200 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now or hereafter held or acquired by the Authority shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it contains legislation in the proviso beginning on page 21, line 3, and reading as follows:

Provided, That all necessary expenses (including legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now or hereafter held or acquired by the Authority shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

I make the point of order merely against the proviso, Mr. Chairman, not against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). As the language pointed out by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] attempts to construe existing law, the Chair believes the point of order is well taken. The point of order is, therefore, sustained, and the proviso is stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Export-Import Bank of Washington, salaries and administrative expenses: Not to exceed $125,000 of the funds of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 6581 of February 2, 1934, and continued as such agency until June 30, 1941, by the act approved March 4, 1939 (Public Act No. 3, 76th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses of the bank, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); printing and binding; lawbooks and books of reference; not to exceed $250 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of any real or personal property belonging to the bank or in which it has an interest, including expenses of collections of pledged collateral, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 21, beginning in line 10, strike out the entire paragraph down to and including line 11 on page 22.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, our rapidly mounting national debt has now passed the $42,000,000,000 mark. In addition, we have about $8,000,000,000 of obligations which our Federal Government has guaranteed. For many years the Federal Government has been going in the red several billion dollars each year. No country can continue indefinitely to spend $2 for every dollar which is collected in taxes and remain solvent.

We hear a great deal of talk about danger to America. We have appropriated almost $2,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year for our national defense. But, Mr. Chairman, the real danger to America does not lie in danger from without but from within. That martyred Republican President, Abraham Lincoln, once said, in referring to the potential dangers to our country and our institutions, that because of geographical location the danger would not come from without but from within. The $42,000,000,000 national debt, which is mounting at a rapid pace each day, and our huge annual continuing deficits are a real danger to America.

We hear Democrats and Republicans—Jeffersonian Democrats and left-wing Moscow New Deal Democrats—preach and prattle about economy and the necessity to economize here and economize there in order to reduce the expenditures of our Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, through the vehicle of the Export-Import Bank our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury is raided day after day and many millions of dollars extracted therefrom—not for the benefit of America, but to enable our New Deal brethren to play Santa Claus in a big way to foreign nations and to people in foreign lands.

I sincerely hope that all advocates of true economy will support this amendment and send word to the country that in view of the danger to America by reason of our large continuing annual deficits and rapidly mounting, stupendous national debt, Democratic and Republican Members of Congress are going to stop Uncle Sam from playing Santa Claus, to the tune of many millions of dollars, for foreign countries and people in foreign lands. We should do this particularly in view of the record with respect to the failure of foreign countries to pay principal or interest on more than $13,000,000,000 which they owe to the Treasury of the United States, and more than $2,000,000,000 which they owe our own private investors—this default notwithstanding the fact that most of our foreign debtor nations have billions of dollars to build and maintain huge military establishments, engage in war, and loan other nations hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that the Export-Import Bank has shown an enormous profit ever since it has been in existence, and is it not one of the self-sustaining institutions of the Government?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not care what kind of temporary profit is involved, because in the end we will find that the bank has sustained huge losses. If the bank is such a profitable institution, why is it continually asking the Congress to provide funds for it? We should be moving to collect the $15,000,000,000 owed us by foreign nations instead of continuing to hand them more millions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is time for Uncle Sam to stop playing Santa Claus for foreign nations and their nationals. All of the Members of Congress realize the unemployment in our own American textile industry. Notwithstanding that unemployment we saw headlines in the press a week or so ago indicating that the Export-Import Bank had raided our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury and advanced about $6,000,000 to textile manufacturers; not American textile manufacturers who are in a bad financial condition, not for the benefit of workers in American textile institutions, but an advance of $6,000,000 from our United States Treasury to subsidize textile manufacturers in Italy, a country which now owes America more than $2,000,000,000 and refuses to pay one penny of interest thereon.

In closing, I wish to say to those who continually talk economy that I will follow the slogan of the President in this matter. What we want is action, more action and less talk about economy. You now have an opportunity to act. To act in the interest of economy. To act in the interest of America. To act in the interest of our national defense by voting for this amendment and thereby prevent Uncle Sam from continuing to be an international sucker and Santa Claus for people in foreign lands. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, my good friend would eliminate from this bill one of the few money-making activities it has in it. If the Export-Import Bank could do enough business, if it were economical and desirable to permit them to do enough business—and I am not now prepared to say it should be expanded at all—they might show an even greater profit. Certainly what they have done so far has not been any drain on the Public Treasury or caused any increase in the national debt. They get their money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through investment by the Corporation in the bank's preferred stock. Of course, if, ultimately, they lose that capital then it will be a potential loss to the Treasury, but so far they have had no losses whatever; and not only that, but their administrative expenses heretofore have been less than $100,000 a year.

Their profits in 1936 were $170,000; in 1937, $797,000; in 1938, $885,000; and in 1939, $1,744,000.

Now, what do they do with these loans? They make loans for the purpose of enabling foreign governments or organizations to buy industrial products and agricultural products in America, including dairy products, and pay for them and export them. I wish every Member of the House would read carefully the hearings held before our committee. As I have said, this is one of the few organizations that is really self-sustaining, and I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be agreed to.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $2,000,000 of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, advanced or to be advanced to the Federal Housing Administration under authority of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 1246), as amended, and not to exceed $3,000,000 of the funds (after the allowance of said $1,200,000 for administrative expenses) in the account in the Treasury comprised of premiums collected under authority of section 2 (f), title I, of the National Housing Act, as amended, shall be available for the payment of losses under insurance granted under section 2 and section 6, title I, of said act.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to call attention very briefly to that paragraph which is constantly appearing where nonadministrative expenses are mentioned as foreclosing, repairing, preservation, and final sale of properties, real and personal, that the Government has to take over in its loaning activities. Someone said last year that the Government is getting to be a glorified pawn shop. It seems strange to me that this should be classed as wholly nonadministrative. Do not the regular officials and administrators have to be called upon to act in these foreclosure measures and in the taking and sale of property? Do you need wholly outside help for all of these things, or cannot the regular officials perform most of these duties? Are these bureaus to be credited for extra work and thus enabled to increase authorized amounts? It seems to me like a conglomeration of duties trying to be separated, which cannot possibly be separated, and I do want to call the attention to the fact that we find now, constantly, this language in these appropriation bills. It would seem that costs of foreclosure, preservation, and sale, and other expenses ought not to appear as nonadministrative expense. If there is any suggestion to be made by the committee, out of my time, I should like to hear it. I should like to have someone tell me how we can divide those services, why the regular force cannot take care of these administrative duties. Am I not right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman says that I am exactly right. I thought I was.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $22,000,000 of the funds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, established by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 128), shall be available during the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses of the Corporation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); expenses (not to exceed $3,500) of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Corporation when specifically authorized by the Board of Directors; printing and binding; law-books, books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment and services; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; use of the services and facilities of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal home-loan banks, and Federal Reserve banks; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof: Provided further, That except for the limitations in amounts hereinbefore specified, and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Corporation shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1461-1468).

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proviso beginning in line 5, on page 29, dealing with nonadministrative expenses tends to construe existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve that and permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the provision that appears in all these agencies for which we do not make specific appropriation but permit them to use their own funds, similar to this provision providing that funds in connection with the acquisition and sale of property they have to take in shall not be considered administrative expenses, is for this purpose. If a property is recalled or foreclosed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, we will say, and it is sold by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the funds involved in that transaction have never been appropriated by Congress. They are not carried in this appropriation bill. The funds are paid by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They have to pay for the recording of the deed and in some isolated places where they have no attorney, they have to pay an attorney's fee or some other fee in connection with the acquisition, disposition, or maintenance or repair of property. Funds never having been appropriated by Congress, this language gives them permission to handle those accounts without going through the necessary routine of having a special appropriation for all of them. It is subject to a point of order unquestionably, but to strike it out will seriously cripple the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and it will increase the cost of their operation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this point of order could clearly be made against this clause in all of these loan-agency items. I have made it in this particular case because it seems to me justification should be made by this agency and legislative authorization secured for it. It seems to me that in the matter which the gentleman from Virginia cites, there has been too much abuse and too much laying of redemption costs against those who have been foreclosed from their homes, by the employment of special attorneys and the assessing of other foreclosure costs. In this instance I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction outside the District of Columbia: For continuation of construction of, and acquisition of sites for, public buildings outside of the District of Columbia, including the purposes and objects, and subject to the limitations specified under this head in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937 (50 Stat. 773), as supplemented by the Federal Public Buildings Act, 1933, and also including those increases in the limits of cost of certain authorized projects, 25 in number, as specified in House Document No. 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, $15,000,000: Provided, That the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), shall not apply with respect to the rental of temporary quarters for housing Federal activities during the replacement or remodeling of buildings authorized under this or previous acts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 41, line 7, after the word "Congress," strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$37,000,000."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, by Public Act No. 354, an act of Congress passed August 27, 1937, the Congress authorized the appropriation of $70,000,000 for the purpose of constructing post-office buildings outside the District of Columbia and used this language:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a total amount of $70,000,000 for expenditure over a period of 3 years.

You will note that this amount was authorized by Congress practically with the direction that it be used over a period of 3 years for the construction of post-office buildings. The 3 years would begin in August 1937, and will expire in August 1940, this year. This amount was increased by the Congress, as shown by Public Resolution 122, which used this language:

Construction of public buildings outside the District of Columbia. Total amount authorized to be appropriated for the 3-year program for the acquisition of sites and construction of public buildings by the paragraph under the caption "Emergency Construction of Public Buildings Outside the District of Columbia," contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, approved August 31, 1937, is hereby increased from $70,000,000 to $130,000,000.

In other words, we have an authorization by the Congress in these two specific acts, the second act embodying the provisions of the first act, with reference to building these buildings over a period of 3 years, with no provision as to the amount to be used in any specific year, out of which has been appropriated up to date $89,000,000. This is shown by the testimony offered before this committee:

Mr. REYNOLDS. We will have $89,000,000, plus $15,000,000, which is $104,000,000, leaving $26,000,000 (regular testimony, p. 1342, hearings).

Right there I want to say this bill carries an appropriation of the heretofore authorized amount of $15,000,000, heretofore authorized by the two acts of Congress referred to. So the Congress intended in the original act of 1937 that these places needing post-office buildings throughout the United States would get at least 2 buildings during 3 years, as suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia when I interrogated him about this matter when he was making his opening statement. It provided for 2 buildings in each district in the United States out of this fund. We are now providing for an appropriation for the 1940 construction of these post-office buildings, which is a continuation of the program directed by the Congress in the act of August 1937. Why leave this $26,000,000 there when we need post offices? The Congress authorized it—in fact, directed it in 1937. In my own district I have 16 eligible cities, declared to be eligible by the Post Office Department. In those cities we do not have a Federal building. In those cities we have the various Federal agencies stuck around in any place they can get for them. Down in the courthouse—in my own town we have to put them in the basement of our courthouse because there is no other place for them. There is not a Federal building in those 16 towns that I speak about. No doubt similar conditions exist in other districts.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BECKWORTH. The gentleman's amendment does not provide for an appropriation in excess of the amount that has already been authorized to be spent within the 3 years beginning in 1937?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is correct about that. As a matter of fact, if my amendment is adopted there will be $4,000,000 of the amount authorized still unappropriated. There is not any reason why we cannot put some of these idle people to work in the building of post offices where they are needed, particularly so when the Congress practically directed it in 1937. Why leave $26,000,000 unappropriated?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I am very much for the amendment, because, like in the gentleman's district, I have 10 cities in my district that desire a Federal building, and they are urging now that they are entitled to it because of previous reports they have received.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. He is always working for the interests of his people. As a matter of fact, the Post Office Department has published throughout the United States an eligible list of post offices, and the people in those towns feel this way about it: That inasmuch as they are declared to be eligible, they think the money is here to be appropriated for the construction of those buildings, and they feel that their Congressmen are derelict in their duty in not getting the post-office buildings in the eligible places.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman asked why did they not appropriate the full amount to build post offices in the United States. I would like to give the gentleman the answer: Because the Federal Treasury is almost bankrupt; and if they use that full amount, they would not have the money so that the Export-Import Bank might build post offices and textile mills in foreign lands.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say this to the House: That certainly where Congress authorized this in 1937, practically directed it insofar as they could, why cannot the Congress today carry out that direction and provide the funds to build these buildings where they are absolutely necessary?

There is no question but what we have the authority, and these buildings are necessary, particularly in view of the various Federal agencies that have been crowded into private buildings since 1933. The great majority of these buildings are insufficient to house the Federal agencies as well as take care of the needs of the Postal Service. I can point out one city in my district, Wolf Point, where the postal receipts for one-quarter of the year amounted to over $5,000, yet we cannot get a single encouragement for a post-office building to house not only the post office but to provide space also for the various Federal agencies that exist there.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. NORRELL. Is it not also true that if Federal buildings were constructed in these towns the Government would save thousands of dollars per month in rentals?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. The gentleman developed a good point, and I thank him for it, and in addition would not only save thousands of dollars on post-office rentals but in addition thousands for rentals being paid by various Federal agencies housed in private buildings.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the Federal Buildings Act of 1938 we increased the building program for buildings outside of the District of Columbia, and these are the post-office buildings in the various districts; we increased the authorization from $70,000,000 to $130,000,000, providing for a 3-year program, under the terms of which the Public Buildings Commission promised that it would provide two buildings for each congressional district where the congressional district could qualify with eligible projects. This program has been under way. Twenty-six million dollars remains to be appropriated in the next session of Congress to carry this program forward, but the Buildings Commission had their program laid out. They have a force of people engaged upon the work. It would do no good to include additional money for this purpose in this bill unless it is meant that this Commission shall mushroom their organization of architects, engineers, and others and speed up their program in the acquisition of sites. Unless this is done, any additional appropriation could not be used.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we are to carry out the 3-year program we shall have to do it during this session of Congress, because by the time the next session of Congress convenes more than 3 years will have elapsed from 1937.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But we shall still get the buildings, and this is a mighty poor time, in addition to all those good and sufficient reasons, this is a mighty poor time for Members of Congress to be here cutting everything else, yet stepping up and speeding up the building of post offices in their districts. Undoubtedly there are many instances where a good case can be made out for the erection of a public building on the ground of saving rent, but this is not the time to do it, for we have not got the money with which to do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any purchase by or service rendered for any office or agency of the Federal Works Agency, when the aggregate amount involved in any such case does not exceed the sum of $100.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: On page 48, line 14, after the word "exceed", strike out "$4,550,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$450,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it comes too late. We have already read not only past the paragraph but past the page where this amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LUCE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE: May I ask where the proper place would be to insert an amendment before the next part of the bill headed by capitals?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was unable to hear all of the inquiry by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. May I ask how far the bill has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Down through the bottom of page 50. The only paragraph under the heading "United States Housing Authority" that would now be subject to amendment would be the last four lines on page 50.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, if I recollect the practice of the House, it has always been to include everything under a heading for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the practice of the House from time immemorial to read appropriation bills by paragraphs.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 48 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to object, much as I hate to object to any request submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, it is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to put in the hands of the United States Housing Authority, which is charged with slum clearance, $152,000 for publicity purposes. This Authority has already issued a large number of pamphlets, addresses, speeches, folders, matter of all sorts, carrying accounts of its work. Anyone who has examined them from time to time must admire their typography, must marvel at their ingenuity, and must wonder at the scope and value of this mass of publicity.

At present the Authority is engaged in encouraging localities to embark on slum-clearance projects. In the city of Cambridge, in my district, they recently succeeded in securing an endorsement of such projects. The opponents had at their command only such funds as they raised by private contribution. The Authority had this huge sum of money at hand to publicize one side in a campaign where there was really chance for arguments on both sides. The critics did not have a fair showing and the projects were approved. There are other places where already proposals of this sort have been rejected. Public-spirited citizens, with the welfare of the community at heart, have been able to convince the electorate of the folly of these things in certain cities and towns. To defeat opposition to these projects, I repeat, the advocates have at their command a huge sum of money with which to persuade the electorate, whereas the critics must rely on the contributions of individual citizens who think the projects unwise. I can imagine no explanation for the appropriation of $152,000 for the purpose of advancing only one side of an argument.

I am not here criticizing this Authority, and I have much sympathy with slum clearance, but there are places in this country where the money ought not to be spent.

Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. LUCE. A Member of the House from a State adjacent to that of the gentleman who is seeking to interrogate me, living in a town where a movement for alleged slum clearance had been started, told me a year ago that such a project was not wanted; it was not needed; it was unwise; it was folly. It did not prevail.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. With pleasure.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman know anything about where they get the funds with which they run these numerous slides that they show in the picture shows all over the country from time to time?

Mr. LUCE. I do not know. I only know it is a one-sided presentation of a doubtful case. It is folly to give them $152,000 to fight for a principle that calls only for limited application. Already it has been shown that this matter is in the experimental stage. They are groping their way; they are trying to devise a system by which housing may be advanced. That is desirable, but it is not a matter for speed. Meantime we ought not to throw away funds of the United States in helping, as I repeat and repeat again, to present one side of a case.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. If they will tell the truth about either side of it, it would be well spent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment in order to make an explanation.

The Budget recommended $227,000. An amendment was offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] to reduce it $75,000. The subcommittee, as well as the Committee of the Whole, reduced the amount recommended by the Budget $75,000. The $152,000 is to be spent in connection with the collection, preparation, and dissemination of information concerning the activities of the Housing Authority. This amount seems reasonable where the Authority has been authorized to spend $650,000,000, and during the next year $425,000,000 of that authorization will be spent. The committee thought that the recommendation made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] was a reasonable one, and we adopted his recommendation and reduced the Budget request by $75,000.

A RESTRICTION, NOT A PERMISSION

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the genial gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], but I would not want the RECORD at this point to go out with the implication that the Committee was seeking to give the United States Housing Authority permission to spend $152,000 for this purpose. As a matter of fact, we were trying to keep them from spending the $227,104 that they requested.

I have in my hand the attempted justification on the Information Division which the Housing Authority brought before us. There is an asterisk by the side of the figure $225,104 and the asterisk footnote reads:

This represents a decrease of $45,426 from the fiscal year 1940.

We were not deterred by that self-righteous asterisk. We cut the request another $75,000. In other words, the limitation which we put in this bill cuts the United States Housing Authority by $120,426 from what they were using for this purpose in the current fiscal year.

I want to call attention to one or two items in this exhibit, because they will help answer the question asked by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who wanted to know where these slides come from. In this informational service within the United States Housing Authority they have a coordination section, they have a press-service section, they have an editorial section, they have an information section, and they have an exhibit section. This exhibit section, Mr. Chairman—

Prepares for illustration, public education, and displays, visual and other representation, and, as directed by the motion picture and radio section, assists in the production of recorded transcriptions for radio broadcasts and in the production of motion-picture film.

Then they also have a motion-picture and radio section.

In the items for positions for which they seek this money, they have the following under the head of "Professional service":

Grade 2, architect model maker, one at $2,700.
Grade 1, junior architect, one at $2,200.
Grade 7, principal diorama modeler, two at $2,650,
A principal illustrator, at $2,300,
Five senior diorama modelers, at $2,180,
One senior electrician, at $2,200,
Two editorial writers, at $2,650,
One senior informational analyst, at $2,600,
Two junior informational analysts, at $2,450.
One photographer, at $2,600, and Three senior editorial clerks, at $2,223.

All these to sell subsidized housing to the supposed beneficiaries.

Then, included in some of the other items of expense is an item of $9,600 for travel, which probably explains why they can go up to Massachusetts and put on this campaign that the gentleman [Mr. LUCE] speaks of. There is $40,000 for printing, $10,000 for rents, and special and miscellaneous expense, $13,800.

I do not know how they are going to break this down with the reduction of $75,000, but I may say the committee talked this matter over and while some of us would like to have reduced it far more than $152,000, this seemed to be the best limitation on which we could get agreement. To explain why this figure is in here, it was not to grant permission, it was to establish a restriction to keep them from spending $75,000 more. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my principal objection to this activity is that it is the rankest sort of communism. After all, what is communism? The Encyclopedia Britannica defines it as the abolition of private property and its absorption into the state. Karl Marx defines it as simply the abolition of private property. This is a program that proposes the abolition of private property in the amount of anywhere between $20,000,000,000 and $40,000,000,000 and its absorption into the Federal Government. What could be more communistic than Federal ownership of our homes—the most-sacred possession of our family, the very foundation of all property rights and of civilization itself?

This thing of putting out to the people the propaganda that these projects are owned locally is all false. That argument has already been exposed. These are Federal projects, and they are just as completely owned by the Federal Government as is a post office or any other public building. We know now that no part of the rents goes to pay the interest and the amortization of the so-called loans; in fact, we know that no loan whatsoever is made and that the local housing authorities are merely dummies set up by the United States Housing Authority to carry on its financial manipulations.

Now, what do we do? We pay $100,000 for the Dies committee to investigate communism and then we allow $152,000 to the United States Housing Authority to promote communism. [Applause.] I say to you, Mr. Chairman, it is about time to wake up and see where our communism is coming from. Right within our own Congress. We do not need to worry about the outside; that is a small thing as compared with this. I am branding this as the rankest communistic scheme that can be devised. Further, the United States Housing Authority is one of the most deceptive pieces of legislation ever placed on the statute books anywhere. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I renew my unanimous-consent request to return to page 49 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN-SERVICE PAY ADJUSTMENT

Foreign-service pay adjustment of officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries due to appreciation of foreign currencies: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize annual appropriations to meet losses sustained by officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries due to appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar, and for other purposes," approved March 26, 1934 (U. S. C., Supp. IV, title 5, sec. 118c), and for each and every object and purpose specified therein, $1,280,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 51, strike out all of lines 1 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in order to call attention to the biggest sell-out of any country in the history of the world, the New Deal gold and silver sell-out of America. We could naturally expect that when we find as Chief Executive under the New Deal administration a man who has been an international banker on many fronts and who has been interested in currency manipulations in foreign countries.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. When you build a building you lay your foundation. I am laying the foundation for my talk on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the gentleman should understand that under the rules of the House he must confine himself to his amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am doing that precisely. When you build a building you must lay the foundation before you erect the edifice. I am laying the foundation for my talk on the pending amendment.

The paragraph which I have moved to strike out adds a charge of $1,280,000 on our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury. This charge directly results from the New Deal gold policy of debasing our American dollar and reducing its gold content to 59 cents. This paragraph provides that in connection with the small total amount of salaries received by our Government employees in foreign lands an appropriation of $1,280,000 is to be made for a 1-year period because of the appreciation of foreign currencies and the consequent benefit to foreigners in foreign lands as a result of reducing the gold content of our American dollar.

I hope that after the 1940 election we will again return to sound money, so that we will not need such appropriations in the future. Mr. Chairman, after the New Deal forced American citizens to turn in all their gold to Uncle Sam for $20.67 an ounce or go to the jailhouse for 5 years, the New Deal imported from foreign countries more than $12,000,000,000 worth of gold at $35 an ounce. I say that is playing Santa Claus to foreign owners, producers, and speculators in gold in an almost unbelievable and unheard of manner.

Of course, this was done under the New Deal administration and was suggested by a New Deal agricultural professor, Mr. Warren, who admitted that he was a miracle man, perhaps following in the footsteps of Joshua. He admitted that he tried to change the measure of daylight with a device to light up the hen houses so as to fool the chickens into believing night was day so that they would lay two eggs each day instead of one. This New Deal professor admitted that his device would not work but killed the chickens. He, however, did perfect the New Deal gold policy invention with reference to lighting up the home of the goose which laid the golden egg so the goose will lay two eggs instead of one. The record shows, however, that all the geese who lay two golden eggs instead of one are in foreign lands, and our overburdened

American taxpayers have paid many billions of dollars to feed these foreign geese. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, General Accounting Office, $5,306,540.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Michigan this afternoon spoke about the matter of the W. P. A. having people on its pay roll to investigate concerning Congressmen's opinions, and so on and so forth, I naturally was concerned about the matter. I have taken the trouble to find out a little more about it. I am informed by Colonel Harrington that the W. P. A. has no such employees, but what it does have is a small number of people whose job it is to correct anything which gives a wrong report concerning anything regarding the W. P. A., and also to try to keep track of what those reports are in order that the things that may be wrong can be corrected.

I find, for example, that there are three such people in the whole State of New York, and also that the report which was submitted by this Mr. Coyne, and which, unfortunately, contained some matters concerning the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], which I think should not have been in it, nevertheless this report was submitted, as a matter of fact, to a representative of the House Appropriations Committee, and that, I think, puts a little different complexion on the matter than would have been the case had it been a report to W. P. A., which it was not; and I am assured by Colonel Harrington, with all the vigor at his command, that W. P. A. never does anything like that and would not do anything like that.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman ever hear of a personnel director or an officer assigned to a State having an opportunity to build up a political machine by the assignment of men to work and then running against a Member of the House for election to the House and when defeated by the sitting Member, going back to W. P. A. with a much better job than he had before? What does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I did not hear about that, and that is not what I am talking about. I will state flatly, however, that I think any use of a W. P. A. position for political advantage is wrong.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The minority leader of the House will tell you that happened in his district.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What does the gentleman think about a W. P. A. worker in a W. P. A. truck delivering campaign literature for a candidate?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course, I do not think that should be done.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will give you that so you can investigate that one, too.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman, I believe that has happened on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have not been so lucky.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, yes; I think so. I do not think that has anything to do with this matter I am discussing. I did not get up here to make a political speech or anything of the sort. I simply wanted to make this matter plain and clear, and I want, at this time, to thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] for his kindness to me in helping me to try to find out about it. There is not anything else to it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The whole statement made in there by that W. P. A. outfit was false from the beginning. There is no question about it whatever. He was sent here for the purpose, deliberately, of trying to spy around. It is not an individual case, and the report was made to the headquarters in Washington. I know those things to be facts. We have had that same experience with the W. P. A. outfit from the beginning.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. This report was also submitted to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TABER. It was given to the W. P. A. investigating committee of the House, because they happened to think, in the first place, that he came from Washington.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I hope the gentleman understands that I explained in my remarks, I thought what was in it was most unfortunate, and I do.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I did not assume that the gentleman took the floor to defend politics in W. P. A., and I understand now that he did not.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I did not, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman offered an amendment, which I supported in the last regular session, to take politics out of relief and relief out of politics, and was not that incorporated in the law?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It was. I have always supported such proposals.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That, I think, expresses the gentleman's attitude, as well as mine.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It does, and I am very grateful to the gentleman for his kindness in mentioning the matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, many Members of the House have been interested in knowing when the Rules Committee will meet to consider the resolution to continue the so-called Dies committee—the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. We had felt that we might have such a meeting on Thursday or Friday, but, due to the absence of the chairman, the meeting has been called for 10:30 o'clock a. m. Monday. Those Members of the House who may desire to appear and oppose or advocate the continuation of the committee know, of course, that the Rules Committee will be very glad to have them present and to hear them.

The Clerk read down to and including line 3 on page 64.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R.

7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, 1941, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

JANUARY 17, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Territories, to take effect at once.

Sincerely yours,

JOSHUA L. JOHNS, M. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 17, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby offer my resignation from the Committee on Claims, to take effect immediately.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS K. ROCKEFELLER,
Twenty-seventh District, New York.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LELAND M. FORD, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. RANDOLPH, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal and the conclusion of legislation and all special orders on Monday next, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DOMESTIC SUGAR INDUSTRY

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the Record at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the consumers of this Nation have become alarmed at the increase in food prices, and I am confident that this Congress is anxious to do its part in working out a satisfactory solution of this pressing and important problem. I am in favor of giving our domestic sugar industry a chance to furnish sugar to the American people at reasonable prices. The Department of Labor under date of January 5, 1940, prepared a report showing these increases in food prices, and I take the liberty of inserting at this point, said report in full:

The level of average retail prices of staple foods was unchanged from December 27, 1939, to January 3, 1940, according to the weekly price-reporting survey of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, covering Boston, Buffalo, New York, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Savannah, Washington, Houston, Denver, and Los Angeles. Secretary of Labor Perkins reported today (Friday).

"The index of retail prices of staple foods on January 3 was 2.9 percent above the level of August 15 when food prices began their marked upward trend," Miss Perkins said. "While prices of most of these foods remained unchanged over the New Year, there was a tendency for flour and pork chops to rise in price and for butter and lard to fall."

Flour prices rose by 2 or 3 percent in Chicago, St. Louis, Savannah, Houston, and Denver. In the other cities no change was reported.

Pork chops advanced in price by about 2 cents a pound in Buffalo, St. Louis, and Denver but declined as much in New York City. Only in Savannah, Houston, and Los Angeles were prices reported unchanged.

Butter prices showed slight declines in nearly all of the cities.

Lard prices were somewhat lower in six cities on January 3 than a week earlier. No change was reported in most of the other cities. Only in New York and Los Angeles were price advances reported.

Irregular changes occurred in prices of round steak, chuck roast, bacon, and eggs, the price advancing in some cities and declining in others without any marked trend.

Practically unchanged in price were bread, milk, canned tomatoes, navy beans, coffee, and sugar. Where price changes were reported for these foods, however, they were usually declines.

Estimated changes in average retail prices, Dec. 27, 1939, to Jan. 3, 1940—15 foods, 13 cities

Please do not infer from my remarks that I am against the farmer receiving a higher price for his products. I have always stood for a larger farm income and for a reasonable profit for the farmer. Because of this fact, my remarks shall be limited to the food products which the American housewife and consumer are buying, not from our farmers but from foreign producers, the chief among which is sugar. Under our Sugar Act of 1937 the American housewife is required to buy, whether she likes it or not, over 70 percent of her sugar from off-shore areas. Under said act foreign producers control our sugar market. Our farmers have little voice in what we pay for sugar.

SUGAR AN ESSENTIAL FOOD

Sugar, once a luxury, is now definitely established as an essential food. It is necessary to the health and well-being of this Nation in peacetime; it is more essential in wartime.

SUGAR COSTS UNREASONABLY HIGH

Glancing at the Labor Department's report, let us see what the American housewife is paying for sugar. Even now prices are running between 53 and 62 cents per 10 pounds. You and I know, and the American housewife knows, that these prices are unreasonable and unfair.

WHO GETS THE PROFIT?

With domestic producers furnishing less than 30 percent of the sugar this Nation consumes certainly the excess profit is not going to them. It must go to foreign soil.

WHAT IS OUR COST OF PRODUCTION?

It has long been said that domestic producers of sugar have too high a cost of production and for that reason we must buy our sugar from foreign producers—this, in the interest of the American housewife. That was the argument advanced in support of the Sugar Act of 1937 when that controversial legislation was passed. In passing, I am forced to say that if off-shore producers have such a low cost of production, with all their peon labor, why does it not show up in the prices of sugar today? Someone is really sucking blood money out of the American consumer with sugar around 60 cents per 10 pounds, and it is not the American farmer.

FLORIDA'S COST OF PRODUCTION

Let us examine the record and see what domestic producers are doing about the cost of production. Florida producers are producing raw sugar at a cost of production of 2.1 cents per pound. Although I do not have complete data at hand, Cuba's cost of production seems to be around 2.25 cents and other off-shore producers around 3 cents per pound. Other domestic areas such as found in Louisiana and the beet-sugar areas of the West have cost of production figures which compare favorably with Florida's.

DOMESTIC PRODUCERS PAY HIGH WAGES

These low cost-of-production figures for Florida and other domestic producers become of greater importance when we take into consideration that Florida's sugar industry, as small as it is, pays the highest agriculture wage of any sugar-producing area or country.

Even the Secretary of Agriculture admits this when he says in his 1939 report:

That conditions vary even within areas is shown by the fact that Florida producers appear to be able to maintain higher wage and labor standards than do most producers in the mainland area.

The Secretary failed to add that Florida's wages are the highest in the world and that wages paid by other domestic producers are likewise higher.

FLORIDA PROHIBITED BY LAW FROM FURNISHING SUGAR TO MORE THAN 1 PERCENT OF THE AMERICAN MARKET

I have already mentioned the fact that under the Sugar Act of 1937 domestic producers, although in some cases their cost of production is lower than offshore producers, are allowed to supply less than 30 percent of the sugar needs of the Nation. You will be surprised when I tell you that, under the same act, Florida is allowed to supply less than 1 percent of the Nation's needs, this in face of the fact that Florida pays the highest agriculture wage known and has a cost of production which is in line with the lowest cost of production found, even where sugar is produced with peon labor. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what kind of an American system is that? Is it fair to the American producer? Is it fair to American labor? Is it fair to Florida and the other domestic producers?

FLORIDA AND OTHER DOMESTIC PRODUCERS STAND READY TO PRODUCE SUGAR FOR THE AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE AT REASONABLE PRICES

We of Florida contend that we can produce sugar to retail to the American housewife at the 5-cent-per-pound level. We are not interested in high prices, and the 5-cent retail level, which is fair and reasonable, will always be satisfactory to us.

Forgetting for the moment that sugar prices last September soared up to 7, 8, and 9 cents per pound, making it necessary for the President of the United States to suspend the restrictive quota provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, I say to the gentleman from Ohio, your consumers will not have to pay the unreasonable price of 58 cents per 10 pounds if you will give Florida and the other domestic producers a right to unlimited production of this nonsurplus commodity. To the gentlemen from Colorado, I remind you that your own State, if given the chance, by unlimited production could produce sugar to sell far below the prevailing price of 62 cents per 10 pounds, as it is today in Denver. California, if given a chance, can produce sugar to sell at less than the 55 cents per 10 pounds which the people of Los Angeles are now paying. To the gentlemen of the great State of New York, I say if Florida and the domestic industry were given the chance, millions and millions of dollars could be saved for your housewives by furnishing you with sugar at a great deal less than the 54 cents per 10 pounds now being paid. I can say the same thing to the gentlemen from Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Michigan, where your people are paying from 54 cents to 58 cents per 10 pounds for sugar. For the Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis, and other urban centers of the Midwest, the beet-sugar producing areas can bring that price down if given a chance.

To the gentlemen from Texas, I remind you that Texas can produce sugar if given the chance. This would stabilize the southwestern sugar market.

The remarkable thing about the Labor Department's report is that the only area in the entire United States where the American housewife is obtaining sugar at a reasonable price is in the Southeast around Savannah, Ga. There she buys it now at 5 cents per pound, and there is where Florida sugar is refined and marketed. That is the proof of the pudding.

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

Mr. Speaker, what are we going to do about it? I leave that question to be answered by this Congress. I know that every one of my colleagues from every district in these United States wants his people to be able to buy sugar at the fair price of 5 cents per pound. I know that every Member of this Congress wants to see American labor receive fair play in this matter and obtain the high wages which we are paying in our Florida industry. I know that every Member will agree with me when I say that Florida should be allowed unlimited production of sugar so long as we can pay these high wages and produce sugar for the American housewife to retail to her at 5 cents per pound or less. I know that we want to encourage our domestic sugar industry; we may need it in time of an emergency. We know that foreign producers will let us want for sugar whenever they can obtain higher prices elsewhere. They did that back in September. I say defeat the reenactment of the iniquitous Sugar Act of 1937. If we must have sugar legislation, let it be fair to American producers and American consumers. Let American producers who can produce sugar to retail at 5 cents per pound produce unlimited; and then if we cannot produce all that we need, buy what little extra is needed from foreign countries. Is not, Mr. Speaker, that the fair thing to do?

6187. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the American Legion, Washington, D. C., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to un-American activity; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.

O Father of life and love, into Thy holy keeping we commend the soul of our beloved brother who at this moment lies at the very brink of life eternal. May he know by Thine own indwelling that, though he pass through the waters, Thou wilt be with him, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow him; though he walk through the fire he shall not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon him, for Thou art the Lord his God, the Holy One of Israel, his Saviour.

Forgive whatever may be amiss in his life so devoted to the welfare of his Nation; and may the soothing, tender, loving care of our Father be his portion, so that he may wake in Thy likeness and when he beholdeth it he shall be satisfied and hear Thy words of commendation, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

We ask it in the name and for the sake of Him who has ever been our access to the Father, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 16, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1554) to provide that the district judge for the western district of Washington, authorized to be appointed under the act of May 31, 1938, shall be a district judge for the eastern and western districts of Washington, and it was signed by the Vice President.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT designated the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] to read Washington's Farewell Address on the 22d of February 1940, pursuant to order of the Senate.

LEASING OF RESTRICTED ALLOTMENTS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the leasing of restricted allotments of deceased Indians in certain circumstances, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BOUNDARIES OF CEDAR BREAKS NATIONAL MONUMENT AND DIXIE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to adjust the boundaries of the Cedar Breaks National Monument and the Dixie National Forest, in the State of Utah, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

DRAINAGE OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ARKANSAS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation amending the act of January 17, 1920 (41 Stat. 392), authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation, insofar as said act affects certain public lands in Big Lake Migratory Bird Refuge, Mississippi County, lying within the Little River Floodway, known as Big Lake, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Lodge No. 573, International Association of Machinists, of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the alleged selling of $40 automatic rifles to Finland for $1, and also the proposed $60,000,000 loan to the Republic of Finland, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the United Order of Sisters Grade Aguilar, No. 20, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Holy Name Society of St. Thomas Apostle Church, of Woodhaven, N. Y.; the executive committee of the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, and the United Spanish War Veterans (national headquarters, Washington, D. C.), favoring continuance of the activities of the so-called Dies committee investigating un-American activities and the appropriation of sufficient funds therefor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Floydada National Farm Loan Association, of Floydada, Tex., favoring restoration of the Farm Credit Administration to the status of an independent bureau, and also that the operations of the Federal land banks and other units of the Administration be placed under the supervision of a bipartisan board appointed by the President for fixed terms, with the advice and consent of the Senate, which was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from José Ramón Fernández and Santiago Collazo, president and secretary, respectively, of the Parent-Teacher Association of Collores, Juana Diaz, P. R., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the continuance of rural electrification in Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the secretary of the Ministerial Alliance, Coffeyville, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 517, to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages over the radio, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the Young Men's League of Guam, favoring the prompt enactment of legislation granting civil rights and bettering the political status of the people of Guam, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented a petition of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying that the domestic problems of the United States be taken care of adequately and that the United States keep out of foreign wars, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TOWNSEND RECOVERY PLAN—PETITION

Mr. BILBO. I present a petition signed by about 500 citizens of Hattiesburg, Miss., and vicinity, in behalf of old-age pensions. I ask that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that the petition itself be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body thereof was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a depression has been on the people of the United States for several years, and Congress has tried everything that they believed might restore confidence amongst the business people of the country and bring about a recovery in business and thereby get the people employed; and

Whereas under the administration of Mr. Hoover all laws were made in the interest of the big-moneyed interest, with the idea that the moneyed interest would employ the people and thereby restore prosperity; and

Whereas that idea failed and the depression became worse and millions of the people were thrown out of employment, and bread lines and other charitable means had to be provided to try to care for the millions of unemployed people, and people lost their homes by the millions and the property of the country fell into the hands of a few big speculators; and

Whereas millions of people who had never voted a Democratic ticket voted for President Roosevelt and elected him by the biggest majority ever given a candidate, and reelected at the end of 4 years because of his New Deal ideas of employing the people; and, notwithstanding that it has provided enough to sustain life, it has not relieved the depression and millions of people are still out of employment, especially the elderly people, who are in great numbers suffering for the necessities of life in a land of plenty and to spare, and our Government indebtedness has passed the forty-billion mark; and

Whereas the Townsend recovery plan will not increase the public debt, but, on the other hand, if put into effect, will go further toward retrenchment in the expenditure of public funds, and will finally result in balancing the Budget, by giving the 10,000,000 people of the United States a buying power who have reached the age of 60 years or over, who at the present time have no buying power, or very little buying power, and will result in buying the products of the country, and thereby starting the wheels of commerce going, which will result in the employment of the people under the age of 60 years, thereby restoring confidence in business and putting the balance of the people to work and thereby relieve the depression; and Therefore, we, the undersigned voters of Hattiesburg, Miss., and vicinity, do hereby petition our two United States Senators—Senators HARRISON and BLISS—and our Member of Congress—Mr. COLMER—to work for and vote for the Townsend recovery plan; and the secretary of the Townsend plan No. 1, of Hattiesburg, Miss., is hereby authorized to send each of our United States Senators and Member of Congress a copy of these resolutions, with instructions to have it placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and do what they can to have the Townsend recovery plan introduced and enacted into law.

PROPOSED LOAN TO FINLAND

Mr. KING. Under the head of petitions I have a telegram from Hon. Paul H. Hunt, former member of the legislature of my State, which I should like to have inserted in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 17, 1940.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,

Washington, D. C.:

The overwhelming opinion amongst the employees of the Park Utah mine is that Congress and the President should extend a most liberal loan to Finland without strings attached. The opinion is that neutrality is not involved in the undeclared aggression of Russia on Finland; and even if it were, it would make no difference.

The most despicable policy to pursue is to use Finland in her distress as a dumping ground for our surplus commodities. Who is there if his son asked for bread would he give him a stone?

PAUL H. HUNT.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH JAPAN

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to read to the Senate from a letter I have just received from J. G. Stewart, a good friend of mine in North Topeka, Kans. I may add that this is merely one of scores, indeed, hundreds, of similar communications that have come to me in the past months on this subject. Mr. Stewart writes me:

As the time draws near that the trade treaty between the United States and Japan expires, no doubt you will receive many letters protesting against its renewal. I wish to join in the protest.

In an article in the Christian Statesman under the caption "Let Us Stop Fighting China," Dr. William Judd, returned missionary from China, is quoted on the ruthlessness and savagery of the Japanese in waging this unprovoked war of aggression in China. He said that in 1937 the United States furnished 54 percent of Japan's war supplies; in 1938, 56 percent; and now that Britain and France are at war and using their own war supplies instead of selling to Japan, we must be furnishing 80 percent of Japan's war supplies.

Then Mr. Stewart adds a conclusion, one held by many people in the United States, especially those who keep in touch with Far Eastern affairs, that if the United States would completely shut off all supplies of arms, ammunition, machinery, scrap iron, copper, oil, and war supplies of every kind to Japan she would soon have to stop fighting China.

Mr. President, I find myself very sympathetic with the position taken by Mr. Stewart and millions of our people who abhor the Japanese aggression in China. I am in favor of shutting off the sale of war supplies to Japan and to every other nation. My position is perfectly consistent. I voted for the arms-embargo provisions of the original Neutrality Act; I voted against repeal of the arms embargo. I have been for strict neutrality as to all foreign wars, and shall continue to maintain that position.

Much as I sympathize with the plight of Finland and the Finnish people, much as I want to see them win, I, myself, feel compelled to oppose war loans to the gallant people of that little nation, because I do not want this Nation to engage in the business of war; nor do I want it to take steps that I sincerely believe would lead finally to our own involvement in war.

But to me it is the height of inconsistency to oppose war loans to Finland and at the same time furnish, at a profit to some of our business interests, war materials to Japan.

I am not advocating that we go to war against Japan in behalf of China, but I do say, with all the emphasis at my command, that we ought to stop fighting China with the war supplies we furnish Japan.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a communication from the Marguerite Missionary Society of the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Topeka, Kans., urging restriction of sale of war supplies to Japan, and that the United States use its influence "for the restoration of order and justice for both nations, China and Japan, where not only commercial but humanitarian and Christian interests are hindered by the prolonged warfare."

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., January 10, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The women of the Marguerite Missionary Society of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Topeka, Kans., are hoping that Congress, at its present session, may take action on relations with the Far East that will further restrict our United States trade in war materials which make it possible for Japan to continue its attacks on the Chinese people. We are aware that the "moral embargo" against such traffic has not been fully effective.

We know your efforts for world peace, and we are confident that you will use your strong influence as a long-time Member of the Senate for the restoration of order and justice for both nations, China and Japan, where not only commercial but humanitarian and Christian interests are hindered by the prolonged warfare.

Respectfully yours,

Mrs. C. O. GWYN, President.
Miss SUSIE C. STAPLES, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6124) giving the consent of Congress to the addition of lands to the State of Texas and ceding jurisdiction to the State of Texas over certain parcels or tracts of land heretofore acquired by the United States of America from the United Mexican States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1160) thereon.

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3035) authorizing certain appointments to the United States Military Academy to fill cadetships heretofore created, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1161) thereon.

(Mr. WILEY introduced Senate bill 3154, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 3155. A bill for the relief of Joseph J. Machovec; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3156. A bill to provide for the admission of certain children to the schools of the District of Columbia without payment of tuition; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. On behalf of the junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and myself, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from California.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California (for himself and Mr. DOWNEY):

S. J. Res. 200. Joint resolution to provide for participation of the United States in the Golden Gate International Exposition at San Francisco in 1940, to continue the powers and duties of the United States Golden Gate International Exposition Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET AGENCY

Mr. DAVIS. I introduce a bill to establish a Budget Service as an agency of the Congress and to transfer to such service certain functions now performed by the Budget Bureau. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance, and that the bill, together with a statement relative thereto, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD, and the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania will also be printed in the RECORD in connection therewith.

The bill (S. 3140) to establish a Budget Service as an agency of the Congress, to transfer to such Service certain functions now performed by the Budget Bureau, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. DAVIS in connection with the bill is as follows:

One of the great needs of our American form of government is for Congress to be better informed of how the laws it has enacted are administered. Except by the use of investigating congressional committees Congress is informed of the activities of departments by their yearly reports. While some of them are quite comprehensive, many of them can be understood only by those who compiled them. And since the reports are drawn up by the agencies themselves, it is not a difficult task to arrange the words and statistics so as to cover any deficiency. To fill this breach I am ready to propose a bill, which, if passed, will be known as the Budget Act of 1940. This act would establish a Budget Service as an agency of the legislative branch of the Government rather than of the executive branch. Certain functions now performed by the present Budget Bureau will be transferred to this new Budget Service.

The Budget Service will be solely and directly responsible to the Congress. Its purpose, in addition to others specified, shall be threefold—first, formulation of the national budget; second, studying and investigating the expenditures of the Government; and, third, reporting to the Congress and the general public periodically and at the end of the fiscal year the trend of expenditures in comparison with appropriations and revenues. It shall be empowered for this purpose to employ properly accredited private accounting and auditing firms at the discretion of the Director.

The Budget Service will act in a liaison capacity to and in cooperation with the Treasury Department and the General Accounting Office. The facilities of the Budget Service shall be available to them for any information and service desired consistent with the purpose of the act. The facilities and organization of the Treasury and General Accounting Office shall likewise be made available for any information or aid required by the Director.

One of the greatest mysteries of my life has been Government accounting and the figures they put out. It seems very complicated, and after some study I have come to the conclusion that figures in government don't amount to much or tell much of a story unless they show the following: First, total appropriations made to all departments and agencies and additions and subtractions thereof taken into consideration; second, total amount of these appropriations encumbered for expenditure; third, total amount unencumbered; fourth, total unliquidated encumbrances; and, fifth, total amount actually expended from the amount encumbered. That sounds complicated, but it is much more comprehensive than the method of showing figures at the present time and at the same time uses the figures available.

In business the income is first ascertained, and expenses are fitted to it. In government, the opposite is true. The expenses are first decided upon and then revenue is raised to meet it. Under this proposed bill it is my intention that we shall do as business does—ascertain the revenue and then fit expenses to it.

So that the Budget Service and the Congress shall know what is going on at all times, the Director will be empowered to appoint, to be stationed in each department, a Budget liaison officer who shall be on the pay roll of the Budget Service and who shall act as liaison for all budgetary matters between the Department and the Director. Quarters and space sufficient for the functioning of the Budget liaison officer and his staff shall be provided for in the various departments. He shall be responsible for aiding in formulating the Department budget, perform research work and investigation of expenditures, and submit a financial report to the Budget Service where it will be incorporated into the final report of the Congress to the people. The Budget Service will be the watchdog of Congress on financial matters.

It is my belief that only in this way can Congress know whether it is justified in increasing or decreasing appropriations. Something must be done, for Government is growing bigger every year. There is no harder task to perform than to liquidate Government bureaus once they are set up. Congress could do so with justification under this proposed bill.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES

Mr. RUSSELL. I introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and I submit therewith an explanatory statement. I ask that the bill and statement be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill of the Senator from Georgia, together with the explanatory statement, will be printed in the RECORD, and the bill will be appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3145) authorizing appointments to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy of sons of soldiers, sailors, and marines who were killed in action or have died of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in line of duty during the World War, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of the act of June 8, 1926, entitled "An act to establish a department of economics, government, and history at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to amend chapter 174 of the act of Congress of April 19, 1910, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes'" (44 Stat. 704), be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the number of cadets now authorized by law at the United States Military Academy, and the number of midshipmen now authorized by law at the United States Naval Academy, are each hereby increased by 40 from the United States at large, to be appointed by the President from among the sons of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, including members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active service by the War Department and Navy Department, who were killed in action or have died, or may hereafter die of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or preexisting injury or disease aggravated, in line of duty during the World War."

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. RUSSELL is as follows:

A BILL AUTHORIZING CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES

The act of June 8, 1926, which this bill amends, increased the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy and number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy by 40 at each institution, and provided that appointments to fill the vacancies created by the act should be made by the President from among the sons of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who were killed in action or died prior to July 2, 1921, of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted in line of duty during the World War.

The appointments under this act correspond to those made by the President from among enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and National Guard. They in no way affect congressional appointments, or those made upon recommendations of Senators and Representatives.

The youngest of the possible beneficiaries of the act of June 8, 1926, was born in December 1921, and has now passed his eighteenth birthday. After 1941 he will be too old to enter the Naval Academy, and after 1943 too old to enter the Military Academy. This act, unless amended, will thus expire by its own limitation in 1943.

The purpose of the act of June 8, 1926, was to provide educational and professional opportunities for a limited number of sons of those who sacrificed their lives for the country in the World War. The increase in the authorized number of cadets and midshipmen was incidental to this primary purpose.

The limiting date, July 2, 1921, specified in the act, is more or less arbitrary. The son of a veteran who has died since that date of a war-service-connected disability is just as much entitled to assistance as one of a veteran who died prior to that date and after his discharge from the military or naval service. This was realized at the time the act was passed, but it was felt that some limit should be placed upon the number made eligible for these comparatively few appointments. This was accomplished by confining the appointments to sons of those who were killed or died during the legal period of the World War.

The number of eligibles, originally more than 6,000, is now 1,536 for appointment to the Military Academy, and 242 to the Naval Academy. Next year, 1941, there will be only 594 eligible for appointment to the Military Academy, and only 101 to the Naval Academy. In 1942 all will be too old to enter the Naval Academy, while the number still eligible for the Military Academy will be only 201.

This bill (S. 3145) extends the provisions of the act of June 8, 1926, to include the sons of those who have died since July 2, 1921, or may hereafter die, of a World War service-connected disability, or to use the language of the bill "of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or pre-existing disease or injury aggravated, in line of duty during the World War."

The records of the Veterans' Administration show that there were, on June 30, 1939, 15,760 sons of veterans who have died since the World War of service-connected disabilities. These boys range in age from infancy to 17, inclusive. For compensation purposes, they are divided by the Veterans' Administration into two groups, one consisting of 2,795 under 10 years of age, and the other of 12,965 from 10 to 17, inclusive. The Veterans' Administration has compiled no statistics for children after they have reached and passed their eighteenth birthday, but it is fair to assume that the number is comparatively small. The number of boys rendered eligible under this bill who will desire to take the examination, in any one year, for appointment at the Military and Naval Academies is, of course, problematic, but judging from the experience with the examinations under the original act, it is believed that it will not be so great as to render the administration of the act impracticable or burdensome.

GIFTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS TO FINLAND

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I think American citizens, individually and through groups, should do everything possible to raise money to provide Finland with what she needs. But I think it would be very dangerous to adopt a new foreign policy which would open the door to the American Treasury.

My heart, like that of all America, is with Finland. Finland is putting up one of the most remarkable defenses in all history, and Finland should be aided. I personally shall contribute toward that aid, but for reasons that are fundamental to me I cannot agree that Congress, as long as we are at peace, should vote a loan or a gift to any foreign nation. In reaching this conclusion, I am not looking simply at the present but also at the future. I am also recognizing that the power that Congress possesses is a delegated and limited power—and I find no authority in the Constitution authorizing the Congress to loan the people's money to a foreign nation for war purposes.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said to the Senate on January 8, 1940: "I believe that if the people of this country knew tomorrow that our Government would take no action, they would as individuals respond liberally to aid Finland."

According to the newspapers this morning, there is a serious question whether the Congress will take any action.

In my opinion, we should meet the issue quickly and at once.

Mr. President, I am introducing at this time a bill which would stimulate private gifts or contributions and ask that it be referred to the appropriate committee and printed in the RECORD. I believe that action on this bill should be accelerated and that the committee that handles it should get it back into the Senate quickly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Wisconsin will be received, properly referred, and printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3154) to permit contributions and gifts to the Republic of Finland to be deducted in computing net income for income-tax purposes to the same extent that charitable contributions are deductible, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (o) of section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is amended by inserting therein immediately after paragraph (1) thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(1A) The Republic of Finland or any duly authorized representative thereof for exclusively public purposes of such Republic, if such contributions or gifts are made within the taxable year 1940."

SEC. 2. Section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(t) In the case of a corporation, contributions or gifts payment of which is made within the taxable year 1940 to the Republic of Finland or any duly authorized representative thereof for exclusively public purposes of such Republic, to an amount which when added to any deductions taken under subsection (q) of this section does not exceed 5 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subsection and subsection (q). Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary."

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the bill (H. R. 7342) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It seems to me perhaps the bill should have been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. 1300. A bill for the relief of officers who failed to file application for benefits within the time limit fixed by the act of May 24, 1928;

S. 1555. A bill to extend the time in which applications may be made for the benefits of the Disabled Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928;

S. 1877. A bill for the relief of officers who failed to file application for benefits within the time limit fixed by the act of May 24, 1928; and

S. 2638. A bill to extend eligibility for disabled emergency officers' retirement benefits to those disabled emergency officers of the World War otherwise entitled thereto who failed to file application therefor within the time provided for in Public Law No. 506, approved May 24, 1928, Seventieth Congress.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—CHANNEL FROM HAVRE DE GRACE TO RED POINT, MD., ETC.

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AUDREY JONES

Mr. NEELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 218), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Audrey Jones, daughter of Charles Jones, late an employee of the Senate, under supervision of the Committee on Rules, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

OBLIGATIONS OF UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have reported at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 219), as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested to report to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has fulfilled the obligations of the Litvinov agreements of November 16, 1933, upon which our diplomatic relations with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics were then and are now made wholly contingent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be so referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In connection with my remarks, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a brief discussion of my viewpoint upon this subject as recently published in the Young Republican.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The original recognition of the Soviet Russian Government by the United States was a colossal blunder. I felt and said so then. I repeat it now. The only atonement—the only cure—is to acknowledge the mistake and undo it. That means a withdrawal not only of our Ambassador to Moscow but also a withdrawal of all our diplomatic recognition of an alien regime which, through its American tools, here seeks to promote Moscow's "world revolution." The same day that Comrade Molotov renewed in Moscow the Communist commitment to "world revolution," Comrade Browder renewed it in our own Boston and said we were ripe for "quick transition." Just why we should continue officially to condone—officially bless—a Russian relationship which threatens our own internal security passeth all understanding. Just why we should be the only government in North and South America which thus recognizes the Russian Soviets—thus destroying that unity and solidarity of pan-American thought and action for which we pretend such affection—is the mystery of the age.

It is none of our business what kind of a government Russia maintains in Russia. But neither is it any of Russia's business what kind of a government America maintains in America. And it is very definitely a lot of our business whether Russia attempts to destroy—by propaganda, sabotage, or force—the kind of a government we have chosen for ourselves. That is what I said on the floor of the Senate January 11, 1934, when I cast one of the few votes against the confirmation of Ambassador Bullitt (the only chance the Senate had to pass upon the question of Russian recognition).

President Roosevelt knew he was dealing with a treacherous subject when he took up this question in the first year of his first administration. He tried to tie Moscow down with written promises. Comrade Litvinov cheerfully gave the promises. They are contained in the Roosevelt-Litvinov letters of November 1933. Moscow promised to wall us off from her "world revolution." She promised to disown any American movement which threatened the "tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security" of the United States or which in any way sought the overthrow of our Government by force. Incidentally she promised to settle her old debts ($435,000,000 worth).

Russia has kept none of these promises. Moscow is the well-spring of the American Communist Party. It is impossible to separate the American Communist from his Moscow inspiration, leadership, and support. But it is possible to separate Moscow from a central station, a general headquarters, here in Washington. It is possible to withdraw our own benediction from this menace to our own "tranquillity, prosperity, order, and security." If we neglect this prudence much longer, we certainly shall have ominously forgotten that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Even if we had no sinister experience of our own with communism—and we are having them constantly all over the country—we have the premonitions of our own State Department (the Colby note of 1920 under President Wilson) that "the responsible leaders of this regime have frequently and openly boasted that they are willing to sign agreements and undertakings with foreign powers while not having the slightest intention of observing such undertakings or carrying out such agreements." The ruthless, brutal, cynical invasion of Finland demonstrates that the Moscow of 1939 is no different than the Moscow of 1920 which was too much for Woodrow Wilson to stomach.

This is not a partisan question. Democrats, as just indicated, have been among the most earnest opponents of Russian recognition; and some well-meaning Republicans, let it be added, joined in the 1933 belief that we ought to give the Soviets a chance. Well * * * they have had their chance, and now it is our move. I repeat it is not a partisan question. But is fair to say that Republican administrations (under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover) declined to yield to the hammer and the sickle, and most Republicans were skeptical in 1933 as they still are today.

When I opposed recognition on the floor of the Senate on January 11, 1934, I said:

"Time and events will vindicate the action of the President only in the degree that these engagements do not degenerate into diplomatic scraps of paper."

Six years' test is long enough. These "engagements" are nothing more than "scraps of paper." They are worthless. They are worse than worthless because, in addition to being sterile themselves, they are the open door to internal American subversion. It is time to say so and to act accordingly.

I am not pretending that the withdrawal of this recognition automatically saves us from communism. No indeed; the best—the only sure—defense against communism is to restore some semblance of general American prosperity so that the agents of sedition meet deaf ears when they plead their dynamite. But the withdrawal of this recognition will symbolize an official purpose at the top (where it most greatly needs to be symbolized) to quit coddling the enemies of our domestic tranquillity and of our institutions. It will symbolize our refusal longer to be taken in by treachery and duplicity. It will symbolize our harmony with 20 other American republics in their hostility to communism. It will turn off the "green light" and meet the "reds" with "red."

AFFIDAVITS OF PREJUDICE IN DISTRICT COURT FOR ALASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1335) relating to the filing of affidavits of prejudice in the District Court for the District of Alaska, which was, on page 2, line 12, after "case", to insert "The provisions of this subdivision shall apply only to the district court."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ACQUISITION OF THE ESTATE OF PATRICK HENRY IN CHARLOTTE COUNTY, VA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1919) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$100,000", and on page 2, line 5, after the word "hereby", to insert "authorized to be."

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EQUALIZATION OF SALARIES OF LETTER CARRIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. I submit a conference report, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee submits a conference report and asks for its immediate consideration. The report will be read before the Chair puts the unanimous-consent request.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of salaries of letter carriers, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sums proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,200 to $1,440", and the Senate agree to the same.

KENNETH McKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
LYNN J. FRAZIER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. G. BURCH,
ALBERT E. AUSTIN,
B. F. WHELCHER,

WM. W. BLACKNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to explain it.

Some time ago the House passed a bill increasing the salaries of village carriers from their former range of $1,150 to $1,300 to a range of $1,300 to $1,500. The Senate committee recommended an increase of $50 per year to each class. The bill went to conference and the conference has reported a compromise of from $1,200 to $1,440, which we think is a reasonable compromise; and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR BURKE

[Mr. WHEELER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a tribute to Senator BURKE by Senator CONNALLY, published in the Omaha World-Herald of January 10, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR McCARRAN BEFORE NATIONAL AERONAUTIC ASSOCIATION CONVENTION

[Mr. KING asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Senator McCARRAN before the National Aeronautic Association in national convention at New Orleans, January 12, 1940, together with excerpts, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR MEAD ON AID TO SMALL BUSINESS

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject Small Business Needs a Helping Hand, delivered by Senator MEAD on January 17, 1940, at Washington, D. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

REMARKS OF SENATOR MEAD BEFORE GRAND STREET BOYS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the remarks made by Senator MEAD before the Grand Street Boys' Association at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, on January 13, 1940, which appear in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE ON THE RAPE OF MUSCLE SHOALS

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The Rape of Muscle Shoals," which appears in the Appendix.]

GUAM

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, with reference to Guam, our small but strategically located island possession in the Pacific Ocean, and the controversies and the confusion which have arisen respecting the proposed harbor improvements there, a very clear statement on this subject was contained in an editorial in the Washington Star of January 10, 1940, as follows:

The House last year rejected a $5,000,000 item for the Guam project, apparently due largely to a misunderstanding as to the purpose of the proposed works. There was also a feeling among some of the legislators that the improvements might offend Japan to the point of provoking war in the Pacific. The misunderstanding arose from a tendency to confuse the Navy's modest harbor program with the $80,000,000 fortification project recommended by the so-called Hepburn Board. As a matter of fact, the Navy wishes at this time only to erect a breakwater to provide safer landing and mooring facilities for commercial and naval seaplanes and to remove certain coral obstructions hindering movement of seaplanes and other craft.

No fortifications nor gun emplacements such as were envisioned by some critics of the project last year are contemplated under the requested appropriation. That Japan might view such harbor improvements as a threat of war by the United States is inconceivable. And if Japan has no designs on the United States, she could have no reasonable objection to the use of Guam by the Navy as an island outpost, equipped to watch for any threat from the Far East and to flash a warning to our main line of defense in the Pacific, which extends from Unalaska through Hawaii to the Panama Canal. There is no need to fortify Guam at present, but prudence and common sense are on the side of the Navy in the plan to make Guam serve as a defensive listening post in the troubled Far East.

The same viewpoint is expressed in an editorial in the Baltimore Sun of January 11, which describes the proposals for expansion of the Navy and concludes with the following respecting Guam:

It seems also to renew the scheme for improving the Navy's facilities at Guam in a reasonable way. The plan is not really to fortify that outpost or turn it into a "fully equipped advance fleet base" but simply to dredge underwater runways and construct breakwaters. Virtually, this same scheme was killed by the House last February, because it was felt Japan would interpret it as a challenging gesture. Doubtless it could still be so construed. But no more than last year do the facts of the proposal have any genuine relation to challenges, belligerent or otherwise.

Editorial comment in the Washington Post of January 14 concerning the present proposal for harbor improvements at Guam was, in part, as follows:

With Guam increasingly important as a naval lookout in the south Pacific, as well as an important way station on the commercial air route between the United States and Asia, there is a good deal to be said for making harbor improvements there.

The Navy proposes to do this work by allocating to Guam $4,000,000 of the sum budgeted for the fourteenth (Hawaiian area) naval district. This involves no subterfuge, for it is entirely up to Congress, which has now been informed of the plan, to approve or reject it.

But in making up its mind, Congress should avoid giving way to alarmist feelings and consider the project on its own merits as a useful development of minor significance. It is not and is clearly not intended to be a disguised entering wedge for any large-scale plan to fortify Guam.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBTAINED-TO BILLS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will proceed to call the bills on the calendar.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 58) providing that a calendar day's notice shall suffice in connection with suspension of a rule was announced as first in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are a number of so-called Indian bills on the calendar—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had intended, but overlooked it before beginning the call of the calendar, to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that absent Senators may come in. I now make the point that there is no quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	Lundeen	Slattery
Bankhead	Gibson	McKellar	Smathers
Barbour	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Barkley	Glass	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Tobey
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Hale	Murray	Truman
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Van Nuys
Chandler	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Chavez	Hill	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Connally	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Donahay	King	Schwartz

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on official business for the Special Committee on Civil Liberties.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 790) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an arrangement has been made that a bill which is pending before the Judiciary Committee, and as to which hearings have been asked by representatives of the Indian tribes, shall have a hearing early in February, at which time undoubtedly some arrangement will be made which will be followed by an agreement to take up so-called Indian bills for consideration. I therefore ask to have this bill and the four which follow it passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, Senate bill 790, Senate bill 1222, Senate bill 767, Senate bill 864, and Senate bill 498 will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROPOSED MOUNTAIN JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN TENNESSEE

The bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the objection in order to allow me at this time to read a very short letter on the subject from the Attorney General, so that it may be in the Record for the use of Senators?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the reading of the letter, but I think this is a matter which ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Judiciary Committee reported the bill, and the Senator knows that we have had a conference about it. I shall be very glad, indeed, to have a further conference before the bill is taken up. I am perfectly willing to have it go over for that purpose, but I should like to read, at this point, a letter from the Attorney General.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not, by my silence, agree to the position taken by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course not. I understand that.

The letter is dated July 22, 1939, and is as follows:

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

*Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.*

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been directed to the bill (S. 1681) to create an additional judicial district in the State of Tennessee.

Sometime ago I wrote you, in response to your request, concerning a prior bill (S. 676) on the same subject. The present bill, however, materially differs from the earlier measure. Under existing law, the State of Tennessee is divided into three districts known as the eastern, middle, and western. Each district has one judge. In addition, there is a fourth judge in the State who is a roving judge for the eastern and middle districts. The earlier of the two bills would have increased the judicial personnel in the State of Tennessee by, in effect, requiring the appointment of a judge for the projected district. The bill to which I am now referring (S. 1681), however, does not contemplate the appointment of an additional judge, as under the terms of the measure the present roving judge would become the resident judge of the new district.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I find no objection to the enactment of the bill.

Sincerely,

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Mr. President, let me say that I am perfectly willing to have the bill go over; and I shall try to agree at an early date with my friend from Vermont as to further hearings on the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 570) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to prevent unfair competition; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF A RESOLUTION

The resolution (S. Res. 107) opposing sales of American cotton during the present world crisis to foreign purchasers below the cost of production was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this resolution perhaps should be indefinitely postponed.

I submitted the resolution to prevent the Agricultural Department from paying a subsidy of $7.50 per bale, or 1½ cents per pound, on cotton to be exported to foreign purchasers. I submitted the resolution at a time when it was perfectly obvious that, because of the approaching war in Europe, cotton would go up anyway. As a matter of fact, the subsidy paid by the Secretary of Agriculture has not induced the exportation of any cotton. As a matter of fact, American stocks in nearly all foreign warehouses were then exhausted. It was a wholly useless proceeding upon the part of the Secretary of Agriculture; but there is not any use in retaining the resolution upon the calendar.

Mr. President, in passing I desire to say that the present session of Congress will have to provide for an additional appropriation to the Secretary of Agriculture of from nine to ten million dollars to enable him to comply with the Agricultural Adjustment Act or the Soil Conservation Act; and the $40,000,000 which was given away to induce foreign purchasers to buy cotton below the cost of producing it could well have been used to take care of the item which the Congress must be ultimately called on to provide in a deficiency bill.

So far as this resolution is concerned, it may well be indefinitely postponed; and I ask that it take that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Senator from Georgia requests unanimous consent that the resolution be laid on the table and action thereon indefinitely postponed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to this bill and the bill following—Senate bill 2202, to establish a Public Works Agency—I ask that they be laid upon the table and action upon them indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2203) to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

W. K. RICHARDSON

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) for the relief of W. K. Richardson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in reference to Senate Joint Resolution 34, I desire to say that in the Seventy-fourth Congress Senate Resolution 119 remanded this claim to the Court of Claims for readjudication. The Court of Claims dismissed the petition on the ground that, since the claim had been adjudicated by that court, jurisdiction to readjudicate it could not be conferred by the action of merely one of the Houses of Congress. This is therefore a joint resolution, which requires the concurrence of the other House. The joint resolution provides that the maximum amount which may be allowed by the Court of Claims shall be 3 percent of the original claim; and the committee believed the matter ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that a similar joint resolution was passed heretofore and was vetoed by the President, as I recall.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This joint resolution provides that the award shall not be more than 3 percent of the original amount of the claim; and on that basis the committee thought the matter ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I adhere to my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1730) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to be transferred to positions under the competitive classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF BONUS TO PROVISIONAL AND PROBATIONARY OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 457) to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b), section 202, of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, or (while holding such commission or warrant) serving under a temporary commission in a higher grade—in each case for the period of service under such commission or warrant or in such higher grade after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder. This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer nor to any provisional, probationary, or temporary officer of the military or naval forces or Coast Guard, under the grade of major or lieutenant commander, who served subsequent to April 6, 1917, and who is now in a status of honorable separation from the military, naval, or Coast Guard service: Provided, That applications under this act must be made within 1 year from the date of enactment."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, during our participation in the World War in 1917 and 1918 there were several distinct groups of officers in the United States Army, Regular Army officers, National Army officers, emergency officers, provisional officers, and probationary officers. Officers below the grade of major, other than Regulars, were supposed to be entitled to adjusted compensation, commonly known as the bonus.

An interpretation of the law by the War Department, however, barred provisional and probationary officers from eligibility to receive the bonus, as it was held that these officers were part of the Regular forces. There was no difference in the service rendered by officers of all groups.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, in my hasty examination of the papers I find that both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have advised against the enactment of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They opposed the bonus. This measure is of a piece with the same character of legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would it cost?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About $1,700,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. A year?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; that would be the total cost.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that, as I understand, the bill merely allows those whom we call provisional officers to get the bonus, just as the Reserve officers received it. As soon as the war was over they went out into civil life, but because they were provisional officers, and technically a provisional officer was a Regular Army officer, and because the bonus was refused to Regular Army officers, these men have not received the bonus, and they ought to have it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Although considered technically as Regulars, they get no emoluments such as those received by Regular Army officers after discharge. They were left without any recognition after discharge, either as Regulars or provisionals.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know about that phase of the matter. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Texas; I did not mean to take him off the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was glad to have the Senator's contribution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did these officers get the bonus received by Regular enlisted soldiers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They did not.

Mr. McKELLAR. They received no bonus whatever?

Mr. SHEPPARD. None whatever.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the adverse recommendations by the Secretary of the Navy, former Senator Swanson, and Mr. Johnson, the Acting Secretary of War, in order that the record may be complete as to the attitude of the War Department and the Navy Department in respect to the matter, I ask that the adverse recommendations be inserted in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the adverse recommendations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Report from the War Department on the current bill, S. 457, under date of April 11, 1939, follows:

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,

Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,

United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to S. 457, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a bill to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, which you transmitted to the War Department on January 18, 1939, with a request for information and the views of the Department relative thereto.

The provisions of this bill are similar to those contained in numerous previous bills to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, the most recent similar Senate bills being S. 22 and S. 4042, both of which were introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress. In the case of the former, your attention is invited to the War Department's adverse report to your committee under date of March 27, 1937, which report has been published in Senate Report No. 1909, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session (Calendar No. 2014), to accompany S. 4042, a copy of which printed report is enclosed (in committee files). It appears that the War Department was not called upon to report on S. 4042.

Insofar as this Department is involved by the present bill, S. 457, it would amend the provisions of subsection (b), section 202, of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act so that adjusted-service credit might be allowed to provisional and probationary officers of the Regular Army who are now in a status of honorable separation from the military service. S. 457 is, therefore, broader in its scope than S. 22, which set the date, January 1, 1922, as the specific date prior to which such officers must have been honorably separated from the military service in order to come in for adjusted compensation. It is considered that it is intended by S. 457 to render all provisional and probationary officers of the Regular Army whose service would otherwise qualify them as "veterans" under the provisions of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act eligible to apply for and receive adjusted compensation if they are now or may become honorably separated from the military service prior to the date the bill becomes law. And it is evident, therefore, that the number of such persons who would become beneficiaries under the bill, if enacted, cannot be determined until after it becomes law. The World War Adjusted Compensation Act does not exclude officers who held temporary commissions below the grade of major in the Army from the benefits thereunder.

The approximate number who would become beneficiaries under the legislation, if enacted, up to and including the date February 9, 1939, is 2,513, and it has been estimated by this Department that their total adjusted-service credit would approximate $1,570,625. If the committee desires information regarding the total adjusted-service certificate face value and an estimate of the additional appropriations necessary to cover the cost of the proposed legislation, the same may be obtained from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, to whom the above statistics have been furnished, as that official is charged by law with the adjudication of all claims for compensation.

The War Department invites your attention to the fact that the present Chief Executive has, on two separate occasions, June 26, 1936, and August 26, 1937, withheld his approval from enactments designed to grant adjusted compensation to the provisional officer's group. There are enclosed copies (in committee files) of his memoranda of disapproval regarding the measures which set forth his observations with respect thereto.

Attention is also invited to the adverse report of the War Department dated February 28, 1938, and the pertinent statement of Lt. Col. F. Granville Munson, Judge Advocate General's Department, who represented the War Department at a hearing held March 24, 1938, on S. 3280, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, titled "A bill placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes," which bill, if enacted, would have granted adjusted compensation and other benefits and privileges to provisional officers. Both the report and statement referred to have been published and are contained in a pamphlet printed for use by your committee, a copy entitled "Hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, on S. 3280," is enclosed (in committee files).

After mature consideration of the entire matter, the War Department adheres to the view expressed in its previous report on S. 22, printed in the enclosed Senate Report No. 1909, and recommends that S. 457 be not enacted into law.

The proposed legislation was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which reports that there is no objection to the submission of this unfavorable report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS JOHNSON,
Acting Secretary of War.

Report from the Navy Department on S. 457, under date of April 10, 1939, follows:

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The bill (S. 457) to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with a request for views relative to the measure.

It is the purpose of the bill S. 457 to make eligible for adjusted-service compensation those officers who served during the World War under probationary appointments as dental surgeons, acting ensigns for engineering duties only, acting chaplains, and as probationary officers of the Marine Corps.

For the individuals in such status, probationary appointments were the only means of entrance into the permanent Naval Establishment. These former officers were not inducted into the Navy or Marine Corps for the duration of the war or the duration of a national emergency but elected the Navy as their vocation and would have been given permanent commissions upon the expiration of the probationary period of service if qualified and if they had not resigned voluntarily.

Since the law relating to adjusted compensation was apparently intended for the benefit of individuals who gave up their civilian occupations to serve the armed force of the Government during the war, it does not appear to the Navy Department that individuals serving under probationary appointments are among those intended to be benefited.

It is estimated that in the event of the enactment of S. 457 approximately 340 officers who served in a probationary status subsequent to April 6, 1917, would benefit by the enactment of this legislation. It is estimated that the total amount of service credit to which these officers would become entitled is approximately $167,000.

The Navy Department recommends against enactment of the bill, S. 457.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREE FLOW OF FISHERY PRODUCTS

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, Order of Business 630, Senate bill 1852, and Order of Business 724, Senate bill 2110, which appear on the same page of the calendar, were companion bills with one which was acted upon in late July or early August last. At that time the Senators interested in these particular measures came to an agreement, and the Senate passed, and the House has since passed, a bill which contains the essential features of these two measures on the calendar. At that time we decided that probably the best way to clear the calendar was to move to recommit the bills to the committees from which they came. In the absence of objection, I ask that that course be taken at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and Senate bill 1852 will be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, and Senate bill 2110 will be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BUSINESS AND ECONOMIC RESEARCH STATIONS

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this is quite an important bill, and if opportunity affords, when the call of the calendar is concluded, I shall deliver an explanation of the bill, and if the opportunity does not present itself today, I shall at some early moment address the Senate on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction upon and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this is a rivers and harbors authorization bill, which involved $83,000,000 when it came from the House of Representatives. The Senate Commerce Committee added a little item of $324,000,000. In the new and contrite spirit of economy which seems to have taken possession of the Congress, I cannot imagine favorable consideration of such an atrocity. I would ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce except for the absence of the distinguished chairman of that committee. When he is present I shall press the request. For the time being I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill has the approval of a large majority of the Committee on Commerce. It is an authorization bill, and would spread the expenditures over about 8 years. It involves a long-time program, including some of the most important waterway and harbor projects in the United States.

The Senator himself is on a completed waterway project, perhaps the model waterway project of the world, the channel from Duluth to Buffalo and New York, which made possible the steel industry of America, and made possible the development of the railroads, and all the great steel structures of the country, really the physical basis of our civilization.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Texas does not quite mean what he says. I know of no such authorization as that of which he speaks. The St. Lawrence waterway project is still pending; it has not been approved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am speaking of the Great Lakes waterway, the improvement of the waterways connecting the Great Lakes, used by ships carrying iron ore from Minnesota to the great steel works in the vicinity of Chicago, Gary, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and other points. I am speaking of a waterway project already in existence and which has been in existence for probably 50 years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It has been in existence at least 50 years, and carries a third of the water-borne commerce of the United States; but whether or not the Senator from Michigan has any interest in the bill directly, he is opposed to any $324,000,000 authorization at the present time, and he is one member of the Committee on Commerce who dissents from the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. KING. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2259) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK P. HOYT

The bill (S. 2264) for the relief of Frank P. Hoyt was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frank P. Hoyt, who was a member of Troop D, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have served for more than 90 days during the Philippine Insurrection and to have been honorably discharged on the 1st day of June 1900: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred upon Frank P. Hoyt by reason of the enactment of this act shall be limited to admission to a soldiers' home under the regulations governing such admissions.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2687) to establish a circuit court of appeals for patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 409) to protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5643) to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in rice and providing for the orderly marketing of rice at fair prices in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEESBURG WELDING & GARAGE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2289) for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,017.78" and insert "$1,017.08", and to strike out the proviso at the end of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof a new proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co., of Leesburg, Fla., the sum of $1,017.08, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for payment for certain materials furnished and services rendered, at the request of officials of the Works Progress Administration, in connection with the Venetian Garden project, official project No. 65-35-295, in Leesburg, Fla., during the period November 1, 1936, to February 15, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6039) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels; to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) defining and classifying gratuity expenditures allowable as offsets in favor of the United States and against the Five Civilized Nations or Tribes of Indians, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this joint resolution comes in the category heretofore referred to, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I give notice that as soon as the call of the calendar shall be completed I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2420, to which objection has just been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

COLLECTION OF IRRIGATION CHARGES UNDER BLACKFEET IRRIGATION PROJECT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) to approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior in deferring the collection of certain irrigation charges against lands under the Blackfeet Indian irrigation project was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in accordance with the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1803), the action of the Secretary of the Interior in deferring such charges under said irrigation project is hereby approved.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1970) to eliminate certain oppressive labor practices affecting interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2575) to provide pensions, compensating retirement pay, and hospital benefits for certain Reserve officers of the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2830) to provide for the registration of aliens was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT PAY FOR CERTAIN EMERGENCY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 134) providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over, but will withhold the objection until we may have an explanation of the measure. I should like an explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withholds his objection and requests an explanation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill is similar to one which has previously been passed by the Congress. It makes possible the restoration to the rolls of certain emergency officers who were stricken off under the act of 1934. It is not an unjust measure in any respect. Soon after the conclusion of the World War Congress gave the privilege of retirement benefits to the officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps. Congress likewise gave retirement benefits to the emergency officers of the World War. The so-called Economy Act eliminated from the rolls some 4,000 officers, and left on the rolls about 1,900 officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would be the cost of the measure? I see by the letter from General Hines that the cost would be $2,677,000. Does that mean for a year or would that be the entire cost?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall get to that in a moment. The Veterans' Administration has simply reported the outside number of Reserve officers who could be returned to the rolls, and has reported about 2,950, I believe—less than 3,000. That is the maximum number. In 1938 the rehabilitation services of the veterans' organizations, working separately, not concurrently, made a very careful calculation of the number of emergency officers of the World War who could be restored to the rolls under this bill. In April of that year they fixed the number then at 1,500. The average age of these officers is 58 years. They are dying very rapidly; 17.4 percent of the number stricken from the rolls under the so-called Economy Act of 1934 passed away prior to January 1, 1940.

When we consider that they are of the average age of 58 years, ranging from 44 years to 83 years of age, it is obvious that these emergency officers are passing away at a very rapid rate.

The veterans' rehabilitation services of all the veterans' organizations estimated that not more than 1,500 could be returned to the rolls. Certainly more than 100 of these officers have died since these estimates were made. So there can be only about 1,300 or 1,400 returned to the rolls under this measure. The cost, therefore, would be not to exceed $1,400,000. That would be an annual cost. But, since these officers are dying at a rapid rate, the cost will very rapidly decline.

Mr. President, it is merely a matter of being fair to these officers. The emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps were retired. The emergency officers of the Army were retired. The Economy Act came along, and out of some 6,000 officers all but about 1,900 were taken off the rolls.

Under Public Law No. 18, passed in the Seventy-sixth Congress, even a National Guard officer or an officer in the Reserve Corps called back into active service for 30 days, and suffering a permanent disability, is entitled to retire. Congress passed that law. It had the approval of the Administration. A National Guard officer or an officer in the Reserve Corps called back for 30 days, and suffering a permanent disability of 30 percent or more, is entitled to retirement pay. Yet the emergency officers of the World War are not permitted to receive retirement benefits, when like benefits have been given to every other class of officers.

It is true that officers of the World War who received combat wounds and who could establish that their disability arose from actual service, when they have 30 percent disability, are on the rolls. But none of the emergency officers, with very minor exceptions, are now entitled to the retirement benefits because of the Economy Act, unless they can establish this so-called causative factor, which nobody can establish. Let me explain what is meant by the "causative factor." If an officer is stricken with disease while he is in the actual service and in actual line of duty, unless he can convince the Bureau that he would not have had that disease in private life, he is not able to establish the causative factor and he goes off the rolls. It is the harshest rule that was ever applied to a set of deserving officers.

Mr. President, I wish the RECORD to show the facts with reference to these officers. They must be 30 percent or more disabled, and the disability must be permanent. The pending measure can apply only to some of the officers who were stricken from the rolls by the Economy Act and who are yet alive. It cannot apply to the maximum number, because service-connected disability to the degree of 30 percent or more must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence without the benefit of any statutory or regulatory presumption whatsoever.

Therefore, when the Veterans' Administration reports the maximum number that could possibly be returned to the rolls as 2,900, no allowance is made for deaths since the date of that report. The officers are dying at a very rapid rate. Even the emergency officers who were left on the rolls under the Economy Act have passed away at a rate of more than 8 percent per annum.

Mr. President, I repeat that this is a measure which ought to be passed notwithstanding it does mean an increase in the cost of Veterans' Administration of a little more than $1,000,000—say $1,300,000 or $1,400,000—to begin with. It can never go beyond that amount, and it will very rapidly decrease, because of the rapid death rate among this type of veteran officers.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator; and expressing myself in the deepest sympathy with the objective for which the Senator argues, may I not ask, calling attention to the top of page 2, line 1, of the bill, where reference is made to making valid application for retirement, if existing law requires that the application be filed within 1 year from the passage of the act of 1928?

Mr. GEORGE. That was the requirement in the original act.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes. And that was not extended by the act of 1933, as I understand?

Mr. GEORGE. No; that was not extended.

Mr. DANAHER. Everything the Senator says in favor of this particular bill would apply alike to those emergency officers who did not file applications within the year, would it not?

Mr. GEORGE. That is true. They would have the right to file under this measure.

Mr. DANAHER. Would the Senator object, then, to extending the time within which application for retirement properly may be made by those who failed to take advantage of the act when first passed?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, not at all. But since they must have had 30-percent disability in actual service, I take it that practically all the emergency officers who could qualify did file applications. I do not think there has been any complaint upon that ground.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I have in mind at this moment a man who was captain of the football team of his university. He was an All-American player in 1917. He enlisted and went to war. He became a major overseas. In 1929 he had plenty of money. He was able to take care of himself, but still had a 49-percent rating of disability. He is a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He has a Distinguished Service Cross. He was cited for the Congressional Medal of Honor. Today he has nothing and he is a hopeless wreck. He cannot now qualify. He is an emergency officer. He comes within every argument the Senator from Georgia presents. I wonder if we could not amend the bill in such fashion as to take care of such an officer? With the Senator's collaboration I am certain that we could, and no injustice would remain even to that very small class of officers, as the Senator himself points out, who, having failed to qualify in 1928, notwithstanding their disability, ought very properly to be included today. I ask and bespeak the Senator's cooperation in drawing an amendment to that end.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I would certainly have no objection to such an amendment if the bill does not take care of a situation of that kind; and, since the measure must go to the House anyway, I will undertake to see that it takes care of all the cases which cannot now qualify under it.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of any law of the United States, any person who served as an officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the World War, who made valid application for retirement under the provisions of Public Law No. 506, Seventieth Congress, enacted May 24, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 581 and 582), and who prior to the passage of this act has been granted retirement with pay, shall be entitled to continue to receive retirement pay at the monthly rate paid him on March 19, 1933, if the disability for which he has been retired resulted from disease or injury or aggravation of a preexisting disease or injury incurred in such service in fact in line of duty and directly resulting from the performance of duty: Provided, That such person entered active service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and served as an officer prior to July 2, 1921: Provided further, That where the disability is now or hereafter determined to be directly incurred in or aggravated during active service, in fact in line of duty without benefit of any statutory or regulatory presumption of any kind, it will be considered to have directly resulted from performance of duty, unless otherwise shown by official record or clear and unmistakable evidence.

SEC. 2. Payment of emergency officers' retirement pay shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act in all cases where entitlement thereto is authorized solely by the provisions of this act. No beneficiary under this act shall receive any retirement pay for any period prior to the date of this act.

SEC. 3. That subsection (b) of section 212 of Public Law No. 212, Seventy-second Congress, shall be amended to read as follows:

"(b) This section shall not apply to any person whose retired pay, plus civilian pay, amounts to less than $3,000: Provided, That this section shall not apply to regular or emergency commissioned officers retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or for disabilities resulting from an explosion of an instrumentality of war in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), part I, paragraph I."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6901) granting increase of pensions to certain widows of veterans of the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2510) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public kindergarten or kindergarten and nursery-school education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The bill (H. R. 7171) to amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance considered this measure and favorably reported it. Without going into a long explanation, I will say to the Senator from Utah that under the present law in the matter of the exportation of agricultural commodities there is a possibility that, under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, money may be used for the purpose of paying export bounties. There is always danger of such commodities coming right back on us. The present law provides that quotas and limitations may be established if the commodities are actually coming in. We have to wait until they come in before we can invoke the act. The pending bill merely provides that we do not have to wait until the commodities actually come in, but may invoke the provisions in lines 11 and 12, by inserting in subsection (a), after the word "being," the words "or are practically certain to be." That is the really substantial part of the bill, and I think there will be no objection to it if Senators understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish briefly to refer to the bill so ably presented by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator refers to House bill 7171?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks to recur to that bill?

Mr. McNARY. No; I am merely going to make a brief statement for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some data which I think will be revealing and interesting. I shall not state my interest in the matter, though it has been very great; but I have a letter from Mr. N. E. Dodd, who is the western representative of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and one of the ablest men in the Administration.

I requested information as to the amount of wheat that might be brought into this country in case of a further fall in currencies, or in the event of market conditions throughout the world which would bring about an importation of wheat in great amount. The data indicate, Mr. President, that there is in this country a good deal of bonded wheat which was raised in Canada, and that there is a great quantity stored in warehouses and elevators along the border line ready to be shipped in. In anticipation of that situation, the bill which has just been passed will act as a corrective.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, following action on the bill by the Senate, the letter from Mr. Dodd, and the table accompanying it.

There being no objection, the letter and table were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1940.

HON. CHARLES L. McNARY,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR McNARY: In accordance with your request, there is enclosed a table showing the position of Canadian grain in store in the United States, December 22, 1939, compared with the same date a year ago. On January 9, 1940, the stocks of Canadian grain in the United States amounted to 38,000,000 bushels.

There are over 310,000,000 bushels of wheat in store in Canada, of which more than 140,000,000 bushels are located in market positions near the United States.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) N. E. Dodd,
Director, Western Division.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1935) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a line was inadvertently left out of the bill when it was reported. I took up the matter with the clerk of the committee, and he suggested an amendment, on page 12, between lines 9 and 10, to insert "(d) The Conciliation Commissioner shall receive as."

Which would clarify the bill. I offer the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. I shall be glad to do so. First, however, I should like to have the suggested amendment agreed to, in order to correct the misprint.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator is about to make an explanation of the bill. I have received a number of letters on the subject of the bill; and I shall be glad, if I may, briefly to refer to one or two of them, and then have the Senator make such explanation as he may deem proper.

Some of the letters which I have received are critical of the measure and say that under the present law a number of those who have availed themselves of the bankruptcy proceeding continue in possession of the property, though they do not attempt to keep it in proper repair. They do not attempt to rehabilitate it so that they may finally pay the obligation and have the property back again.

Another letter states that in many instances in which the mortgagor has cattle or sheep upon the premises he fails to feed them or care for them, so that the creditor not only has to pay for the repairs upon the farm and keep it in shape because of the neglect of the mortgagor, but also has to pay very large sums in order to feed the sheep and cattle during the winter months and during the period when they must be fed from the farm or upon the farm. I should like to have the Senator answer those criticisms of the bill, so that we may at least make a reasonable showing to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] reported the bill, and has submitted a very excellent report in explanation of it. I think the cases mentioned by the Senator from Utah must be very extreme cases because under the act the United States district judge has full charge of the bankruptcy proceeding, and he may allow a 3-year moratorium under his direction, and if the owner of the farm does not live up to the directions of the judge the mortgage may be foreclosed and the property sold at any time. So I think those are extreme cases.

I have before me one letter which is typical of the letters I have been receiving. I have received many of them. This particular letter is from the Western Cattle Co., at Roundup, Mont., and is signed by J. C. Miller. One provision of the bill is to extend the provisions of the act. The present law expires on March 4 of this year, and the bill seeks to extend the law for 4 years to March 4, 1944. Mr. Miller says:

The Frazier-Lemke Act will expire on March 4, and I want to remind you that a great many ranchers in central Montana are anxious that the act be extended.

This act has been a lifesaver for a great many ranchers and farmers who were caught by the drought. They are still sticking to their properties in hopes of better years to come. Conditions are much improved; feed reserves are increasing; the ranges are gradually coming back; and hay is being stored ahead. Ranges are being restocked gradually, but their real-estate mortgages are due and they should have protection until some plan is worked out for putting their real-estate mortgages in better shape.

He goes on to say that he hopes the provisions of the act will be extended.

I think that letter very accurately states the situation. As stated by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] in the report, the bill seeks to make a few amendments in the existing law to simplify and clarify the language. That is practically all it does, with the exception of extending the time for another 4-year period.

Recently there have been two Supreme Court decisions on the question. A number of United States district judges have held, in certain cases in which farmers had made application under the act, that farm conditions were so bad that they had no chance of paying out, even if they had another 3 years, and have thrown the cases out of court. Certain of those cases were taken to the Supreme Court. On December 4 Chief Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court, which held that the fact that the farmer had more debts than assets was no reason why he should not be given a chance under the act, and the fact that the judge might think the farmer had no chance of paying out in the 3-year period was no reason for refusing him an opportunity. The Supreme Court reversed the decisions of the United States district judges who had held that way. So the farmer can be given an opportunity to have the 3-year moratorium and pay out. We want the time extended. It seems to me the act should be made permanent, but all we ask is a 4-year extension.

The bill also provides that the conciliation commissioners shall be appointed for a 4-year period, instead of for 1 year at a time, as is the case under the present law. The bill also cuts down the number of conciliation commissioners, so that the act will not be so expensive to administer.

I think perhaps that explanation is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 5, after the words "is amended", to insert "to read", so as to read:

That section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," as amended, is amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "referees", to strike out "One such commissioner" and insert "One or more such commissioners"; in line 4, after the word "held", to strike out "In case any such division or city now has a residential referee and a conciliation commissioner is not deemed necessary, then the referee, in addition to his other duties, shall have all the powers and perform all the duties of the conciliation commissioner and shall receive the same compensation for the performance of such duties"; in line 11, after the word "years", to insert "and shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified"; and in line 21, after the word "specify" and the comma, to insert "including the holding of hearings", so as to read:

SEC. 75. (a) Every United States district court of bankruptcy shall appoint referees to be known as conciliation commissioners, who need not be lawyers, but must otherwise have the qualifications of referees. One or more such commissioners shall be appointed for each division or for the territory served by the city where terms of court are held.

A conciliation commissioner shall have a term of office for 4 years and shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified but may be removed by the court for cause. He must be a resident of the division or the territory served by the city where terms of court are held. He must be familiar with agricultural conditions and must not have been or be engaged in the farm mortgage, banking, or farm-financing business. The court, if it deems it advisable, may appoint some suitable person as supervising conciliation commissioner in each judicial district who shall have such supervising conciliation functions as the court may by order specify, including the holding of hearings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, after the word "may" and the comma, to insert "at any time prior to March 4, 1944"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "schedules", to insert "in triplicate"; in line 4, after the word "court", to insert "or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk"; and in line 11, after the word "property" and the comma, to insert "including the sale of any of the farmer-debtor's property under the terms of any deed of trust", so as to read:

(b) A farmer-debtor who is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature may, at any time prior to March 4, 1944, file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. The petition of the farmer-debtor shall be accompanied by his schedules in triplicate and shall be filed with the clerk of the court, but the conciliation commissioner may receive same and promptly transmit it to the clerk for filing. The filing of the petition with the clerk of court or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk shall be notice to all persons and officials and to all Federal and State courts. It shall automatically stay all judicial or official proceedings in all Federal and State courts and shall stay all levies, executions, actions, or proceedings under the direction of any official or person against the farmer-debtor or any of his property, including the sale of any of the farmer-debtor's property under the terms of any deed of trust.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to insert "including any Federal corporation or Federal agency", so as to read:

The provisions of this section shall apply to all judicial or official proceedings in any court or under the direction of any official, and shall apply to all creditors, public or private, including any Federal corporation or Federal agency, and to all of the farmer-debtor's property, wherever located: Provided, That the debts having priority of payment under title 11, chapter 7, section 104, of the United States Code, for bankrupt estates, shall have priority of payment, in the same order as set forth in said section 104, under the provisions of this section, in any distribution, assignment, composition, or settlement herein provided for: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall affect the allowance and exemptions of farmer-debtors as are provided for bankrupts under title 11, chapter 3, section 24, of the United States Code. All such allowances and exemptions shall be set aside for the use of the farmer-debtor in the manner provided for bankrupts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 25, after the word "within", to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty", so as to read:

Such appraisers shall appraise all of the property of the farmer-debtor, wherever located, at its then fair and reasonable market value. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects with rights of objections, exceptions, and appeals, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in proceedings under this section, either party may file objections, exceptions, and take appeals within 30 days from the date that the conciliation commissioner approves the appraisal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 21, to insert "or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk", so as to read:

(d) The filing of the petition with the clerk of court, or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk, shall immediately subject the farmer-debtor and all his property, including contracts for purchase, contracts for deed, or conditional-sales contracts, the right or the equity of redemption or where a trust deed has been given as security, or any equity or any right in any such property, wherever located, to the exclusive and sole jurisdiction of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "shall", to strike out "stay" and insert "enter an order continuing the stay of"; in line 5, after the word "property", to insert "of which he retains possession"; in line 10, after the word "rental", to insert "annually or"; in line 10, after the word "semiannually", to insert "as the court may direct"; in line 11, after the words "part of the", to insert "unexempt"; after line 13, to insert "granting the petition for possession and"; and, at the beginning of line 15, to insert "for 3 years"; so as to read:

(e) When the conditions set forth in this section have been complied with, the court shall enter an order continuing the stay of all judicial or official proceedings in any court, or under the direction of any official, against the farmer-debtor or any of his property of which he retains possession, for a period of 3 years. During such 3 years the farmer-debtor shall be permitted to retain possession of all or any part of his property, in the custody and under the supervision and control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually or semiannually as the court may direct for that part of the unexempt property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental shall be made within 1 year of the date of the order granting the petition for possession and staying proceedings for 3 years, the amount and kind of such rental to be the usual customary rental in the community where the property is located, based upon the rental value, net income, and earning capacity of the property. The provisions of this subsection are mandatory and not discretionary with the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 22, after the word "taxes", and the comma, to insert "insurance,"; and in line 23, after the word "property" and the comma, to insert "conciliation commissioner's fees", so as to read:

Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for the payment of taxes, insurance, and upkeep of the property, conciliation commissioner's fees, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, and applied on their claims, as their interests may appear. The court, in its discretion, if it deems it necessary to protect the creditors from loss by the estate, or to conserve the security, may order sold any unexempt perishable property of the farmer-debtor, such as fruits, vegetables, and the products of poultry, dairy and livestock, or any unexempt personal property not reasonably necessary for the farming operations of the farmer-debtor. The court may, in addition to the rental, require payments on the principal due and owing by the farmer-debtor to the secured or unsecured creditors in accordance with the provisions of this act, and may require such payments to be made quarterly, semi-annually, or annually, not inconsistent with the protection of the rights of the creditors and the farmer-debtor's ability to pay, with a view of his financial rehabilitation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 14, to insert:

Any farmer who filed a petition under section 75 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, as amended, and in whose case a bankruptcy court has, under subsection (s) thereof, granted a stay of proceedings, may, if the period for which such stay was granted has expired or is about to expire, make application to such court for an extension of such stay. If the court finds that such farmer has substantially complied with the provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (s) of section 75 of such act, as amended, during the period of such 3-year stay then the court may extend the period of such stay from year to year not to exceed 2 years additional stay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 3, after the word "unsecured" to insert: "If a composition or extension of time, or both, has been approved by the court, then the court may dismiss the petition but not otherwise", so as to read:

(g) Upon notice previously given to the farmer-debtor and to all secured and unsecured creditors by the conciliation commissioner, the farmer-debtor or any creditor, at the first or any subsequent meeting of the creditors, may offer terms of composition or extension or both. The proposal thus made shall be made the basis of negotiation and it shall be the duty of the conciliation commissioner to preside and to endeavor to bring about a composition or extension of time or both in a manner that will be just and equitable to all the creditors and to the farmer-debtor. The composition shall not be less nor more than the value of the property as ascertained or established under provisions of this section; but nothing herein shall prevent the reduction of the future rate of interest on all debts of the farmer-debtor, whether secured or unsecured. If a composition or extension of time, or both, has been approved by the court, then the court may dismiss the petition but not otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, after the word "Act," insert: "The commissioner shall enclose with the notice a summary of the inventory, a brief statement of the farmer's indebtedness as shown by the schedules, and a list of the names and addresses of the secured and unsecured creditors, with the amounts owing to each as shown by the schedules."; on page 12, at the beginning of line 14, to strike out "$35" and insert "$50"; and in the same line, after the words "paid out of", to insert "the rental or", so as to read:

(h) The conciliation commissioner shall promptly call the first meeting of creditors. He shall give notice of the date and place of such meeting to the farmer-debtor and to all creditors, secured or unsecured, as provided for in this act. The commissioner shall enclose with the notice a summary of the inventory, a brief statement of the farmer's indebtedness as shown by the schedules, and a list of the names and addresses of the secured and unsecured creditors, with the amounts owing to each as shown by the schedules. At the first or subsequent meeting of the creditors the farmer-debtor may be examined, and the creditors may appoint a committee to submit to the conciliation commissioner a supplementary inventory of the farmer-debtor's estate. There shall be prepared by, or under the supervision of, the conciliation commissioner a final inventory of the farmer-debtor's estate. In the preparation of such inventory the commissioner shall give due consideration to the schedules filed by the farmer-debtor and to any supplementary inventory filed by the committee of the creditors.

(i) The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services, a fee of $25 for each case submitted to him, and when docketed, to be paid out of the Treasury. He shall receive such additional fees for his services as may be allowed by the court, not to exceed $50 in any one case, to be paid out of the rental or the bankrupt's estate. The supervising conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services a per diem allowance to be fixed by the court in an amount not in excess of $8 per day, together with subsistence and traveling expenses, in accordance with the law applicable to officers of the Department of Justice. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid out of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 11, after the word "section", to insert:

A farmer-debtor may, upon motion, transfer his petition from section 75 to proceedings under the general bankruptcy provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, after the word "section", to insert:

If the court in its discretion deems it best it may continue the present conciliation commissioner or referee in cases pending when this amendment becomes effective.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota whether or not there was any disagreement in the committee as to the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, but I understand there was not. The bill was considered first by a subcommittee, which reported to the full committee, and then the bill was reported from the full committee by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator whether or not the Department recommends the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. As I remember, there was no objection from the Department in regard to any of these amendments. The Department approved the bill when it was first introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 1935) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 75. (a) Every United States district court of bankruptcy shall appoint referees to be known as conciliation commissioners, who need not be lawyers, but must otherwise have the qualifications of referees. One or more such commissioners shall be appointed for each division or for the territory served by the city where terms of court are held.

"A conciliation commissioner shall have a term of office for 4 years and shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified but may be removed by the court for cause. He must be a resident of the division or the territory served by the city where terms of court are held. He must be familiar with agricultural conditions and must not have been or be engaged in the farm mortgage, banking, or farm-financing business. The court, if it deems it advisable, may appoint some suitable person as supervising conciliation commissioner in each judicial district who shall have such supervising conciliation functions as the court may by order specify, including the holding of hearings.

"(b) A farmer-debtor who is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature may, at any time prior to March 4, 1944, file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. The petition of the farmer-debtor shall be accompanied by his schedules in triplicate and shall be filed with the clerk of the court, but the conciliation commissioner may receive same and promptly transmit it to the clerk for filing. The filing of the petition with the clerk of court or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk shall be notice to all persons and officials and to all Federal and State courts. It shall automatically stay all judicial or official proceedings in all Federal and State courts and shall stay all levies, executions, actions, or proceedings under the direction of any official or person against the farmer-debtor or any of his property, including the sale of any of the farmer-debtor's property under the terms of any deed of trust.

"The provisions of this section shall apply to all judicial or official proceedings in any court or under the direction of any official, and shall apply to all creditors, public or private, including any Federal corporation or Federal agency, and to all of the farmer-debtor's property, wherever located: Provided, That the debts having priority of payment under title 11, chapter 7, section 104, of the United States Code, for bankrupt estates, shall have priority of payment, in the same order as set forth in said section 104, under the provisions of this section, in any distribution, assignment, composition, or settlement herein provided for: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall affect the allowance and exemptions of farmer-debtors as are provided for bankrupts under title 11, chapter 3, section 24, of the United States Code. All such allowances and exemptions shall be set aside for the use of the farmer-debtor in the manner provided for bankrupts.

"Such farmer-debtor may, at the time of filing his petition or at the time of the first or subsequent hearings, petition the court that all of his property, wherever located, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, be appraised, and that his unencumbered exemptions, and unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by State law, be set aside to him, and that he be allowed to retain possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property, including his encumbered exemptions, under the terms and conditions set forth in this section. Upon such a request being made, the conciliation commissioner, under the jurisdiction of the court, shall designate and appoint appraisers, as provided for in this act.

"Such appraisers shall appraise all of the property of the farmer-debtor, wherever located, at its then fair and reasonable market value. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects with rights of objections, exceptions, and appeals, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in proceedings under this section, either party may file objections, exceptions, and take appeals within 30 days from the date that the conciliation commissioner approves the appraisal.

"(c) After the value of the farmer-debtor's property shall have been fixed by the appraisal herein provided, the conciliation commissioner shall issue an order setting aside to such farmer-debtor his unencumbered exemptions, and his unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by the State law. He shall further order that the possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the farmer-debtor's property shall remain in the farmer-debtor, according with the request in the petition, subject, however, to all existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances. All such existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall remain in full force and effect, and the property, up to the value judicially ascertained or determined under the provisions of this section, covered by such mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances, shall be subject to the payment of the claims of the secured creditors as their interests may appear.

"(d) The filing of the petition with the clerk of court, or the leaving of it with the conciliation commissioner for filing with the clerk, shall immediately subject the farmer-debtor and all his property, including contracts for purchase, contracts for deed, or conditional-sales contracts, the right or the equity of redemption or where a trust deed has been given as security, or any equity or any right in any such property, wherever located, to the exclusive and sole jurisdiction of the court.

"In all cases where, at the time of filing the petition, the period of redemption has not or had not expired, or where the right under a deed of trust has not or had not become absolute, or where the sale has not or had not been confirmed, or where deed had not been delivered, the period of redemption shall be extended or the confirmation of sale withheld for the period necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section. The words 'period of redemption' wherever they occur in this section shall include any State moratorium, whether established by legislative enactment or executive proclamation, or where the period of redemption has been extended by a judicial decree.

"In proceedings under this section, except as otherwise provided herein, the jurisdiction and powers of the courts, the title, powers, and duties of its officers, the duties of the farmer-debtor, and the rights and liabilities of all creditors, and of all persons with respect to the property of the farmer-debtor and the jurisdiction of the appellate courts, shall be the same as if a decree of adjudication had been entered under other provisions of this act.

"(e) When the conditions set forth in this section have been complied with, the court shall enter an order continuing the stay of all judicial or official proceedings in any court, or under the direction of any official, against the farmer-debtor or any of his property of which he retains possession, for a period of 3 years. During such 3 years the farmer-debtor shall be permitted to retain possession of all or any part of his property, in the custody and under the supervision and control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually or semiannually as the court may direct for that part of the unexempt property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental shall be made within 1 year of the date of the order granting the petition for possession and staying proceedings for 3 years, the amount and kind of such rental to be the usual customary rental in the community where the property is located, based upon the rental value, net income, and earning capacity of the property. The provisions of this subsection are mandatory and not discretionary with the court.

"Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for the payment of taxes, insurance, and upkeep of the property, conciliation commissioner's fees, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, and applied on their claims, as their interests may appear. The court, in its discretion, if it deems it necessary to protect the creditors from loss by the estate, or to conserve the security, may order sold any unexempt perishable property of the farmer-debtor, such as fruits, vegetables, and the products of poultry, dairy, and livestock, or any unexempt personal property not reasonably necessary for the farming operations of the farmer-debtor. The court may, in addition to the rental, require payments on the principal due and owing by the farmer-debtor to the secured or unsecured creditors in accordance with the provisions of this act, and may require such payments to be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, not inconsistent with the protection of the rights of the creditors and the farmer-debtor's ability to pay, with a view of his financial rehabilitation.

"(f) At the end of 3 years, or prior thereto, if he so desires, the farmer-debtor may pay into court the amount of the appraised value of the property of which he retains possession, including the amount of encumbrances on his exemptions, up to the amount of the appraised value, less any amount paid on principal: Provided, That upon request of any secured or unsecured creditor, or upon request of the farmer-debtor, the court shall cause a reappraisal of the farmer-debtor's property, or in its discretion set a date for hearing, and after such hearing, fix the value of the property, in accordance with the evidence submitted: Provided, however, That upon request in writing by any creditor the court shall proceed to ascertain the value of the property by trial the same as in condemnation proceedings.

"The farmer-debtor shall then have 90 days within which to pay the value so determined by the court, together with 5 percent per annum interest, into court, less any payments made on the principal, for distribution to all secured and unsecured creditors as their interests may appear. He may, at the same time, apply for his discharge as provided for in this act. Thereupon the court shall by an order turn over full and complete possession and title of such property, free and clear of any and all encumbrances, to the farmer-debtor and grant his discharge.

"Any farmer who filed a petition under section 75 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, as amended, and in whose case a bankruptcy court has, under subsection (s) thereof, granted a stay of proceedings may, if the period for which such stay was granted has expired or is about to expire, make application to such court for an extension of such stay. If the court finds that such farmer has substantially complied with the provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (s) of section 75 of such act, as amended, during the period of such 3-year stay, then the court may extend the period of such stay from year to year not to exceed 2 years' additional stay.

"If, however, the farmer-debtor at any time fails to comply with the provisions of this section, or with any lawful orders of the court made pursuant to this section, or is unable to refinance himself within 3 years, the court may then order the appointment of a trustee, and order the property sold or otherwise disposed of as otherwise provided for in bankruptcy proceedings in this act. But except as otherwise herein provided, the court shall not dismiss the proceeding without complete liquidation and discharge of the farmer-debtor.

"(g) Upon notice previously given to the farmer-debtor and to all secured and unsecured creditors by the conciliation commissioner, the farmer-debtor or any creditor, at the first or any subsequent meeting of the creditors, may offer terms of composition or extension, or both. The proposal thus made shall be made the basis of negotiation and it shall be the duty of the conciliation commissioner to preside and to endeavor to bring about a composition or extension of time, or both, in a manner that will be just and equitable to all the creditors and to the farmer-debtor. The composition shall not be less nor more than the value of the property as ascertained or established under provisions of this section, but nothing herein shall prevent the reduction of the future rate of interest on all debts of the farmer-debtor, whether secured or unsecured. If a composition or extension of time, or both, has been approved by the court, then the court may dismiss the petition, but not otherwise.

"When a composition or extension proposal has been accepted in writing, by the farmer-debtor and by a majority in number of all the creditors whose claims have been allowed, including secured creditors whose claims are affected, which number shall represent a majority and amount of such claims, then the court shall confirm the proposal if satisfied that it includes an equitable and feasible method of liquidation for secured creditors and of financial rehabilitation for the farmer-debtor and is for the best interest of all the creditors. And the court shall then dismiss the petition but not otherwise.

"(h) The conciliation commissioner shall promptly call the first meeting of creditors. He shall give notice of the date and place of such meeting to the farmer-debtor and to all creditors, secured or unsecured, as provided for in this act. The commissioner shall enclose with the notice a summary of the inventory, a brief statement of the farmer's indebtedness as shown by the schedules, and a list of the names and addresses of the secured and unsecured creditors, with the amounts owing to each as shown by the schedules. At the first or subsequent meeting of the creditors the farmer-debtor may be examined, and the creditors may appoint a committee to submit to the conciliation commissioner a supplementary inventory of the farmer-debtor's estate. There shall be prepared by, or under the supervision of, the conciliation commissioner a final inventory of the farmer-debtor's estate. In the preparation of such inventory the commissioner shall give due consideration to the schedules filed by the farmer-debtor and to any supplementary inventory filed by the committee of the creditors.

"(i) The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services a fee of $25 for each case submitted to him, and when docketed, to be paid out of the Treasury. He shall receive such additional fees for his services as may be allowed by the court, not to exceed $50 in any one case, to be paid out of the rental or the bankrupt's estate. The supervising conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services a per diem allowance to be fixed by the court in an amount not in excess of $8 per day, together with subsistence and traveling expenses, in accordance with the law applicable to officers of the Department of Justice. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid out of the Treasury.

"The conciliation commissioner may accept and avail himself of office space, equipment, and assistance furnished him by other Federal officials, or by any State, county, or public official. He shall be entitled to transmit in the mails, free of postage, under cover of a penalty envelope, all matters which relate exclusively to the business of the courts, including notices to creditors.

"(j) For the purposes of this section, section 4 (b), and section 74, the term 'farmer-debtor' includes not only an individual who is primarily bona fide personally engaged in producing products of the soil, but also any individual who is primarily bona fide personally engaged in dairy farming, the production of poultry or livestock, or the production of poultry products or livestock products in their unmanufactured state, or the principal part of whose income is derived from any one or more of the foregoing operations, and includes the personal representative of a deceased farmer-debtor; and a farmer-debtor shall be deemed a resident of any country in which such operations occur. The word 'act' wherever it occurs in this section shall mean the General Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and the word 'section' means section 75 of the act as herein amended.

"(k) The provisions of this section shall be held to apply also to partnerships, common, entirety, joint, community ownerships, or to farming corporations where at least 65 percent of the stock is owned by actual farmer-debtors, and any such parties may join in one petition. It shall also apply to all cases now pending in any Federal or State court; and all cases that have been dismissed by any conciliation commissioner, referee, or court shall be promptly reinstated without any additional filing fees or charges: Provided, That the farmer-debtor at the time of his application for reinstatement has not been completely divested of all his interest or equity in or title to or in any or all of his property. Any farmer-debtor who has filed under the General Bankruptcy Act may take advantage of this section upon written request to the court; and a previous discharge of the farmer-debtor under any other section of this act shall not be ground for denying him the benefits of this section. A farmer-debtor may, upon motion, transfer his petition from section 75 to proceedings under the general bankruptcy provisions of this act.

"(l) Upon filing of any petition by a farmer-debtor under this section there shall be paid a fee of $10, to be transmitted to the clerk of the court and covered into the Treasury. No additional fees or cost of administration or supervision of any kind shall be charged to, or exacted from, the farmer-debtor, but all such additional filing fees or cost of administration or supervision shall be charged against the bankrupt's estate.

"(m) The Supreme Court is authorized to make such general orders as it finds necessary properly to govern the administration of the office of conciliation commissioner and proceedings under this section. Until such general orders are made the district courts shall follow the general orders previously made for procedure under this section. In regard to procedure the provisions of the General Bankruptcy Act shall apply as far as they are applicable to this section. If the court in its discretion deems it best it may continue the present conciliation commissioner or referee in cases pending when this amendment becomes effective."

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN INDIAN TRIBES FROM WHEELER-HOWARD ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2103) to repeal the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, and the act of June 15, 1935, supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"None of the provisions of this act shall apply to (1) any Indian tribe on the Standing Rock Reservation located in the States of North and South Dakota; (2) the Pine Ridge Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (3) the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe of Indians of the State of South Dakota; (4) the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians, of the Rosebud Agency of the State of South Dakota; (5) any Indian on any reservation or any Indian tribe or group, located in the State of Nevada; (6) the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians located in the State of North Carolina; (7) any Indian tribe, band, or group, located in the State of California; (8) any Indian or Indian tribe on the Colorado River Indian Reservation of the State of Arizona; or (9) the Navaho tribe located in the State of New Mexico."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this proposes to amend the so-called Wheeler-Howard Act, which was sponsored by the Indian Bureau of the Department of the Interior, and was designed to set up certain regulations under which the Indians should conduct their reservations. It practically puts the Indians back into the condition which prevailed under their old tribal forms of government which were in vogue a generation or two ago. There has been a great deal of objection to the law. The Indians on several reservations, including the ones proposed by the bill to be excepted, have voted on the question several times, some of them three or four times. On the Standing Rock Reservation in North and South Dakota the Indians have had the question put up to them three times, and last fall a fourth time, and it was voted down the fourth time. The Indians in question do not want to be bothered with it any more; they want to be exempted.

The Indians on some of the reservations in South Dakota and some in the Southwest, in which the Senator from New Mexico is interested, have asked to be exempted. All the bill seeks to do is to exempt certain tribes from the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act. Personally, I think the whole act should be repealed, by all odds, but we have not been able to do that up to date. I can see no objection, however, to exempting the particular reservations which have asked to be exempted and which are very much interested in making sure that they shall not be brought under the operations of the present law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the report of the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Harold Ickes, after giving a number of reasons for his position, made the statement:

For the foregoing reasons, I recommend that S. 626 be not enacted.

Apparently the Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of such matters, is not in favor of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Department is very strongly in favor of the present law, of course; that is perfectly true, but from the testimony we have had before the committee the Indians are not satisfied with it. I do not think they are satisfied with it at any place.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, of course, I only speak for the Navajo Indians in my State, but the Navajo Indians of New Mexico are against the Wheeler-Howard Act. They have, in accordance with the methods provided by the law, taken action regarding the Wheeler-Howard Act and have decided against it.

Not only that, but since the first election was held by Indians with reference to the Wheeler-Howard Act—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. All this bill proposes to do is merely to permit certain tribes of Indians, including the Navajos, to be exempted from the terms of the so-called Wheeler-Howard Act.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; for the reason that, notwithstanding the Indians have voted against the Wheeler-Howard Act, attempts are being made by the Indian Bureau to carry it out. The Indians do not want the law and feel that they should be able to handle their own affairs.

Since the first election the Navajo Tribe in New Mexico have had other elections which have indicated that they are now more overwhelmingly against the Wheeler-Howard Act than they previously were.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. KING. A committee has been appointed by the Department of Justice for the consideration of a number of so-called Indian bills, and a committee of the Senate is making some examination of several bills relating to Indian matters which have been brought to the attention of Congress. That committee will meet within a short time and make a report, I hope, so that the bills pending may be speedily acted upon. I should be glad, without making any formal objection, if the Senator will not press action on the pending bill today, so that when the committee meets in a few days it may determine what course to pursue in respect to all these bills.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I may say to the Senator from Utah that the only reason this bill is being pressed at this particular time is that the Indians actually need relief from the Congress.

The only place they can get any relief whatsoever is from the Congress of the United States. It is impossible for a poor Indian in my State or in the Senator's State or in any other State to get any relief or help whatsoever from the Department in Washington. I know, so far as New Mexico is concerned, that the Navaho Indians do not want to be subject to the Wheeler-Howard Act. They have expressed their opinion by the method provided by law. They are against it, and want to continue to conduct their affairs in their own way.

What the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] said a little while ago, to the effect that naturally the Bureau of Indian Affairs would want the Indians to continue under the Wheeler-Howard Act, is correct, because it is Washington that is now dominating the affairs of the Indians. We who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs know that the conditions are very pathetic. So the Indians are asking the only proper body that can give any relief to the Indians whatsoever to afford such relief.

The situation, so far as the Indians are concerned, is that under the Wheeler-Howard Act they would be placed back in the condition which existed practically 400 years ago. The Indians, I may say, in some respects are not different from Senators or other Americans. I happen to represent quite a number of Indians. They do not vote in my State; I am not interested in their vote, but I am interested in their welfare; and they have put the proposition up to me exactly as any other citizen would do. The Indians want to be left alone by the Bureau at Washington; they want to work out their own salvation, as do the white men of Kentucky, the white men of Virginia, and the white men of New Mexico. They want to be left alone and to be allowed to solve their own problems.

I have had Indians in my State come to me and, through an interpreter, place before me their problem as a white man would do. They say: "Senator, I am an Indian; I cannot speak English, and I cannot speak the other language of New Mexico"—which is Spanish. "I am an Indian, but I belong to this country. I have worked very hard. I freeze in the winter; I melt in the summer. I have 100 cows. The Indian Bureau says I can only have 10 cows. If I work hard, if I freeze in winter, if I melt in summer, why can I not have a hundred cows like the white man can have?" Is not that what we are all working for? Is not that an American ambition? Is not that an American way of doing good?

The trouble with the Indian right now is too much Washington. All this bill provides for is that those Indians who do not want to come in under the Wheeler-Howard Act, and who have voted on it according to the law, may be exempted from having the Indian Bureau in Washington try to enforce that law against them. Would the white men in Kentucky stand for such a law? Would they stand for it in Tennessee? Would they stand for it in Utah? No; let us treat the Indians as human beings and as part of American institutions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to say the Senator has converted me entirely.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is not easily converted, and so, obviously, the speech of the Senator from New Mexico is a very persuasive one; but, in view of the fact that we have asked to have go over all so-called Indian bills on the calendar, I shall ask that this bill go over.

I should like, however, to make one observation in reply to my friend from New Mexico. I am not satisfied, I will say very frankly, with the activities of the Indian Bureau. A few years ago, as the Senator will recall, an investigation was conducted of the Indian Bureau. We found large and wasteful expenditures, and it was determined that there should be a reduction in the expenditures of the Indian Bureau and changes of some of its practices.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I interrupt the Senator at that particular point—

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Very well.

Mr. KING. But since then the expenditures have been increased until, as I now recall, they are approximately $37,000,000 per annum, not including some gratuities. I have not been satisfied with the administration of the present organization in the Interior Department that controls the Indians. The expenditures have increased, the number of employees has increased, and the personnel is entirely too large. My information is that the Indians have not profited by some of the activities of the present Indian Bureau.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I say to the Senator from Utah that I am for the Indian.

Mr. KING. So am I.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am for the Indian because he is an American, and I know that the Indian will never get a square deal except from one body, and that is from the Congress of the United States. The expenses of the Indian Bureau have gone up from $24,000,000 in 1933 to approximately $37,000,000 this year, but not for the Indians. In the Navajo Reservation, in my State, to which I have referred, up to 1937 the Indian Bureau spent $15,000,000, but not for the Indians.

They put up a $2,000,000 capitol at Window Rock, right across the line from the State of New Mexico, where they built many houses equipped with radios and furnished with all of the modern equipment that makes for comfort, but not for the Indian. They provided heat, but not for the Indian. They provided jobs, but not for the Indian. Out of 1,200 employees of the Indian Office in the Navajo Reservation there were not 100 Indians, and the ones who were working there were those who were handling the menial jobs. The rest of the employees were long-haired boys from New Jersey and New York and elsewhere whom Mr. Collier sent over there. I am willing that Congress work for the Indian, but not for the Indian Office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the circumstances that the Senator from New Mexico has just related, will he be good enough to come before the Appropriations Committee when the Interior Department appropriation bill is considered? I should like to give him a special invitation to be present at that time, and I think he can be of service.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have been hoping that the day may come when I shall belong to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations handling the Interior Department bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want the Senator to come before that subcommittee this time.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with most of what my friend from New Mexico has said; and I sympathize with the Indians. Let me say that for years I was a volunteer attorney for the Indians in my State. I defended them, tried their lawsuits, and never obtained a penny from them, because I was interested in the preservation of the Indians. I have been dissatisfied with the present administration of their affairs, and I have condemned it. I hope the investigation which is being made will furnish us information which will enable us to effect some radical changes in the Indian Office.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to the fact that this is an Indian bill, and has asked, together with other Indian bills, that it go over. Are all the Indian bills on the calendar of the same type?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why should one bill go over because others have gone over? Why can we not dispose of a bill of this sort on its own merits?

Mr. KING. Because some legal questions are involved, and we have asked that all of them go over, and I should not feel like discriminating. I ask that this bill go over.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I interrupt the Senator for just one moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am willing to comply with the wishes of the Senator from Utah. His request is perfectly satisfactory; but what I want to impress upon the Senator from Utah is this: If he desires the bill to go over, it is perfectly satisfactory to me; but I want the Senator from Utah to keep in mind the fact that if the Indian is to get relief of any kind it will have to be done by Congress, and not by the Bureau in Washington.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator is a member of the Indian Affairs Committee, is he not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am.

Mr. KING. I am not, though I have given some attention to the work of the committee and to the activities of the Indian Bureau. Several years ago I joined in an investigation of some of the activities of the Indian Bureau. I sincerely hope the Senator from New Mexico will bring his splendid ability to bear in securing legislation which will remedy some of the evils complained of and secure legislation which will be advantageous to the Indians.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Indian Affairs Committee, after extensive hearings, has reported a piece of legislation which it feels will bring relief to the Indians. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to some of the things the Indian Affairs Committee found out.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I do not wish to make the point until the Senator shall have concluded; but then I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator. I shall not delay the Senate very long.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which tried to do something for the Indian:

A summary of the evidence in various forms brought to the attention of your committee seems to reveal the following—

That is the committee which the Senator says should suggest legislation for the benefit of the Indians—

1. Four campaigns have been staged on the reservations—

That is, the reservations which are referred to in this bill—

by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, relative to the said act, viz: (a) Campaign to secure Indian approval of the pending bill in 1934; (b) campaign to secure Indian acceptance of the act itself, in elections held for that purpose; (c) campaign to secure Indian acceptance of a constitution in elections held for that purpose; (d) campaign to secure Indian acceptance of a charter in the elections held in those places where both the act and the constitution had been accepted.

2. Witnesses supporting the bills for repeal of the act were unanimous in their statements that unjustifiable amounts of Federal appropriations for the Indian Bureau were used to conduct these four campaigns.

In my particular State over 800 automobiles and over 750 trucks that belong to the Indian Bureau, and are used by that Bureau, were used against the poor, ignorant Navahos in order to try to prevail; and, notwithstanding that fact, they said "No." Now, should Congress say "Yes" because the Indian Office in Washington says, "What we say is good for you, Mr. Indian, notwithstanding that under a law passed by Congress, under which the Indian was to accept or reject our proposal, he has said 'No.'?"

Every Indian agent, every Indian employee in the Navaho Reservation, did his utmost to prevail against what was ultimately decided by the Indians. Some of the Indians had to borrow gasoline to go out among their people. I know one particular Indian, a missionary Navaho Indian by the name of Jake Morgan, at Farmington, who sometimes had to borrow 50 cents to buy gasoline so that he could go among his people. They cleaned up the Indian Office and the Indians said "No." What other expression can these poor people have in order to inform Congress as to what their desires may be?

I thank the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I ask permission to proceed for a few moments on the question now being discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senate is now acting under an assumed rule which in reality does not exist. The rules of this body provide for a method of handling the business of the Senate. The method is that bills shall be referred to standing committees and considered by such committees, and such bills as are favored shall be reported by the committees, whereupon they take their places upon the calendar and are considered by the Senate according to the rules of the Senate.

We are now operating under a new and special practice, as follows: A Member of the Senate, the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has taken it upon himself to refer all Indian bills to the Department of Justice, presumably for a study and a report. This practice has persisted now for a year, and for a year no bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, so far as I remember, has been favorably considered by the Senate. It is presumed that these bills, when referred to the Department of Justice, are, by the Attorney General, referred to some appointee in such Department. If so, he is not an elected official. He is some appointee in the Department of Justice occupying an office or room somewhere in that gigantic building down on Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues. Who that official is I do not know. The Senate does not know. If we ever receive a report—we have waited a year for a report and have had none—it will be a report of some official appointed probably from some State which contains no Indians, and probably from some State that has no sympathy with the problems of the Indians; and when that report comes before this body, if it ever does, I ask the Senate, What credence and what importance should we give it?

I have seen no report, and as things are now going I have no hope of ever seeing such a report. I have been promised from time to time—and the Senate has been promised from time to time—that "within the next few days, certainly within a week or two," a report would be forthcoming; but no report has been forthcoming, and we now have no report.

I do not complain. The distinguished Senator from Utah is acting within his prerogatives in holding up these bills during times when the Senate is considering bills on the calendar by unanimous consent. I concede that his motives are of the highest. I know that Indian bills, as well as other bills, have been enacted in the past by the Congress without, perhaps, the consideration which their importance justified.

Mr. President, again stating that I have no objection to the procedure which has been taken, because it is within the purview of any Senator to hold up a bill, and accepting the statement made by the distinguished senior Senator from Utah today that there will be a report in the near future, I shall be patient a little while longer; but before long, if the report is not forthcoming, the time will come when I shall ask the Senate to take action upon these bills of great importance to many of the citizens of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very much interested in these bills, because there are Indians in my State, and they have claims against the Government. What I have done is merely to ask the Department, at their request, to furnish us adequate information so that the Indians may be protected and the interests of the Government not overlooked.

There are now claims pending against the Government amounting to over three billion and a half dollars, I am advised by various departments. I had hoped we could get adequate information so that these bills could all be disposed of promptly, that all the facts might be presented in a report so that there would be no necessity of prolonging discussion in the Senate, but that we could take up the meritorious cases and dispose of them immediately. I suggested a hearing, and Mr. Grorud suggested that he desired a hearing early in February. I was ready to have the hearing immediately, and I stated to Mr. Grorud that that would be satisfactory, and I am sure the report will be made early in February and I shall be glad if it is made before that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 367) to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CANAL ZONE CODE

The bill (H. R. 5584) to amend the Canal Zone Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals. Certain additional statements have been furnished by the Post Office Department which were not filed before the report on the bill was submitted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 174) for an investigation of negotiations by American citizens with the Mexican Government concerning certain oil sales, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 177) authorizing an investigation of negotiations by American citizens or officials with the Mexican Government concerning certain oil sales, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO RECESS APPOINTEES

The bill (S. 2773) to authorize the payment of compensation to recess appointees in certain cases, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DANAHER subsequently said: Mr. President, may I ask whoever objected to order of business 1124, Senate bill 2773, to state the ground of his objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the bill, because I did not see anyone in the Chamber to sponsor the bill, and I wanted a statement made with respect to it. I shall be very happy to withdraw my objection if the Senator is prepared to disclose the nature of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. DANAHER. Perhaps it had better go over, although I can explain it to the Senate, I am sure. The bill ought to be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

KING'S CANYON NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the King's Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], when this bill was reached at the last call of the calendar, had intended to make a statement about it, but he was presiding at the time and could not do so. He has asked me to say for him now that he has been called from the Chamber today on important business and is not able to be present, but that when there is another call of the calendar he contemplates making a statement about the matter which will probably clear up the situation with respect to the bill. For this reason I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) providing for an investigation of the social, economic, and industrial conditions in Puerto Rico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have the nature of the concurrent resolution disclosed before we act on it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was requested to offer this measure at the last session of Congress. There has been a change in the administration in Puerto Rico. Admiral Leahy, who is now the Governor, is in Washington, and I suggested to him a few days ago that before his departure he confer with the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, which has jurisdiction of the subject, and give us his views respecting matters in Puerto Rico, which may dispense with the necessity of adopting this concurrent resolution. I therefore ask that the concurrent resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the concurrent resolution will be passed over.

RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 168) providing for an investigation of the immigration of aliens into the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 282) to provide that State employees employed in connection with programs carried on with the assistance of the Federal Government be selected in accordance with a nonpolitical civil-service plan was announced as next in order.

Mr. MINTON. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7050) for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1450) to provide funds for cooperation with school district No. 13, Froid, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2523) to provide for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public-school facilities at McCurtain, Okla., Haskell County, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1671) to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over! Over!

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I think this bill should be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was so voted at the regular meeting on Monday.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, has the Senator from Texas been consulted about the matter?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, less than 15 minutes ago I discussed the matter with the Senator from Texas. He intended to make the motion but has been called from the Chamber for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RULES FOR THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR PUERTO RICO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4532) to make effective in the District Court of the United States for Puerto Rico rules promulgated by the Supreme Court of the United States, governing pleading, practice, and procedure in the district courts of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, after line 6, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective March 1, 1940.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section be inserted in the act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 951), as amended, immediately following section 49 thereof, to read as follows:

"49a. That the rules heretofore or hereafter promulgated and made effective by the Supreme Court of the United States under authority of the act approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1064; U. S. C., title 28, secs. 723b, 723c), or under authority of any other statute, regulating the forms of process, writs and motions, and the pleadings, practice, and procedure, in actions of a civil nature in the district courts of the United States, and regulating appeals therefrom, shall apply to the District Court of the United States for Puerto Rico and to appeals therefrom."

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective March 1, 1940.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill merely makes applicable to the Federal court in Puerto Rico the rules which were made applicable by act of Congress recently to the various Federal courts throughout the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7293) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interests in land acquired by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. In the absence of an explanation, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILMOT NATIONAL GUARD TARGET RANGE, ARIZONA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2122) to authorize the sale of the Wilmot National Guard target range, Arizona, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "as" and to insert the word "at," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public sale, after such advertisement and under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Wilmot National Guard target range, consisting of sections 1 and 12, township 15 south, range 14 east, Gila and Salt River base and meridian, Arizona, and to utilize the proceeds of such sale for the construction of necessary improvements at the National Guard camp located at Flagstaff, Ariz.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. LEGAY

The bill (H. R. 3931) for the relief of Charles H. LeGay was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAROLD W. KINDERMAN

The bill (S. 2782) for the relief of Harold W. Kinderman, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to summon Harold W. Kinderman, a major, United States Army, retired, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his retirement under act of July 31, 1935, as amended, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incidence of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, the said Harold W. Kinderman, a major in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army, setting aside his retirement under act of July 31, 1935, and immediately thereafter place him upon the retired list of the Regular Army, for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and said retirement shall be held and considered to have taken place on December 31, 1936 (the date of his retirement under act of July 31, 1935), and he shall receive the full retired pay and allowances of an officer of his grade from December 31, 1936 (the date of his separation from active duty): Provided, That the amount of the retired pay already received by him since December 31, 1936, shall be deducted from the amount due him under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION OVER LAND ACQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I inquire who objected to calendar No. 1192, House bill 7293?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I objected to that because I wanted an explanation. If there is one available and ready, I should be very happy to listen to it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this bill has the endorsement of the Attorney General and the endorsement of the Federal Works Agency. As I understand, at the present time the consent of the legislature of a State in which land or sites are situated must be obtained before the expenditure of public moneys is permitted upon sites for buildings, unless the Federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction over the property. That conflicts with the laws of certain States. The Attorney General, in his letter of July 28, 1939, to the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, makes this statement:

The bill proposes to eliminate the provision contained in section 355 of the Revised Statutes that the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site is situated must be obtained before the expenditure of public moneys is permitted upon sites for buildings. This provision, over a long period of years, has been interpreted to require that such consent be given as will vest in the United States exclusive jurisdiction within the meaning of article I, section 3, clause 17, of the Constitution. The bill also proposes to provide specifically that exclusive jurisdiction over sites for buildings shall no longer be required and that the head or other authorized officer of a department or independent establishment or agency having control or custody of the land shall be given discretion to obtain such jurisdiction, exclusive or partial, as he may deem desirable. It would require that the acceptance of the consent to or cession of jurisdiction by the State legislature be made by filing a notice of acceptance with the Governor of the State or in such other manner as may be prescribed by the laws of the State.

The bill merely provides that the Attorney General may make agreements with certain States as to certain land or sites where the Federal Government would not have exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I respect the able Senator's judgment and withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7293) to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interests in land acquired by the United States, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR McNARY REGARDING AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this place, in connection with my remarks, a release issued by the distinguished floor leader of the minority, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], in anticipation of the coming into effect of the amendments to the Social Security Act adopted by Congress at the last session. In the release attention is called to the fact that the amendments were nonpartisan in character, but that they were made after 3 years of effort and agitation on the part of the Republican minority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. I ask that this release of December 30, 1939, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On Monday the amendments to the Social Security Act adopted by Congress last summer will become effective. Were it not for these amendments some 40,000,000 workers and their employers each would have been subjected to a 50-percent increase in old-age payroll taxes. Instead of a tax of 1 percent, they would have been required to pay 1½ percent. The amendment "freezing" until 1943 the present rate of pay-roll tax will save workers and employers in the coming year approximately $275,000,000, or an estimated total of $875,000,000 in the next 3 years—a huge sum which will go into the channels of trade instead of being spent by the Government. Indeed if the principle of keeping the pay-roll taxes at 1 percent and eliminating the "full reserve" fund is perpetuated, workers and employers in the next 40 years will be saved approximately $40,000,000,000.

The "freezing" of the pay-roll taxes, along with other changes made in the law by these amendments, will save workers and employers, during 1940, approximately $580,000,000, according to an estimate made by the House Ways and Means Committee. For the next 3 years the committee placed the savings in the neighborhood of $1,710,000,000.

Under the amendments which become effective Monday, old-age insurance benefits also have been liberalized. The date for beginning the payment of monthly old-age insurance benefits has been advanced from January 1, 1942 to January 1, 1940. Thus many tens of thousands of persons who have reached the age of 65 years will now receive benefits ranging up to $40 a month, plus benefits for wives and children. Under the original legislation these benefits would not have commenced for 2 more years. The amendments likewise liberalized the benefits to all insured workers retiring in the early years of the system. Under these changes about $1,755,000,000 in benefits, it is estimated by the Ways and Means Committee, will be disbursed during 1940-44, or about $1,200,000,000 more than estimated would be spent under the original law during these 5 years. In addition, these amendments brought about 1,100,000 more persons—seamen, bank employees and employed persons, age 65 and over—under the old-age insurance system, and about 200,000 under unemployment insurance.

Social-security legislation—care for the aged and the unemployed—is in no sense a partisan question. Both parties have supported it. But it is not inappropriate at this time to call attention to the fact that the amendments to the Social Security Act now becoming effective resulted from more than 3 years of effort and agitation by the Republican minority of House and Senate. Elimination of the "full reserve fund" and placing of the old-age insurance system on a pay-as-you-go basis with a modest contingent reserve is in line with the recommendations made in January 1937 by the minority group named by Republicans in both branches of Congress to study the question of social security.

It will be recalled that, on January 29, 1937, Senators ARTHUR VANDENBERG and JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., and Representatives DANIEL A. REED and THOMAS A. JENKINS, acting for the Republican minority of House and Senate, introduced a resolution calling for a study of the very proposals, among others, which now have been fulfilled. They issued a statement urging the freezing of the pay-roll taxes and elimination of the "full reserve" fund, advancement of the date for payment of old-age benefits to insured workers and a liberalization of benefits in the early years of the system.

These recommendations led to the appointment by the Senate Finance Committee and the Social Security Board of the Advisory Council on Social Security, which in December 1938 submitted a report suggesting many of the changes made by the amendments adopted last summer. Only a minority of this council, however, endorsed the Republican proposal for freezing of the pay-roll tax as of January 1, 1940, but this minority viewpoint prevailed when the amendments were enacted.

Republicans in Congress are very proud of this contribution toward perfecting the social-security system. Republicans everywhere should be proud of this constructive achievement by their party in eliminating some of the dangers in the original social-security legislation and in broadening its benefits in a sound and sensible manner.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6505) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. CELLER, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. REED of Illinois were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INSPECTIONS AND INVESTIGATION IN COAL MINES

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2420 relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	Lucas	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	Lundeen	Slattery
Bankhead	Gibson	McKellar	Smathers
Barbour	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Barkley	Glass	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Tobey
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Hale	Murray	Truman
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Van Nuys

Chavez	Hill	Pepper	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Radcliffe	White
Connally	Hughes	Reed	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Donahay	King	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Chair please state the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is that the Senate immediately consider Senate bill 2420, relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a telegram I received today from Henry Allai, president of district 14 of the United Mine Workers of America, urging the favorable action by the Senate on the pending bill, S. 2420. I have known Mr. Allai many years and have great confidence in his judgment. I come from a State which has important coal interests. I have studied this measure carefully and believe it is desirable legislation. I am glad to give it my support.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Allai's telegram be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURG, KANS., January 18, 1940.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building:

In behalf of the men who work in coal mines in our State, we are asking you to support Senate bill 2420, known as the mine-safety bill. While we have State mining laws, yet this will be a great improvement on what we now have for the protection of the safety and lives of our men.

HENRY ALLAI,
President, District 14, United Mine Workers of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Mines and Mining was, in section 1, page 3, after line 14, to add an additional subsection (f), as follows:

(f) The Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall cooperate with the Bureau of Mines, or other safety agency, in the respective cities and Territories, and shall report the acts of himself, or such agencies, to the State and Territorial bureaus or safety agencies. He, or such agency of government as may be used by him, shall give notice of all inspections to such State or Territorial bureaus or agencies, and afford an opportunity for the representatives to assist in such inspections. All inspections made by the Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use, shall not be in violation of any State, Territorial, or Federal law.

So as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made annual inspections and investigations in coal mines the products of which regularly enter commerce or the operations of which substantially affect commerce—

(a) For the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions in such mines, the causes of accidents involving bodily injury or loss of life in such mines, or the causes of occupational diseases originating in such mines, whenever such health or safety conditions, accidents, or occupational diseases burden or obstruct commerce or threaten so to do;

(b) For the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions in such mines, the causes of accidents involving bodily injury or loss of life in such mines, or the causes of occupational diseases originating in such mines, as a basis for determining the most effective manner in which the public funds made available for the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines, and for the prevention or relief of accidents or occupational diseases therein may be expended for the accomplishment of such objects;

(c) For the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions in such mines, the causes of accidents involving bodily injury or loss of life in such mines, or the causes of occupational diseases originating in such mines, as a basis for the preparation and dissemination of reports, studies, statistics, and other educational materials pertaining to the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines and to the prevention or relief of accidents or occupational diseases in coal mines;

(d) For the purpose of obtaining information relating to accidents involving bodily injury or loss of life in such mines or relating to occupational diseases originating in such mines, to be transmitted to the Bureau of the Census for use in connection with the preparation and compilation of the various census reports;

(e) For the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions in such mines, the causes of accidents involving bodily injury or loss of life in such mines, or the causes of occupational diseases originating in such mines, to be transmitted to the Congress for its consideration in connection with legislative matters involving health and safety conditions, accidents, or occupational diseases in coal mines.

(f) The Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall cooperate with the Bureau of Mines, or other safety agency, in the respective cities and Territories, and shall report the acts of himself, or such agencies, to the State and Territorial bureaus or safety agencies. He, or such agency of government as may be used by him, shall give notice of all inspections to such State or Territorial bureaus or agencies, and afford an opportunity for their representatives to assist in such inspections. All inspections made by the Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use, shall not be in violation of any State, Territorial, or Federal law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment—

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the amendment include the language beginning, in line 15, on page 3, through line 25 on the same page, and the first two lines on the top of page 4?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think before the question is put we ought to have some explanation of the measure. I am merely asking for information. What does this measure mean? On its face, so far as the reading goes, it apparently has to do with something which belongs exclusively within the jurisdiction of the several States, and is no part of the jurisdiction or authority of the Congress of the United States. So I ask for information.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Vermont object to the amendments?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I may. I do not want an amendment adopted here until we know what it is about.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Has the motion of the Senator from West Virginia been adopted as to making this measure the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. McNARY. I think the able Senator from West Virginia should address himself in the usual way to the whole of the bill at this time.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to respond to that suggestion, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think it would be advisable for the Senator to give a brief explanation of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I cheerfully accept the suggestions of the able Senators from Oregon and Kentucky.

During the last 30 years the American miner has performed his services in danger to his life and limb greater than that which confronts any British, French, or German soldier on the western European front today. During this period, the perils of coal mining have been greater than those of any other industry. Since the beginning of the present century a large-scale production coal mine has been more hazardous than any battlefield of the second World War.

In proof of these sweeping assertions, let specific facts speak to the point. From 1906 to 1937, inclusive, 58,600 men were killed in the coal mines of the United States and 3,516,000 were injured.

In other words, for almost a third of a century, on the average, the lives of more than 1,950 American coal miners have been accidentally snuffed out every year. For more than 30 years our mining industry has, on the average, yearly contributed to the vast army of the injured more than 117,000 men.

Data supplied by the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that the death rate in bituminous coal mining for each million hours of employment is at least eleven times greater than that of the average death rate of 30 manufacturing industries; and that the total accidents occurring in the mining of coal are about 4 times as great as the average in the other industries just mentioned.

The recently abolished National Bituminous Coal Commission estimated that the wage loss in the bituminous coal industry occasioned by injuries during the last decade averaged more than $40,000,000 a year and that less than 23 percent of this great loss was covered by the payment of compensation.

The Coal Commission estimated that in 1936 accidents caused the coal operators a direct loss of more than $19,000,000, and that the indirect losses which resulted from interruption of production, deterioration of morale, and other kindred causes amounted to approximately 20 cents for every ton of coal produced. It is estimated that the total direct and indirect loss to the industry attributable to accidents in 1936 alone amounted to more than $105,000,000.

Mr. President, the United States Bureau of Mines was established in 1906, and since that time it has rendered excellent service to the mining industry. A number of the coal-producing States have efficient mining departments. But the continued efforts of the Nation, the State, the miners, and the operators have not succeeded in affording sufficient protection to those who dig and load the Nation's coal. Conditions that yearly injure more than 117,000 men and rob more than 1,900 of their lives demand immediate, permanent, and far-reaching reform.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the purpose of the bill, it does not seek to interfere with the agencies of any State that are now engaged in the inspection of mines?

Mr. NEELY. It does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nor to superimpose the proposed inspection above the State inspection. The measure simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate, by inspection through his agencies, the conditions in coal mines, looking to the preservation of life and health and the safety of the mining operations for the benefit of the miners, does it not?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that upon the making of such investigation the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to report to Congress, and also to publish pamphlets and circulate information and give it to the press, as to the conditions existing in the mining industry, pertaining to the safety of lives and health, and that he is authorized to cooperate with such State agencies, and also to use any agency under his own jurisdiction—specifically the Bureau of Mines—in making the investigations and inspections; so that the Government of the United States, the Congress and the public, may have full information as to the conditions existing in the coal mines with respect to safety, life, and health. Is that substantially correct?

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Kentucky has, with his usual accuracy, correctly stated the case.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I correctly understand the bill, it does not give the Secretary of the Interior authority to do anything as the result of the investigation and inspection which he makes.

Mr. NEELY. That is true. He is simply authorized to investigate, inspect, report, and recommend.

Mr. BARKLEY. Based upon such information, Congress could probably enact legislation which would give the Secretary or somebody else more authority. However, in the bill the Secretary is not given any authority over the operations of mines, or to interfere with any State agency, or to do anything except to make public, through Congress, the press, and his own means, the information he gathers as a result of these inspections.

Mr. NEELY. The purpose of the bill is not opposition to State mining departments but cooperation with them.

Mr. TAFT and Mr. CHANDLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NEELY. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio, and then to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not quite understand what additional powers are proposed over those which the Bureau of Mines already has. As I read the powers of the Bureau of Mines, it is the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines to conduct inquiries and scientific and technological investigations concerning mining. For example, I understand that the Bureau of Mines is now investigating a recent accident in West Virginia, and that it has full access to all mines for such purposes.

What additional powers are proposed to be granted to the Secretary of the Interior over what the Bureau of Mines already can do?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to inspect coal mines, and report the conditions which the inspection reveals, to the end that additional measures for the prevention of accidents may be adopted.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; but what powers are proposed to be given to the Bureau of Mines which it does not already possess?

Mr. NEELY. The bill neither increases nor diminishes the powers of the Bureau of Mines. It provides for annual inspections and investigations by the Secretary of the Interior. There is no law which requires the Bureau to make such inspections and investigations.

Mr. TAFT. But the Bureau of Mines may make them today, may it not?

Mr. NEELY. The Bureau may make them and does make them after a disaster. The purpose of the bill is to provide inspections and supply sufficient information to enable the proper authorities to prevent mine disasters.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Subsection (f) of the bill makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of Government which he may use, to cooperate with the Bureau of Mines or other safety agencies in the States and Territories of the United States.

Mr. NEELY. That is true.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cooperate with State agencies and make annual inspections. Under certain circumstances he may make other inspections.

Under section 1 he may make annual inspections. Then, under section 2, upon the occurrence of an accident involving bodily injury or loss of life in a mine subject to the provisions of section 1, if in the opinion of the Secretary the circumstances indicate that the making of such inspections or investigations in the mine concerned will be in furtherance of the purposes of the act, the Secretary is further authorized and empowered to make investigations and inspections at other than annual intervals. Is it not true that the bill makes it mandatory that the Secretary of the Interior shall cooperate with the agencies in the several States?

Mr. NEELY. Yes, as I have previously indicated the bill is designed to promote cooperation—not opposition or competition.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe that those engaged in the mining of coal are sincerely of the conviction that this additional inspection might result in the saving of many lives of those engaged in coal mining.

Mr. NEELY. That seems to be the general opinion of the hundreds of thousands who are engaged in the mining of coal.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill does not take any authority away from the State agencies; but under the provisions of the bill additional annual inspections are mandatory, and it is mandatory that the Secretary of the Interior give notice of such inspections to the heads of the State departments, and not only cooperate with them, but give them an opportunity to be present when he makes his inspection.

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I seek information. I know little about coal mining.

Mr. NEELY. That is the only subject of debate about which the Senator from Vermont has not proved himself to be well informed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Let me assure the Senator that my assertion was very sincerely made.

Mr. AUSTIN. I made that statement only in order that the Senator would be patient with me in my inquiry.

The question I have in mind is whether or not we already have a set-up in the several States where coal mining occurs, in the form of boards for the inspection of mines in order to reduce the hazards of occupational disease and accidental injuries in such mines. Do we not already have institutions set up by the several States?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, we do; but they are unable to provide sufficient protection. For example—and I shall not offend by mentioning names—in one State which has had its full share of mine disasters or accidents, the appropriation last year for the purpose of protecting the miners was less than a half a mill for each ton of coal produced in the State. Of course, this meant practically no protection at all.

Similar situations exist in many other States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the very manner of presentation of this situation shows that it is a controversial question, in which we may have a State policy in conflict with the Federal policy regarding a matter of production or a matter of public health within the confines of a given State. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if he is free from doubt about the right of the Federal Government, just because its Congress may think that a State does not appropriate enough and is not sufficiently active in the inspection of mines, to assume jurisdiction over the subject when the Federal jurisdiction might conflict with the jurisdiction of the States?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia thoroughly satisfied himself that the bill was constitutional before he introduced it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I invite the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the latter part of the pending amendment, which is subsection (f) of section 1, provides that all inspections made by the Secretary of the Interior or any agency of government which he may use shall not be in violation of any State, Territorial, or Federal law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Furthermore, the bill requires that when the Secretary seeks to use the agency of any State to aid him in facilitating the investigation or inspection, he must have the consent of the State.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I observed that; and it immediately excited my interest, because it is a clear implication of the possibility of conflict between the two jurisdictions, the Federal jurisdiction and the State jurisdiction. We say, as we proceed to occupy this field, "We will not claim that the Federal law is supreme in respect to this matter when the two jurisdictions occupy the same field." Heretofore, we have always respected the Constitution and the Federal statutes as the supreme law of the land whenever and wherever the State law and the Federal law occupied the same field.

In my opinion—of course, my opinion is only superficial, because this is the first time I have looked at this measure or had an opportunity to consider it—there is a question as to whether or not we are starting out upon another road to the left and attempting either to break down or entirely disregard the constitutional separation of the two governments if we undertake to exercise a power of inspection for the purpose of passing laws regulating the conduct of the business of mining, which has been repeatedly established to be a concern of the several States and not a concern of the Federal Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee which submitted this report. The chairman of that committee was the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the late Senator Logan.

I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I think there is nothing in this bill which in any way interferes with the Constitution of the United States, or is unconstitutional. In the production of a commodity so important as coal, I think the Government of the United States, through its agency—which I hope will be the Bureau of Mines—might make certain inspections, if it chose, as the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has indicated. It has not always chosen to do that.

I happen to come from a coal-mining State—not a great coal-mining State like West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, or Illinois—but still a coal-mining State. All my life I have lived next door to the coal-mining region of my own State of Kansas. Coal mining is one of the most hazardous, if not the most hazardous of occupations.

Whatever we might do either by State authority or by national authority to lessen that hazard, that thing I am in favor of doing.

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was the author of the bill; the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] was a member of the committee along with myself, and he will recall, of course, the consideration in the committee of this bill directing the Secretary of the Interior to make an inspection once a year. For the information of the Senate, I may say that among the most serious hazards—and there are many serious hazards in coal mining—explosions are the worst.

Explosions may occur from one of two factors; either from the presence of natural gas which is found with the coal, or from the ignition of coal dust. As coal is mined, unless there is good ventilation in the mine, all the entries and vacant places become filled with a very fine coal dust, and coal dust causes more explosions than does gas. The recent explosion in the State of the Senator from West Virginia, I think, will be found to have been caused by an accumulation of coal dust—I am merely expressing opinion and not stating a fact—and by the ignition of the coal dust because of inadequate ventilation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. According to my information, the Senator is in error concerning the explosion at Bartley. It is said to have been caused by gas. I am informed that this mine was one of the best operated in the State of West Virginia. Rock dust is said to have been abundantly and properly used. If this is true, as I believe it to be, coal dust could not have caused the explosion. Therefore, gas must have occasioned the disaster.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I stated I was expressing an impression only and not an opinion or a final judgment. No matter what caused the explosion, even if gas was present—and gas is very frequently present in coal mines—if there had been sufficient and adequate ventilation, there would not have been an explosion. It is such explosions that in 99 cases out of 100 cause the great losses of life. There are many minor accidents in mines, such as the falling of the roof or of a piece of rock or slate or something of that kind, but the great loss of life comes from explosions.

I may say to the Senator from Vermont that I am perhaps not the only Senator but certainly one of the Senators who objected to the provision on page 4, beginning in line 11, that the Federal Government, through the Secretary of the Interior, might go in upon the condition set forth which we struck out of the bill. The clause reported to be stricken out reads:

Upon the submission to the Secretary of the Interior of a petition signed by a majority of the underground workers in a mine subject to the provisions of section 1, or signed by the authorized employee representatives of a majority of the underground workers in such a mine.

In lieu of that provision which the committee struck out it wrote section (f) beginning on page 3, line 15, concerning which the very able Senator from Vermont inquired. We tried by the language of that amendment to bring about cooperation between the Federal and the State mining bureaus and mining inspection agencies, which are maintained by most of the States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would it not be true, if this bill should become a law, that there would then be three different inspectors, namely, the State agency, the Chief of the Bureau of Mines under the law as it exists today, plus the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Vermont the language of that section is:

The Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall cooperate with the Bureau of Mines.

If I could have had my way about it, individually, I would have devolved the work entirely upon the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not the language of the bill, is it? I cannot see that in the bill.

Mr. REED. If I may read again from page 3—

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator was reading from the amendment. I thought he was reading from section 1.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. AUSTIN. Section 1 is the empowering section of the bill.

Mr. REED. What we have done—and I only came to the support of this bill after mature thought and consideration in and out of the committee in the interest of safety—is to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to make an annual inspection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to enable me to ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator from Kansas mean by what he has said there will be three inspections?

Mr. NEELY. No.

Mr. REED. I think there might be two, and I think there will be two.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then the Senator must ignore, does he not, the opening paragraph of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made annual inspections—

And so forth. Does not the Senator ignore the main power contained in this proposed legislation?

Mr. REED. Further over, in an amendment which was put in by the committee, we provided that "the Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall cooperate with the Bureau of Mines."

Then we further say that—

All inspections made by the Secretary of the Interior, or any agency of government which he may use, shall not be in violation of any State, Territorial, or Federal law.

Mr. President, this is a bill with which I am somewhat familiar. I have discussed this matter with men in the coal trade. I know that some of the coal operators in my State are opposed to it, as they think it would let the Federal elephant's trunk get further under the tent.

I admit that that is an objection which I wish we could avoid, but I do not know how we can avoid it entirely. The mine workers with whom I have talked—and I am going to be a little bit more outspoken than was the Senator from West Virginia—have stated to me that Pennsylvania, for example, and Illinois, the State which the present Presiding Officer [Mr. LUCAS in the chair] so ably represents, and Kansas, have very fine mine-inspection laws, and that other States have good inspection laws, but that the inspection laws of some other States are wholly inadequate for the safety of the men engaged in this most hazardous occupation.

Speaking now as a member of the committee, I cooperated with the lamented Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Logan, who was chairman of the committee, in striking out the provision on page 4. If that provision had remained, beginning at line 11, page 4, a group of unruly miners—and we have such—might have had an inspection every day or every week. I was unwilling to leave the bill open to that kind of situation; so we struck it out, and we provided that the work of the Secretary of the Interior—and we had to devolve the responsibility some place, we might have placed it in the Bureau of Mines, perhaps—was to be carried out in cooperation with the National Bureau of Mines and with the State agencies, and that he should make inspection annually and even more frequently if accidents in mines justified it.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who seek to extend Federal authority; I am one of those who prefer to confine it. I am not one of those who seek to restrict the power of the States; I want them to remain in full power and vigor, but I know, because I come from a coal-mining State, that coal mining is probably—and I accept the statement of the Senator from West Virginia—the most hazardous of all industries, and the men engaged in it are entitled to the fullest degree of protection which they may obtain fairly and reasonably by cooperation between the Federal Government and the States. In some States the present degree of protection, through the efficiency of the bureaus of inspection, is adequate; in other States it is not.

I shall not be offensive by trying to name any of the States where it is not; but, very frankly, as a member of the committee, I wanted to have taken whatever action could be taken to improve the safety of the men engaged in this most hazardous of occupations. To me, this is a question of safety; and because it is so important a question of safety I am willing to go along by lodging in the Secretary of the Interior the power and duty of making an annual inspection, always, however, in cooperation with the State authorities; and that is the way the bill now reads as it comes before the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, before proceeding with the discussion let me respond to the observation of the able Senator from Kansas regarding his objections to the elephant intruding his trunk into the tent. I had been laboring under the melancholy impression that several Republican Senators were in favor of pushing the whole elephant with trunk, tusks, tail, and tallow unimpaired into the governmental tent. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. REED. This year, in November, we are going to get our whole body into the tent, if you please. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that may not conduce to safety of life within the tent. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. It will make for the interests of nations and the prosperity of the United States; but it has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. NEELY. I shall not take issue with my distinguished friend from Kansas about the effects of a political change that cannot possibly be made this year, because he is supporting my bill, which is the only matter of importance now before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that in line 18 of the pending amendment, page 3, I think the word "cities" must be a misprint. It seems to me it ought to be "States and Territories," because all the rest of the amendment refers to States and Territories, and cities have no jurisdiction of mines.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; the word "cities" should be "States."

Mr. President, in relation to this bill, the coal industry is today precisely where the railroads of the country were immediately before the enactment of the Federal inspection and safety-appliance laws.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I do not want that statement of the Senator from West Virginia to go entirely unchallenged. In my State—of which I have been Governor, and where I appointed the State mining inspector, and operated the machinery which inspects the mines—we have the fullest cooperation from the coal operators. I have no fault to find with the coal operators in my State.

Mr. NEELY. Neither am I finding fault with the coal operators of West Virginia or of any other State. But so far the efforts of governmental agencies in cooperation with the miners and operators have failed to prevent constantly recurring disasters. In my opinion additional Federal assistance should be promptly supplied.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I have every sympathy with the purposes of the bill; but what concerns me is that we seem to be granting to one Government department complete investigatory powers which are already granted to another, so that if the bill is passed we may have two officials overlapping and doing the same work.

When I previously asked the Senator about the same thing, he said the bill required the Secretary of the Interior to make these investigations annually. Upon reading the bill I do not see that it does require him to do so. I do not quite see what additional powers the bill gives the Secretary which the Bureau of Mines does not already have; and I do not understand why we should grant the same powers over again to a different department of the Government than one which already has those powers.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I think the very first section of the bill answers the Senator's question. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made annual inspections and investigations in coal mines the products of which regularly enter commerce or the operations of which substantially affect commerce.

And section 7, provides:

The Secretary of the Interior shall devolve the execution of the provisions of this act upon any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TAFT. The Bureau of Mines is now given the duty of conducting inquiries and scientific and technological investigations.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; and so much of the time of the Bureau is devoted to technological investigations that little or none is left for the inspections of mines.

Mr. TAFT. Furthermore, the Bureau is authorized to establish, and does maintain, as I understand, 10 mining experiment stations and 7 mine-safety stations, movable or stationary, in addition to those already established. If there is an agency of the Government maintaining such stations, inspecting mines, and given power to inspect them, why should we now all of a sudden create another bureau or in effect give the Secretary of the Interior power to assign to some other Bureau the same powers over again?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I thought that I had sufficiently responded to the Senator's observations on that point. The investigations which the Bureau of Mines now conducts are made after accidents occur.

Mr. TAFT. But the Bureau may make them before accidents occur.

Mr. NEELY. But it does not perform that service. The bill is designed to cause investigations to be made before accidents occur, in order that their occurrence may, if possible, be prevented.

Mr. TAFT. But under the Bureau of Mines statutes, the Bureau may make investigations before accidents occur. All we have to do is to appropriate money for additional inspectors.

Mr. NEELY. I doubt whether that alone would be sufficient. In any event neither the appropriations nor the inspections have been made.

Mr. TAFT. The officials of the Bureau will say, if we ask them why not, that we have not given them the money to do it.

May I ask the Senator one other question? I notice that this authority for expenditures is practically unlimited. The bill says, in section 9:

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated * * * such sums as may be necessary for the due execution of this act.

Has the Senator any estimate of the additional cost involved in these additional inspections at every mine in the United States every year?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I have not; but I venture to assert that in comparison with the loss from accidents, which cost more than $40,000,000 a year, the expense of the service required by the bill will be negligible.

Mr. TAFT. I know; but I should like a more definite answer, if the Senator can give it to me. I am not criticizing the amount. It may be well worth while; but what will be the cost of all the additional inspectors we are going to have to put on in some other bureau than the Bureau of Mines to carry out this inspection?

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Ohio really fear that the able Secretary of the Interior will create a new bureau to discharge the duties specified in the bill, instead of assigning those duties to the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. TAFT. If he is not going to do it, why should we not give the authority to the Director of the Bureau of Mines instead of to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. NEELY. Because the Bureau of Mines and the administration of the Bituminous Coal Act are now under the Secretary of the Interior, and it was deemed advisable to place all coal-mining agencies under the same capable and responsible official.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to let me answer the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I think there is a better answer which can be made to the Senator from Ohio about the language in line 3, page 1. I am now speaking from the viewpoint of a member of the committee which gave the bill very earnest study, and had the bill before it at different times in executive session, in an effort to make it the best possible bill. We might say "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed" instead of "authorized," and that would not leave any discretion in the Secretary of the Interior or the Bureau of Mines to make any distinction in the inspection of mines between States in which the State bureaus are entirely adequate and those in which the State bureaus are not entirely adequate.

I speak for myself alone, but I speak as a member of the committee which reported the bill, and that is the reason why I prefer the language as it is. Under the bill the Secretary of the Interior is not required, unless he wants to do so, to go into States which have adequate mine-inspection bureaus and adequate mine-inspection laws. If we had used the word "directed" instead of the word "authorized," we then would have required an annual inspection of every coal mine in the United States, whether it needed the inspection or not.

I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to have vested a reasonable amount of discretion in the head of the department which is to administer the proposed law, if the bill shall become a law, and to me that is the reason why we left this language as it is.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia, if I may, whether or not the definition of "commerce," in section 10 of the bill, is to be found in any existing law of which the Senator is aware?

Mr. NEELY. I am under the impression that identical or similar language occurs in the so-called Guffey Coal Act.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me ask the Senator, as the author of the bill, what the term "communication" means, in line 10, page 9. When I ask what it means, I inquire to what extent the Senator understands the word "communication" will go as a matter of or defining commerce within the States referred to.

Mr. NEELY. It is nearly synonymous with transportation and is probably superfluous.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, if I may make myself explicit, I have in my mind that under certain criminal statutes, for instance, the Federal Government undertakes to impose its criminal jurisdiction, for violation of statutes involving the mails, for example, solely on the question whether or not a letter is mailed or is received either in one State or another, and on the basis of the mailing of the letter or its receipt in interstate transit the Government undertakes to fasten its jurisdiction. I therefore ask whether the Senator had in mind, for instance, that a communication from a mine owner in a State to a would-be purchaser of coal in another State would be such a communication within the meaning of section 10 as would make that particular transaction commerce within the meaning of section 10 and therefore give jurisdiction to inspect the mine in the mining State?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, that was not my intention.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for one further question?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his forbearance, and I will conclude in just a moment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me state to the Senator from Connecticut, with the indulgence of the Senator from West Virginia, that so far as I am concerned I should be in favor of taking out the two words "or communication." That would leave the matter within the description of interstate commerce.

Mr. NEELY. If anyone supporting the bill objects to that word, I shall not oppose a motion to strike it out.

Mr. REED. I move—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has yielded to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Connecticut indulge me while I move that there be stricken out the two words "or communication," appearing in line 10 on page 9, and the insertion of the word "or" before the word "transportation", in line 9.

Mr. NEELY. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment at this time? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, has the Senator from West Virginia yielded the floor?

Mr. NEELY. I have not.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thought the question was about to be put on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the question is on the adoption of an amendment presented by the Senator from Kansas to strike out the words "or communication", in line 10, page 9, and to insert the word "or" before the word "transportation", in line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield further?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wonder whether there comes to the mind of the Senator from West Virginia any type of mine with reference to which this proposed statute will not confer jurisdiction for inspection.

Mr. NEELY. No; no type of coal mine, the output of which enters interstate commerce.

Mr. DANAHER. In other words, the word "commerce" will be and is intended to be so all-embracing that if coal, for instance, from any such mine is introduced into trade, traffic, commerce, or transportation, inspection jurisdiction may follow?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator for the explanation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, to resume at the point at which I was interrupted, let me invite attention to some of the results of Federal legislation for the protection of railroad employees.

In 1918, 3,048 railroad men were killed and 149,469 were injured.

Five years later, under the operation of the Federal law providing inspections and reports of accidents, and requiring certain safety appliances, the death rate had fallen from 3,048 to 1,866, and accidents to 148,146.

Five years later the death rate had fallen to 1,187.

In 1930 accidental deaths fell to 898 and injuries to 33,184, and the decrease in deaths and injuries to railroad employees has been constant ever since. In 1938 the deaths were only 455, in comparison with 1,187 ten years before, and the accidents in 1938 were but 14,397 compared with 66,744 ten years before.

Mr. President, the result of the protection which has been afforded railroad men by Federal legislation, alone is sufficient to justify the Congress in providing additional safeguards for the miners who are being killed at the rate of more than 1,900 a year.

I hope that the Senate by passing the bill by a unanimous vote will take one long praiseworthy step upon the road that leads to the highest possible degree of security for the life and limb of every coal miner in the land.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether there will be any expense to the States or to the coal operators from the operation of the proposed law?

Mr. NEELY. None whatever. The inspection is to be paid for by the Federal Government.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is the expense to be added on to the price of coal, or anything of the kind?

Mr. NEELY. No.

Mr. FRAZIER. It would not interfere with the State inspection laws?

Mr. NEELY. In no respect.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course legislation such as that contained in the proposal now before the Senate naturally appeals to all of us, as does the proposal for loans to Finland; but sometimes we have to look beyond our personal feelings.

Let me ask the Senator from West Virginia, who is in charge of the bill, what the representatives of the interested States, such as Governors and other leading citizens, say with reference to the necessity for this Federal legislation? Was any testimony taken on the bill?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; hearings were held.

Mr. HARRISON. I tried to get a transcript of the hearings, and have not been able to get it.

Mr. NEELY. The printed hearings consist of 151 pages of evidence. No Governor of any State appeared in opposition to the bill, and, so far as I now recall, no other State official testified against it.

Mr. HARRISON. Were they given ample opportunity to appear before the committee?

Mr. NEELY. The hearings were held in 3 different weeks, and the papers generally carried information regarding their progress.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Mississippi that following the close of the hearings a number of letters came to the committee discussing the merits and demerits of the proposal, which were considered by the committee following the close of the hearings. But there was no substantial opposition, so far as my knowledge goes, except from a few coal operators. Some coal operators are opposed to the bill. We might just as well be frank about the matter and say that.

Mr. NEELY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I judge that is true. I knew nothing about the measure until day before yesterday, when the Senator from West Virginia made a very eloquent statement concerning it. I have received a communication from one of my good friends—also a good friend of the Senator from West Virginia—who thinks the measure will not be beneficial to the coal industry. He is interested in operating a mine. I know that the coal industry is almost a bankrupt industry. I know it has had a hard road to travel in meeting various kinds of competition and so forth.

With respect to the newly formed agency which my friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] championed, known as the Bituminous Coal Commission, I have not felt that anything has been accomplished down there except fuss and feathers. So it would seem that what is proposed in the pending measure might result in an additional burden. Naturally it would seem to me that the coal States and those in authority there would be the most interested in this proposal. God knows we have no coal in my State, but I do think we should have the opinions of those who are from coal States, such as Kansas, and I am glad to know that the Senator from Kansas has testified with respect to the enactment in his State of very beneficial laws concerning health and safety.

I know that any State would be in better condition due to his efforts. Then I see present other Senators who were members of the committee and who have been Governors of their respective States. I know they have helped to improve the situation all they could.

Mr. President, I take it for granted that the States are amply able to handle this matter. I think we ought to have at least a statement from representatives of those States which are interested, as to whether or not they think we ought to pile up additional expense, and create an additional number of employees under Mr. Ickes, or someone, and send them out into the highways and byways to investigate. That is why I inquired of the Senator if an inquiry had been made as to what the States particularly interested thought about the suggestion.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I wish particularly to respond to the opinion the Senator from Mississippi expressed concerning the law which was sponsored by our distinguished friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. I think that law amounted to much more than "fuss and feathers." It accomplished a higher degree of stabilization of the coal industry than it had known during the preceding 10 or 15 years, and it afforded 300,000 coal miners who came within its purview much additional prosperity and protection. The Senator from Mississippi has, in my opinion, done the Guffey Coal Act a great injustice.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have not kept up with the alleged accomplishments of the Commission under the Guffey Coal Act. I voted for the passage of the act, I will say, because of my very great fondness for the Senator from Pennsylvania, if for no other reason. I am glad to hear something good said about the Bituminous Coal Commission. I am glad to know that it was the means of helping someone. But it is also certainly true that considerable turmoil resulted from certain actions on the part of members of that organization.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, one of the difficulties that occurred with respect to the regulation of the coal industry under the Guffey Coal Act grew out of a court decision nullifying a price structure which had been set up by the Coal Commission. The Court held that it had not pursued the proper course in arriving at that price structure, because it had not held hearings, or had not given sufficient time for the various elements of the industry to present their case. The Court did not hold that the Commission had no authority to fix the price structure, but that in fixing this particular structure it had not deliberated sufficiently. So the Commission had to back down the hill and start over again.

I think it is true that the results up to now have not been as favorable as were expected at the time the law was passed. Whether that has been the fault of the Commission or whether it grew out of the court's decision nullifying what had been done, perhaps in haste, I do not wish to say; but even though the Coal Commission had not accomplished anything at all, I doubt whether it would be fair to judge the merits of the pending measure on the basis of any failure on the part of the Coal Commission.

While I am on my feet I also wish to say that this bill, in my judgment, may not result in any expense so far as the coal industry itself is concerned. The only thing the bill requires the coal operators to do is to let the agents of the Department of the Interior enter to make the inspection. There is no expense attached to it, so far as the coal industry is concerned. I suppose it is fair to assume there may be a few more employees required in the Bureau of Mines to make these investigations, although I am not certain of that. It is entirely possible that with the present force they could make these investigations, because they are making certain investigations under law now.

Mr. President, I do not want to pass a law based on emotion or sentimentalism growing out of any single accident, but I recall that about a year ago in my State there was a terrific coal-mine explosion which destroyed the lives of a large number of men. Only recently we have been saddened in Kentucky and in West Virginia by the death of 92 men, some of whom came from my State, and worked in mines just across the State line. These were isolated instances. If they only happened occasionally there might be less justification for bringing about an additional effort to provide safeguards for the lives of these men, but when these things are happening regularly, it seems to me that the more safeguards we can throw around the lives of men who go down into the bosom of the earth to dig out that substance which is so essential to industry and to our homes and to our economic system the better it is, not simply for them, but for the country as a whole.

I appreciate fully the feelings of the Senator from Mississippi with respect to economy and the reduction of expenditures, and the refusal to increase the personnel of the Federal Government. I do not think it is necessary under this bill to do that, although there is authority in the bill for appropriations if they become necessary. That is a matter for the Appropriations Committee to take care of. But I do believe that we will be justified in adding this particular type of inspection to that which is now being conducted by the States, in an effort to prevent these terrible accidents which snuff out in a moment the lives of so many of our people.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that I appreciate the humanitarian aspects of this bill. We all want to try to protect the lives of our people. We all appreciate the hazards incident to the mining industry. But if the States are attending to this matter and doing it efficiently, I see no reason to create a conflict between the Federal Government and the States in the protection of life and the promotion of safety.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I construe this bill it will not cause any conflict, because the Secretary of the Interior cannot use the agencies of the States without the consent of the States. He is authorized to cooperate with the agencies of the States, but not in violation of any laws of the States. He cannot go into them and take over the situation in violation of the law, or do anything except with the cooperation and consent of the States.

Mr. HARRISON. As to the suggestion presented to me that I should not allow any prejudice against the Bituminous Coal Commission to affect my judgment in respect to the pending legislation, I wish to say that I am not so affected. I am not prejudiced against the Bituminous Coal Commission.

I think now it was a useless thing for us to establish that Commission. I do not think we have gotten the beneficial results from it that we expected. My heart goes out to the great mining industry of this country and to those employed in that industry.

I have heard—and members of the committee can tell me whether it is true or not, and, of course, one hears a great deal—that it was stated in the committee that Mr. John L. Lewis, about whom we have all heard, had promised to pass this legislation, and it was going to be passed. Now I have never heard that the Senator made that remark. I say I did not hear that the Senator said that, but I understood it was said in the sessions of the Senate committee.

I do not like to pass legislation under whip and spur. Somehow or other I am not built just that way. Would the Senator object to establishing a limitation, say, of not more than $25,000 authorized for this work per year? As the bill stands, there is no limit whatsoever.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I have no idea what the cost of the operation of this inspection service will be; but if it is worth creating, its cost ought not to be limited without accurate data on which to base our action. I am compelled to oppose the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that there should be a limitation in amount on the cost of this service prompts me to call attention specifically to two sections of the bill. Both of them seem to be extraordinary sections. They ought to have a special interest to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is charged with the obligation of suggesting a means for raising funds to carry on the Government, and they ought to be of interest also to the members of the Appropriations Committee.

Section 8 of the bill gives to the Secretary of the Interior authority to appoint, subject to the civil-service laws—such officers and employees as he may deem requisite for the administration of this act.

There is a blanket authority, without limitation, with neither flooring nor ceiling, for the Secretary of the Interior to appoint anywhere from 1 to 10,000 employees for the administration of the act. I think the usual provision is that we authorize the appointment within the limit of appropriations made by the Congress for the carrying on of an activity of the Government. No such limitation is to be found in the bill.

Then we come to the authorization section, which authorizes the appropriation of "such sums as may be necessary for the due execution of this act." There is no limitation in amount, and no limitation as to time. That, too, seems to me to be an extraordinary provision; for, if I understand the practice of the legislative bodies, we usually authorize an appropriation of not to exceed such an amount for 1 year, and such an amount for another year. Somewhere in our authorizations we put a limit. However, these two provisions of the bill, as I say, are wide open, without ceiling of any character whatsoever.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask one question, and then I shall yield to the Senator.

Is the bill recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, or anyone in the Government administrative service?

Mr. NEELY. I have no information concerning the attitude of the Secretary of the Interior toward the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as the committee knows, it is not recommended by any department of the Government?

Mr. NEELY. So far as I know it is not.

Mr. HARRISON. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GUFFEY. For the information of my distinguished friend from Mississippi, I should like to say that the so-called Guffey Coal Act does not cost the Government a cent. The expenses are met by a small tax on the producers; and the only reason why the price has not been fixed is that such action has been fought for 4 years by the same operators who are now objecting to the passage of the safety bill which is pending before us today.

Mr. HARRISON. That is one of the reasons why I mentioned the Guffey Coal Act. The burden of administering the law is, in part, placed upon the operators.

Mr. GUFFEY. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a burden, in view of the condition of the coal industry. It is very easy for an examiner or inspector to go out from the Federal administration, acting under the acquiescence or dictation or suggestions of certain gentlemen, and recommend to some operator some very great changes in the operation of his establishment, which would impose great additional expense. That was why I thought about the Guffey Coal Act in that connection.

Mr. GUFFEY. Legal objection has been made to the bill by operators in West Virginia and Kentucky—very few in Kentucky. I have yet to hear an operator in Pennsylvania complain about any burdensome tax in connection with the cost of administering the proposed law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should also like to suggest that the coal operators were not by any means unanimous in opposing the Guffey coal bill. Many of them—in fact, I think three-fourths of the coal operators—were urging the passage of such a law in order that the coal industry might be stabilized and put upon a sound basis.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is absolutely correct in that statement. I know that every coal operator who talked with me was for it.

Mr. BARKLEY. They were thoroughly familiar with the fact that the burden of the tax, which I believe was 1 cent a ton, was to be placed upon them in order to provide for the expense of the operation of the Guffey Coal Act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

I think perhaps nine-tenths of the bills which I recall, which have passed this body, contained substantially this language:

That there may be made available, out of sums not otherwise appropriated—

And so forth. I do not think 1 bill in 10 which passes the Senate fixes the amount to be spent. The Secretary of the Interior may not spend a cent under the provisions of this bill until the Congress has made the money available, and then he may spend only as much as the Congress makes available. There is no difference between this bill and nine-tenths of the bills which pass this body.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I disagree with the Senator as to the facts. However, whatever the facts may be, I still insist that it is unwise legislation to give authority to any official of the Government to appoint, without limitation, the employees he may seek. I also say that it is unwise to make an unlimited authorization. It is not common practice. I think the common practice is—and I think if the Senator will look over the bills which receive consideration by this body he will so find—that the authorizations are definite in amount. If they are not, they ought to be.

Mr. REED. Under this bill the Secretary of the Interior might appoint, but he could not pay a single employee until the Congress had acted and made an appropriation with which to carry out the provisions of the act.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a perfecting amendment. Section 7, on page 7, now reads, in part, as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior shall devolve the execution of the provisions of this act upon any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior, for the execution of the provisions of this act.

The language is very unhappy. I move to amend it so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior, when he deems it advisable, shall assign the execution of the provisions of this act to any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior.

And that all the rest of the sentence should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that the Committee on Mines and Mining—and I am dreadfully sorry that the late Senator Logan from Kentucky is not here—framed that language deliberately and intentionally. In other words, it was not the intent of the committee that the Secretary of the Interior should wander around with this authority and put it anywhere he desired. We said that he "shall devolve the execution of the provisions of this act upon any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I am proposing to change not the meaning but the language.

Mr. REED. That is exactly what the committee intended to be done.

Mr. NEELY. I do not believe that the committee intended to repeat the words "the provisions of this act." I am merely endeavoring to improve the language without changing the substance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think the use of the word "devolve" in that sense is a rather awkward way of expressing the intent. As I understand, the verb "devolve" is an intransitive verb. You do not devolve something upon somebody, but it devolves upon somebody. It seems to me the language suggested by the Senator from West Virginia accomplishes the same purpose, but in a little smoother way. The Secretary may not go outside the Department of the Interior to assign the execution of this work to various agencies. He is limited to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. REED. If the Senator wishes to say that the Secretary shall "assign" instead of "devolve," that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senator reduce his amendment to writing and send it to the desk, so that the clerk may state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, after a conference with the Senator from Kansas, I ask unanimous consent to amend the language so as to read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior shall assign the execution of the provisions of this act to any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection—

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Would it not be better if the word were "delegate" rather than "assign"?

Mr. NEELY. I am willing to accept that amendment. The word "devolve" certainly does not express the meaning the committee had in mind.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the word "delegate" would be, perhaps, a good term. I do not find any fault, however, with "devolve" or "assign" or "delegate." I think they all amount to practically the same thing.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to change the word "assign" to "delegate" so that after the amendment proposed is made, the sentence will read:

The Secretary of the Interior shall delegate the execution of the provisions of this act to any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. DANAHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NEELY. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania. Then I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DAVIS. A moment or two ago the Senator from Mississippi directed a question to the Senator from West Virginia asking whether or not representatives of any State agency came before the committee. The Senator from West Virginia stated that he did not recall any Governor or any other State government official coming before the committee.

I know the Senator will appreciate my correcting the statement he made, because John Ira Thomas, secretary of mines of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, came before the committee and made a very fine statement, as did M. P. Rhinehart, the chief of the department of mines in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for correcting the error which I unfortunately made. I now remember that the officials named testified before the committee.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the inspection that is sought by this bill should not properly be extended to all mines? In other words, we could establish the very definite aid that the Senator from West Virginia has in mind if we simply struck from this bill the word "coal" wherever it appears, thus making it apply to mines of every class and character.

Mr. President, I have in mind the mining of silicate, for instance, in connection with which there results an occupational disease that is very deadly. There is no type of occupational disease any worse in its effect or continuing in its result than is silicosis. I point that out to the Senator and inquire if that would not come within the objective and aim of the Senator from West Virginia? If we were to strike out the word "coal" it would give jurisdiction to the Department of the Interior to take steps to obtain information relating to health conditions and occupational diseases in all mines. In that position, under the bill, conditions which should be corrected could be reported upon and corrective measures could be taken. I therefore ask the Senator from West Virginia to bear with me and accept an amendment to strike out the word "coal" wherever it appears in the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, and if he or any other Senator will introduce a bill designed to effectuate the purpose to which he refers I will support it, but I hope no one will attempt to encumber the pending bill with the Senator's proposal, because it would mean additional opposition and possibly the defeat of this important measure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that I am familiar with the coal-mining business in my State, and, perhaps unfortunately, I have had some experience also with the metal-mining business in the State of Arizona. They are two entirely different kinds of mines. Coal mining is affected with a hazard that does not appear in metal mining at all, and that is the presence of natural gas and the accumulation of fine dust which will explode when it reaches a certain density in the entries in the coal mines.

The Senator from Connecticut is correct that there are occupational diseases resulting from other forms of mining. I am very proud that my State of Kansas now has taken action to correct the trouble caused by the inhaling of fine dust growing out of zinc and lead mining; and the largest combined zinc- and lead-mining operations in the United States is again a next-door neighbor to me.

But the problems there are entirely different from the problems in coal mining. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia, and I hope that we will not undertake to load this bill down with a provision of the kind he suggests.

I will say to the Senator from Connecticut I will vote for a bill if he desires to offer one of the type he suggests providing for an investigation of occupational diseases, the most serious of which in metal mining is silicosis. That disease is not incident to coal mining, but there are, among others, two very definite dangers in coal mining, explosions of natural gas and explosions of fine dust. Those are hazards that do not appear in other forms of mining.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, wait a moment. I inquire if the amendment offered by the Senator has been voted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has. The question is on the first committee amendment which the Chair will consider amended, line 18, page 3, by striking out the word "cities" and inserting the word "States." With that correction, the question is on the first committee amendment as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other amendments of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, section 2, after line 10, it is proposed to strike out:

(b) Upon the submission to the Secretary of the Interior of a petition signed by a majority of the underground workers in a mine subject to the provisions of section 1, or signed by the authorized employee representatives of a majority of the underground workers in such a mine;

And in line 18, after the word "accident", to strike out "or the facts disclosed in the petition", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and empowered to make or cause to be made the inspections and investigations provided for in section 1 of this act at other than annual intervals in the following situation:

Upon the occurrence of an accident involving bodily injury or loss of life in a mine subject to the provisions of section 1; if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the circumstances of the accident or the facts disclosed in the petition indicate that the making of such inspections or investigations in the mine concerned will be in furtherance of the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 6, after line 20, to strike out:

(d) To expend the funds made available to him for the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines, and for the prevention or relief of accidents or occupational diseases therein, in such lawful manner as he may deem most effective in the light of the information obtained under this act to promote the accomplishment of the objects for which such funds are granted;

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed—

(a) To report annually to the Congress, either in summary or detailed form, the information obtained by him under this act, together with such findings and comments thereon and such recommendations for legislative action as he may deem proper;

(b) To compile, analyze, and publish, either in summary or detailed form, the information obtained by him under this act, together with such findings concerning the causes of unhealthy or unsafe conditions, accidents, or occupational diseases in coal mines, and such recommendations for the prevention or amelioration of unhealthy or unsafe conditions, accidents, or occupational diseases in coal mines as he may deem proper;

(c) To prepare and disseminate reports, studies, statistics, and other educational materials pertaining to the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines and to the prevention or relief of accidents or occupational diseases in coal mines;

(d) To transmit to the Director of the Census, either in summary or detailed form, the information obtained by him under this act, for use in connection with the preparation and compilation of the various Census reports;

(e) To make available for public inspection, either in summary or detailed form, the information obtained under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, section 7, line 10, after the word "Interior", to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; in line 13, after the word "Interior", to strike out "or may create such new offices or agencies thereunder as he may deem advisable"; and in line 18, after the word "Government", to insert "any State or Territorial government", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 7. The Secretary of the Interior shall devolve the execution of the provisions of this act upon any of the existing bureaus or agencies under the Department of the Interior for the execution of the provisions of this act. In the execution of the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Interior may also utilize the services of any other instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government, any State or Territorial Government, authorized to make investigations or inspections pertaining to health or safety in coal mines, if the agency or instrumentality concerned consents to such utilization. The Secretary of the Interior may reimburse any such Federal agency or instrumentality for the services rendered by it out of any funds made available to him for the execution of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to strike out section 8, as follows:

Sec. 8. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, create and establish an advisory committee to exercise consultative functions, when required by the Secretary, in connection with the administration of this act. The said committee shall be composed of representatives of coal-mine owners and of representatives of coal-mine workers in equal number. The members of said committee shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior without regard to the civil-service laws, and shall receive such compensation for their services as the Secretary may fix, not to exceed $10 for each day actually spent in the work of the committee, together with such necessary traveling and other expenses as may be allowed by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, new section 8, line 19, after the word "appointed", to strike out "and to prescribe the powers, duties, and responsibilities of all officers and employees engaged in the administration of this act: Provided, however, That in the selection of persons for appointment as coal-mine inspectors under this act due consideration shall be given to the experience of the applicant in underground mine work, and in detailing coal-mine inspectors to the inspection and investigation of individual mines due consideration shall be given to their experience in underground mine work in the mining area where such mine is located"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to appoint, subject to the civil-service laws, such officers and employees as he may deem requisite for the administration of this act; to fix, subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the compensation of officers and employees so appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the sections will be renumbered by the clerk.

That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to section 9 which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is"; and in line 6 to strike out "such sums as may be necessary for the due" and insert "a sum not to exceed $25,000 annually."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. May I ask the clerk to state the amendments again. They were not very clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendments.

The amendments were again stated.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, what I seek to do is to strike out the unlimited authorization and provide that not more than $25,000 annually shall be authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, if we limit it to $25,000 that would not bind the Appropriations Committees of Congress in the future. Let me say that if we are going to have inspection of the coal mines, $25,000 would not begin to cover it. In the State of Montana there are approximately six or seven different coal districts. There are many coal districts in Pennsylvania, in Kentucky, in Ohio, and in other States of the country. I would not have any objection to limiting the amount, but I think $25,000 would be entirely inadequate.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Montana was present, but we have heard some very eloquent speeches by very distinguished gentlemen, some of whom have been governors of their respective States, praising the fine work of mine protection under the laws of their States and the manner in which those laws are now being enforced. Furthermore, the Senators in charge of this bill have stated that its execution would not require much money.

Mr. WHEELER. I know in my own State the laws in reference to coal mines are being well executed, but, on the other hand, if we are going to have this inspection I am sure that $25,000 would not possibly cover it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. REED. The member of the Mines and Mining Committee did not undertake to determine the cost. I think the substitution of the word "is" for the word "are," as proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, is a very good suggestion. I think the Senator from Montana will agree with me that he would rather leave the amount of money to be appropriated for the administration of this bill, if enacted, to the Appropriations Committee, which could hold suitable hearings and interview the proper officials and determine the amount. As a member of the Mines and Mining Committee that reported the bill, I frankly say I do not know what the amount should be.

Mr. WHEELER. That was my own thought about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Montana, who says that putting a limitation of not over $25,000 would not prevent the Appropriations Committee from appropriating more. I do not know what authority they would have to make the appropriation if we wrote in the law a limitation that not more than $25,000 in any one year could be appropriated.

Mr. WHEELER. One Congress cannot bind the next Congress with reference to legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. I appreciate that the Congress could amend this law.

Mr. WHEELER. I think they could change the amount without amending the law, because of the fact that one Congress cannot bind another Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I have the floor. I will yield to the Senator in just a second.

Even if we took the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi with reference to the matter, certainly we should not limit every Congress for the next 50 or 100 years to $25,000 with reference to this matter. We ought to have some experience with the administration of the law and find out the amount necessary, and we ought to call before the Appropriations Committee the people who know something about it and ask them for their views with reference to it, and let the Appropriations Committee appropriate the necessary amount.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi in interpreting the language which he offers as a limitation on the authority of Congress to appropriate money; and in any appropriation bill which exceeded that amount the excess would be subject to a point of order, because the excess had not been authorized.

That is an additional reason why I cannot support the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, because, if we limit the authorization in this bill, before any more can be appropriated Congress must amend the limitation of the authorization so that the Appropriations Committee will be authorized to bring in a provision carrying a larger amount.

I agree with the Senator from Montana that nobody can tell how much this inspection will cost. We hope it will not be expensive; but a limitation of $25,000 would not permit the employment of more than a dozen inspectors at $2,000 per year, which, I should say, would be the minimum we would expect to pay any competent inspector.

Mr. WHEELER. It would not permit the employment of that many.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the employment of 12 inspectors to inspect all the coal mines in the United States would not be an efficient administration of this act.

Mr. WHEELER. Not only that, but their expenses would have to be paid.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Mississippi will consider a suggestion, I think what we can accomplish, and what there is no objection to from my viewpoint, would be the following: Instead of his amendment limiting the amount to $25,000, so that the Appropriations Committee could never exceed it without an amendment of the authority, if the bill were amended on page 8, section 8, so as to read—

The Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to appoint, subject to the civil-service laws, and within the appropriations provided therefor, such officers and employees—

Then the number provided for each year in the appropriation could be appointed; and that, it seems to me, would accomplish what is desired.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator. I will also say that, if we are going to limit the appropriation, it seems to me we should not limit it for more than 1 year, because no one in this body knows at this time just how many employees will be needed. If 12 men were appointed, they could not possibly do the job we want to have done, because certainly they could not be paid less than $2,000 per year, and then their traveling expenses would have to be paid. We should simply be making the bill ineffective by limiting the total expenditure to $25,000 per year. We might just as well not pass any legislation at all.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. In Pennsylvania at the present time the law provides for 26 bituminous-coal inspectors at salaries in excess of $3,000 per year, and 24 anthracite inspectors. We spend over $400,000 per year in the inspection of coal mines in Pennsylvania. I think we have the best law and the best inspection. So far as I know, the operators in Pennsylvania are not objecting to this legislation to any great extent; and, as I said awhile ago, the same persons who objected to the terms of this bill are now delaying the completion of the hearings on the Guffey coal bill.

For the information of the Senator from Mississippi and my other colleagues, I should also like to say that this bill was drafted by the Bureau of Mines, and sent by the Bureau of Mines to the committee, and submitted through the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Bureau of Mines recommend this legislation?

Mr. GUFFEY. They did.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the committee?

Mr. GUFFEY. I do not know that they did before the committee, but I know they drafted the legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Was any testimony taken before the committee?

Mr. NEELY. No; the Bureau of Mines did not have any representative before the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that we have a great many coal operators in my State. I have not heard from a single coal operator in protest against this bill. Not a single soul has ever suggested to me that he had any opposition to it, and I certainly think I would have heard from them if they had had any opposition to it. On the other hand, there has been a demand for it upon the part of the coal miners in my State, saying that they thought it necessary to have the bill enacted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Montana that we received the other day a Budget message which is of the utmost importance in character; and the more legislation we pass here authorizing appropriations, the more it is going to come back to plague the Senate and the House before we adjourn, either in relation to increasing the national debt or in relation to piling on additional taxes.

So it seems to me we ought to proceed as conservatively as possible. I so often hear that word that I like to use it, because I sometimes feel honored when it is said that I am somewhat conservative; but there ought to be a limitation on this authorization, and no limitation is carried in it. So far as that is concerned, if Mr. Ickes should obtain the approval of the President he could come before the appropriations Committee and request $500,000,000 for this job, and the authorization for it would be here.

I think there ought to be a limitation; that is all. If $25,000 is not enough, let us make it $50,000. Let us have a little harmony.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it seems to me any limitation on the amount in this bill should be confined to the first year. Then the Department will have a chance to study the matter and find out how much money is required to administer the act. Certainly nobody thinks Mr. Ickes would be able to run away with the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, and I do not believe he would be able to run away with the Appropriations Committee of the House, even if he wanted to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will modify my amendment so as to authorize $25,000 during the fiscal year 1941, and thereafter $50,000 annually.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I beg the Senator from Mississippi not to insist upon that amendment. Nobody can tell now what it is going to cost to administer this bill. We all hope it will not cost very much. Nobody is going to be in so good a position to say what should be appropriated as the Appropriations Committee will be after they have had before them the proper persons, and have obtained the proper information.

I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist upon an amendment fixing an amount. I think we can safely trust the Appropriations Committee to hold the appropriation down to the minimum amount that it finds to be necessary for the administration of the bill. If we put a limitation of $100,000 in the bill we might find it was too much.

I agree with the Senator from Montana that a limitation of the amount to $25,000 would make the bill absurd. We spend more than that in the State of Kansas in the inspection of coal mines. We are not a great coal-mining State, and yet we have about 8 or 10 mine inspectors. I do not exactly remember the number. That is, we have a chief inspector and deputy inspectors, and we spend a great deal more than $25,000.

I do not expect the Government of the United States to duplicate the inspection in the States that have good laws. I think they will pass by Kansas and Pennsylvania and some of the other States without paying much attention to them; but I think it would be a mistake to impose a limitation, and I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist upon trying to insert any amount, be it large or small, in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question, because he is usually willing to cooperate. The Senator has stated that no estimate is given as to the cost of administration involved in this bill. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. REED. So far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. HARRISON. So far as the record shows. That is what other Senators say. Would the Senator be willing just to let this matter lie in abeyance until we can obtain from the Secretary of the Interior some estimate as to what amount he wants to have placed in the bill?

Mr. REED. No; I should like to dispose of this matter today. I have voted, and the Senator knows that I have voted, with the Appropriations Committee, and usually take its recommendations; and I stand here today and say that I will take on this bill the recommendations and the amount fixed by the Appropriations Committee after it has adequate information from the people who know.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I do not want to continue the debate. I hope that we may have a vote at once. But I remind the friends of the proposed legislation that a vote for the amendment is equivalent to a vote against the bill. It will be utterly worthless if the amendment is adopted.

There are 6,000 mines in the United States to be investigated and examined; and, of course, as the Senator from Montana has said, $25,000 is simply a ridiculous sum to suggest as compensation for this service. There ought to be no limitation in the bill. The amount should be left to the Appropriations Committee. With Members like the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] on the Appropriations Committee, there is not the slightest danger that Mr. Ickes or anyone else will obtain a greater appropriation than the facts justify and the case demands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, just a word. I always find it unpleasant to oppose any amendment offered by my friend the Senator from Mississippi, but I am compelled to oppose this one, because I think it is unusual, in a bill of this character, to fix a limitation on the amount that the Appropriations Committee may recommend for its administration. It is not done in 1 case out of 20, as I recall the legislative history of such bills. I entirely agree that we cannot tell what this bill will cost until there has been some experience in its administration.

I do not think the appropriation of $25,000 would be of any value, if it is to cost anything at all to do this work, because there will have to be a sufficient number of inspectors to go into all the mines once a year. It would mean that they would be all-time employees, that they would have no vacations, in all likelihood. A dozen inspectors, which number would consume the entire $25,000, to say nothing about traveling expenses, would not be able to get around during the year and inspect all the mines.

I think this amendment should be rejected, and if it is rejected, unless someone else shall offer an amendment, I will offer one in section 8, so as to make the section read:

The Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to appoint, subject to the civil-service laws, and within the appropriations provided therefor—

And so forth. That would leave it each year to the Committee on Appropriations to determine how many of these inspectors could be appointed, and I think that should be a fair settlement of the matter. If the Senator from Mississippi could accept that proposal, so that the matter would be left each year to the Committee on Appropriations, he might feel that he could withdraw his amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I do not consider myself as being in charge of the bill, the Senator from West Virginia having introduced the bill. I merely happen to be a member of the committee which considered it and reported it, but if the Senator from West Virginia will agree, so far as I have any authority I shall be very happy to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky and agree that the language he suggests shall be written into the bill. What was the language?

Mr. BARKLEY. "Within the appropriations provided therefor," so that the Secretary of the Interior could not appoint anyone beyond the appropriations provided by Congress for the purpose.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior undoubtedly would not appoint anyone who was not within the purview of the appropriations, anyway, so I shall not prolong the agony by resisting the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I have heretofore suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 15, after the word "laws" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "and within the appropriations therefor" and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "coal" wherever it appears.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me briefly recall the declared objectives of the bill. They are to assist those engaged in hazardous occupations by eliminating the occupational diseases commonly incident to work in mines. The conditions which it is desired to remedy do not exist only in coal mines—they exist in a great many other mines—and we can accomplish the entire objective by merely striking the word "coal" from the bill wherever it appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2420) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry Army nominations and withdrawing a nomination, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar passed over at the time of the last call of the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jessie B. Searle to be postmaster at Redrock, Okla.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the last call of the Executive Calendar the nomination of Jessie B. Searle was passed over at the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I do not know whether the circumstances have been altered which resulted in the nomination being passed over, but I suggest that it still be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry Slattery, of South Carolina, to be Administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lawrence Westbrook, of Texas, to be regional director in region VI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That concludes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Spera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Master, whose heart is fatherly and pitying, we pray Thee to inspire us that the tides of Thy spirit may bring to us cleansing, refreshment, and power; enable us to hold high the honor of the soul. Teach us the lesson that Thou wouldst have us learn—the virtue of humility, the nature of real wealth, and that life is more than meat. O Heavenly Father, these are the virtues that will enable us to regain our lost estate and our self-mastery.

Remember the youth, dear Lord, who crowd the schools of our country. Allow no barriers of security to be broken down nor habits to creep in to weaken the strength of their characters. Oh, keep and shelter all those boys and girls who crowd through the gates of the city to face the temptations and struggles of city life. Do Thou hear the prayers from the home altars of hillside and prairie, prayed on behalf of them who have left their own firesides. We beseech Thee, Heavenly Father, that the youth of our land may find their way to the church of the living God and to the altar of prayer. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On January 13:

H. R. 6832. An act to provide for the protection of witnesses appearing before any department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, or the Congress of the United States.

On January 17:

H. R. 884. An act to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 3051. An act for the relief of certain workers performing emergency work at Cairo, Ill., in the Ohio River flood of 1937;

H. R. 3363. An act for the relief of the American Insurance Co. of New Jersey;

H. R. 3912. An act for the relief of the heirs of John Cauley, deceased;

H. R. 4813. An act for the relief of the estates of Marie R. Morkovsky and Alphons Morkovsky, both deceased;

H. R. 5369. An act for the relief of Maj. Noe C. Killian;

H. R. 5919. An act to provide for the refunding of the bonds of municipal corporations and public-utility districts in the Territory of Alaska, to validate bonds which have heretofore been issued by a municipal corporation or any public-utility district in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6804. An act for the relief of George E. Miller; and

H. R. 7327. An act for the relief of the Nevada Silica Sands, Inc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include therein a bill which I am introducing to extend opportunities at Annapolis and West Point for the sons of disabled war veterans.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I trust the gentleman from Connecticut will not insist upon his request. So many similar requests occurred last year that I had to make the announcement that when there was a legislative program in the House for that day I would object to speeches being extended in the RECORD before consideration of the legislative program. I would much prefer that the gentleman extend his remarks in the Appendix.

Mr. SHANLEY. Or I might ask for a special order at the end of the proceedings today.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; the gentleman could do that.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my previous request and ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative business for the day and any other special order that may have been entered I may address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE ARSENE P. PUJO

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I announce the death of Hon. Arsene P. Pujo, former Representative from the Seventh Congressional District of Louisiana, Democrat and eminent statesman of the Theodore Roosevelt era.

As a Member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Pujo represented the people of the district whom I have the great honor to represent at this time. The older Members of this body will remember the splendid service which he rendered here, particularly his services as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and subcommittee investigating the Money Trust in 1912.

Mr. Pujo was born at Rose Bluff on the Calcasieu River, a few miles below Lake Charles, La., on December 16, 1861, the son of Paul Pujo and Eloise Minerva LeBleu Pujo. His father, Paul Pujo, was born at Tarbes, Hautes-Pyrénées, France, May 4, 1815. Pascal Pujo, his grandfather, was a soldier in Napoleon's armies. Rose Margaret de Broca, grandmother of Arsene P. Pujo, was a daughter of Count Paul Francois de Broca, of Tieste, Hautes-Pyrénées, France.

Educated in the public and private schools of Lake Charles, former Congressman Pujo was admitted to the bar in 1886, and practiced in Lake Charles until his demise, January 1, 1940. In 1889 he married Miss Gussie Brown, of Orange, Tex., and of this union were born his two surviving daughters—Mrs. Elaine Pujo Riley, wife of W. Boatner Riley, and Mrs. Mona Pujo Molter, wife of Col. Bennett Molter, both of New Orleans.

Elected a Member of the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Seventh Louisiana District, this able statesman, whose name was a household word throughout America at the turn of the century, served in Congress from March 3, 1903, until his retirement in March 1913. He is best remembered for his leadership in the so-called Money Trust investigation of 1912, conducted by the Banking and Currency Committee and a subcommittee thereof, over both of which he presided as chairman. This was the climax of the Lake Charles man's brilliant career in national politics, as he retired at the end of his term of the Sixty-second Congress, and the data assembled and the report made to Congress by the Pujo committee showed plainly the necessity of remedial financial and monetary legislation as a means of preventing financial panics.

The investigation, for which Samuel Untermyer was engaged as counsel for the committee, continued after Mr. Pujo's retirement from Congress in 1913 under the chairmanship of CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, and resulted in the Federal Reserve Act.

Distinguished by devotion to duty, mastery of details, a friendly manner, and the respect in which he was held by political friend and foe, Arsene Pujo bore with becoming grace the honors which were awarded his industry and ability. A consistent Democrat, intimates declare he was a man of individualistic views. His loyalty to his constituents can best be summed up in the simple phrase, "servant and agent of the people."

I speak for the entire Louisiana delegation in endorsing the prominent and useful life which former Representative Pujo so richly enjoyed. He will be missed by the State which honored him many times, and his death is mourned by his many friends.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that because of illness my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] is unable to be present today.

EQUALIZATION OF SALARIES OF LETTER CARRIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2001) for the equalization of letter carriers, for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the occasion of the passing of one of our distinguished leaders, Dr. Kelly Miller, a great educator, and to include his last interview with Frederic Wile.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in recent months there has been a good deal of interest in a certain bill that I introduced providing for what I call a constitutional and scientific monetary system. A great many people have sent petitions in requesting that hearings be granted on this bill. On one occasion at least the notices of those petitions consumed several pages of the RECORD. Of course, the right of petition is guaranteed to the people by the Constitution itself, but I asked for this time in order to give some encouragement to my good friends, notably the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because today I have only 1 petition which has 1,131 names on it, the notice of which, however, will take only a tiny paragraph in the RECORD, but it indicates quite as much support to the bill. I want to extend my heartfelt thanks here before the House to Mr. Roy Howard, of Arcadia, who circulated this petition without even being asked to do so and without gaining one single thing for himself except the knowledge that he has signally served a just cause in which he, like myself, earnestly believes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution passed by the Farm-Labor Association of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two short opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to section 75 of the Bankruptcy Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to be permitted to quote from House reports and decisions of the courts in regard to Indian jurisdictional claims. I apprehend this will exceed the allowable limit, but it is within the $45 additional limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short weekly letter from a former Member of this body, Congressman Pettengill, on a subject that is uppermost in the minds of most of the American people, and I am sure it is uppermost in the minds of most of the Members of this House—the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio talk that I gave over the Columbia Broadcasting System on January 6.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 7]

Allen, La.	Dies	Johnson, Okla.	Randolph
Austin	Douglas	Kelly	Reece, Tenn.
Barton	Edmiston	Kirwan	Risk
Bell	Elliott	Knutson	Romjue
Boland	Evans	Lea	Sabath
Buckley, N. Y.	Fernandez	McDowell	Schwert
Byrne, N. Y.	Flannery	McGranery	Shannon
Byron	Folger	McKeough	Short
Casey, Mass.	Ford, Miss.	McMillan, Clara	Smith, Va.
Celler	Ford, Leland M.	Maclejewski	Somers, N. Y.
Chapman	Geyer, Calif.	Maloney	Steagall
Clark	Green	Mansfield	Sullivan
Cole, Md.	Gross	Merritt	Taylor
Collins	Hall, Leonard W.	Mouton	West
Creal	Hawks	Murdock, Ariz.	Wheat
Crosser	Hennings	Norton	Wigglesworth
Crowther	Hinshaw	O'Brien	Wolfenden, Pa.
Culkin	Hope	Osmer	Wolverton, N. J.
Darden	Jarrett	Parsons	Wood
Darrow	Jeffries	Plumley

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ARMY AIR CORPS EXHIBITION

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, you have all received invitations to attend the exhibition to be given by the Army Air Corps at Bolling Field tomorrow afternoon. There will be demonstrated there the latest developments in aircraft and aeronautical supplies. I hope as many of you will attend as can conveniently find it possible. You will find there the most modern military planes, and you will have an opportunity of seeing how the money that has been appropriated by the Congress for the expansion of the Air Corps is being expended.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] was not present during the quorum call just completed because of his presence at a meeting of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Labor Relations Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the National Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I made on the floor of the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution adopted by the Young Democrats Club of Sacramento.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, with the agreement of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6505) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. CELLER, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, Mr. GUYER of Kansas, and Mr. REED of Illinois.

GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 419) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1937, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1937, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "within 3 months" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "within 6 months."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until the gentleman makes some explanation of what the joint resolution covers.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution merely amends a similar resolution passed by the Congress 2 years ago by extending the time limit on the importation of articles free of tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition; and, by an amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means, a similar extension is provided for articles imported for purposes of exhibition at the New York World's Fair. This merely authorizes an extension of time, which is made necessary at this time by reason of the fact that the previous act will expire on January 29.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is not the exposition over?

Mr. HAVENNER. The exposition will be continued during 1940, as will the New York World's Fair.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does the passage of this resolution in any way, directly or indirectly, commit the Congress to any further appropriation of funds?

Mr. HAVENNER. It does not. It is presented merely for the purpose of enabling the Congress to consider any future legislation that may be submitted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The passage of this resolution will not be construed by my colleague as any intimation whatever that Congress will be obligated to appropriate any additional funds?

Mr. HAVENNER. It will not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if the goods on which the tariff is relented are used for commercial purposes on the exposition grounds? For instance, are they used for serving lunches or serving drinks to the people in competition with the restaurant facilities in that area, and is private profit derived as a result of the sale of the articles on which the tariff is removed?

Mr. BUCK. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from California permit me to answer that question?

Mr. HAVENNER. I shall be pleased to have the gentleman answer the question.

Mr. BUCK. No duties are abrogated or removed. As soon as a sale is made on or off the exposition grounds, the duty must be paid on the article sold. However, the importers who brought in their goods for exhibition have 3 months after the close of the two expositions either to remove the goods involved and return them to the country of exportation or to destroy them. This period expires on the 29th of this month. It is desired to permit the importers to retain their goods in the United States, under the present condition of paying duty when a sale is made, until the reopening of the two expositions.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from California if this will in any way cause the Members of Congress to realize that the delegation from California will ask us for an additional appropriation for the fair in California?

Mr. BUCK. I believe the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER] has already answered that question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object in order to ask a question, Mr. Speaker, I see from the press that the Communist Soviet Government is withdrawing from the fair. If this resolution is enacted, will the Soviet Communist Government still be permitted to bring its exports into America for sale under this resolution?

Mr. HAVENNER. As far as I know, the Soviet Government did not bring any exhibits to San Francisco, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I presume that this resolution would apply to them. The resolution as drawn applies, as far as San Francisco is at present concerned, to the Latin-American republics, China, and the Philippines. I believe, however, that it may be amended in order to apply to all foreign governments.

Mr. BUCK. Further reserving the right to object in order to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin, may I say that I understand the Russian exhibits, whatever they may be, have already been removed or will be removed shortly. The Russian imports that were exhibited at New York—there were none at San Francisco—have either already been shipped back to Russia or will be returned shortly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If this resolution extending the time becomes law, the Russian Government will not come under it, except for actual exhibits at the fair, and since they have withdrawn from the fair, they will not be using this as a vehicle to sell their goods here in America.

Mr. BUCK. That is my understanding, but even if they did sell them, they would have to pay the full duty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 3, insert:
"Sec. 2. That the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the New York World's Fair 1939, New York City, N. Y., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes,' approved August 16, 1937, as amended, is amended by striking out the words 'within 3 months' wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'within 6 months.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio speech therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by John W. Carmody, Public Works Administrator.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE LATE WILLIAM I. SIROVICH

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a resolution adopted by the Committee on Patents in executive session this morning on the death of our late colleague, Hon. William I. Sirovich, of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

RESOLUTION BY THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Whereas in the recent recess of Congress the Committee on Patents has suffered the loss of its late chairman, the Honorable WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, whose guidance and counsel has contributed so greatly to the success of its legislative program: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, First, that the Committee on Patents of the Seventy-sixth Congress record its appreciation for the splendid services rendered it by its late chairman, the Representative of the Fourteenth Congressional District of New York in the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States;

Second, that the Committee on Patents is deeply sensible of the fact that in the death of the Honorable WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, its late chairman, the Nation has suffered the loss of one of its most loyal and self-sacrificing, high-minded, and humanitarian citizens, an uncompromising champion of democracy and freedom; the House of Representatives of the United States has been bereft of an enterprising, clear-thinking, cultivated, and industrious Member, passionately devoted to the welfare of his fellow man; and this committee has been deprived of a spirited supporter and tireless sponsor of legislation designed to protect the rights of the author and the composer, and to foster the development of the arts and sciences in America, as well as the best interests of all the various subjects falling to the jurisdiction of this committee;

Third, that the Committee on Patents will miss the generous support and sensible counsel of the Honorable WILLIAM I. SIROVICH in its deliberations;

Fourth, that the chairman of the Committee on Patents is hereby authorized to request that a copy of this resolution be made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and Fifth, that the clerk of the Committee on Patents is hereby directed to make this resolution a part of the committee records and to transmit a copy of it to the family of the deceased.

Adopted by the Committee on Patents January 18, 1940.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech of I. W. Duggan, director of the southern division of the A. A. A., delivered before the American Farm Economic Association in Philadelphia, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD about the activities of the men arrested recently in New York in a plot against the United States, and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Observer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief article from the Cedar Rapids Gazette.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. David Lynn, which was prepared at my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief editorial on the reciprocal-trade agreements appearing in the Omaha World-Herald, an independent newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 571)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3087 (76th Cong., 1st sess.), an act for the relief of the Gdynia America Line, Inc., of New York City, N. Y.

This bill authorizes and directs the payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Gdynia America Line, Inc., of the sum of $2,520, in full payment for duplicate revenue stamps purchased and attached to the manifests of the motorship Batory, belonging to the corporation, the original revenue stamps purchased for this purpose having been lost or destroyed in some unknown manner. The bill also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to require the corporation to give a surety bond to the United States in the amount of $2,520 to indemnify the Government in the event the original revenue stamps are recovered, the bond to run for such period of time as the Secretary shall prescribe.

The act of May 12, 1900, relating to the redemption of stamps, as amended by section 1013 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1924, and now embodied in section 3304 of the Internal Revenue Code, provides in part as follows:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, may, upon receipt of satisfactory evidence of the facts, make allowance for or redeem such of the stamps, issued under authority of law, to denote the payment of any internal-revenue tax, as may have been spoiled, destroyed, or rendered useless or unfit for the purpose intended, or for which the owner may have no use, or which through mistake may have been improperly or unnecessarily used * * * but no allowance or redemption shall be made in any case until the stamps so spoiled or rendered useless shall have been returned to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or until satisfactory proof has been made showing the reason why the same cannot be returned; or, if so required by the said Commissioner, when the person presenting the same cannot satisfactorily trace the history of said stamps from their issuance to the presentation of his claim as aforesaid.

Since the company could not produce the stamps, nor make satisfactory proof showing that they were destroyed, and hence could not be produced, as required by the provisions of law above quoted, and the regulations promulgated thereunder, a claim filed by the company for redemption of the stamps was rejected.

The requirements of the above-quoted act and the regulations thereunder are for the purpose of protecting the revenue. Unused documentary stamps in circulation, even though temporarily lost or misplaced, may, if found, be used to satisfy a stamp tax liability; therefore, to refund money paid to collectors for temporarily lost or misplaced stamps would open the door to frauds upon the revenue. A knowledge of the denomination and serial number of such stamp would in itself afford no guaranty that they would not be later used by the finder or by some innocent purchaser.

While a surety bond such as the Secretary of the Treasury is directed by the bill to require of the company might appear to constitute an adequate safeguard if the lost stamps are subsequently found by the company, and used by it, it is obvious that the bond would be ineffective if the stamps were found and used by other persons, as the method of field verification in stamp taxes does not ordinarily include a recordation of the serial numbers appearing on stamps of large denomination.

I have on prior occasions expressed my belief that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve special classes of taxpayers from the uniform operation of the revenue laws. The circumstances stated above do not justify the exception made by H. R. 3087 to the uniform operation of the law and regulations relating to the redemption of internal revenue stamps.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES BILL, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922), with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, where will the Clerk begin to read?

The CHAIRMAN. On page 64, at the paragraph respecting the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, but the Clerk had already begun reading the next paragraph, involving the Smithsonian Institution, when the Committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. The Clerk had started the reading of it but had not completed it. Therefore, the Chair would hold that any amendments to the Security and Exchange Commission, that is to the second paragraph of that provision on page 64, would be in order. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this Security and Exchange Commission provision in the bill go by without comment, because the Committee on Appropriations seems to be the only place where any review of their activities is made. If you will read the report from that committee you will see there is not a very lengthy statement presented. The tables show how little new business for expansion has been registered. Unquestionably this Commission has been the greatest deterrent to business that we could possibly have devised. Though legislation may have been badly needed, there ought to be, by this time, some sort of a committee to go over their rules and regulations and their decisions to see whether or not the law ought not to be amended or clarified. I greatly deplore the fact that we cannot write legislation sufficient to deter wrongdoers, and then let the people aggrieved make complaint and the courts decide the issue. Rather have we set up a force of policemen on every corner, and no one is allowed to proceed unless he is first investigated.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will get me 3 extra minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot do that, I am afraid.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then I cannot yield. I always prefer to yield. We imagine these people who are involved and who, as they claim, are intimidated and terrorized, dare not make complaint. I have a scrapbook containing much comment on the activities of this Commission during the last several years. Always in a certain important Sunday newspaper there appears some complaint. There has been a panorama of changes in the chairmanship of that Commission. They do not seem to remain on any permanent footing of determination of their decisions and intentions. They now have arrived at a point where they seem in grave disagreement among themselves. There are close decisions that ought to be given attention by the framers of the law. The point I bring out is that while it is necessary for them under the law to act relating to former crookedness, and there was plenty of such, yet I notice that the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZPATRICK, in connection with this question before the committee, said, in effect: "Perhaps we ought to let bygones be bygones, and look out for the future."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot yield now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the gentleman mentioned my name.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman let me have 5 minutes?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have nothing to do with the time.

Mr. GIFFORD. But the gentleman can get 5 minutes. All he has to do is to ask for it. Operating subsidiary companies today who have exchanged their stock in parent companies now being punished are writing me letters, and they are very much worried about it. But these parent companies must be put through the wringer, because the law says so. I bring this thought to your mind. Has it come to the point when you go into business and hire money at the bank, and when your notes come due, you must not pay the bank interest for renewal because you owe other creditors money? Are you stealing from your creditors if you pay the bank so as to keep your credit good with them and keep on doing business, even though your creditors are willing? Shall policemen come in and say that you are stealing from these creditors if you pay this discount for renewal at the bank? You say that that is a farfetched illustration. It is not farfetched at all. If policemen can go into these large corporations, they later may nose into your own business affairs and say that you should not do this and that, and, therefore, you must go into bankruptcy. I have enough material of complaints, but I do not want to criticize the present set-up of the Security and Exchange Commission. I think probably they are doing their duty in carrying out the law. My thought is, do not set up any more policemen. Make all the law necessary, and, if people cannot live up to the law, let the complaint come from the people aggrieved, and then let the Department of Justice and the courts act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I did not use the words "let bygones be bygones," but I did refer to transactions that took place in Wall Street that should be stopped. There is not any question about that. I asked him if there was not more money invested in speculation than in real investment. That was my question to the Chairman of the Commission. I think the act is a good act, and it is about time to stop gambling in Wall Street. I think if any illegal action on the part of people in Wall Street can be found, whether committed yesterday or a year ago, they should be prosecuted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to emphasize, so that it may not be overlooked, the fact that even our distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], at the conclusion of his address, said that the Securities and Exchange Commission, as presently constituted, was doing a good job. I will submit to the gentleman that when you can get commendation for one of the administration's agencies from our good friend from Massachusetts, that is the very highest order of commendation. Our friend gave them a clean bill of health.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman complains about the greatest gambling house in the world, Wall Street. Are the local and State authorities incapable of putting that gambling house out of business, the way other communities put their gambling joints out of business?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The State in many instances has stepped in and stopped illegal operations, and is doing everything in its power to prevent any kind of fraud.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not a fact that if we had had the Securities and Exchange Commission, such as we have now, back in 1915, we never would have had what did happen in 1929?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Positively, because stocks in Wall Street that had never paid a dividend went from $60 to $850 a share before the crash came in 1929. If we had had that Commission at that time, such a thing could not have happened. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words in order to reply to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who complains that the Securities and Exchange Commission is not able to remedy the wrongs that have been built up for the last 30 years under the provisions of the law that permitted holding companies.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts and the Members on his side of the aisle had supported us when we passed the Securities and Exchange Act we would have put a stop to these ruthless and useless holding companies that are today sucking the economic lifeblood from the people of the United States and corrupting almost every State in the Union.

When we were fighting to pass that bill they had Hopson hid out here, protecting him, while he was lobbying and spending money to defeat the so-called "death sentence," and today that great utilities empire is found to be bankrupt, and Hopson has been taking a rake-off of $3,000,000 a year, which the people were paying in overcharges for electricity.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] complains at what we are doing when we are wringing the water out of these holding companies, to the benefit of the people he represents. The people in Massachusetts last year were overcharged $50,000,000 for electric light and power, according to the Ontario rates. All taxes, State, municipal, and Federal, including all cash contributions and free services rendered by the power companies in Massachusetts, amounted to only about $16,000,000, leaving a clear overcharge of $34,000,000 wrung from the helpless power consumers of the State of Massachusetts in 1 year. Those are the people the Securities and Exchange Commission is supposed to protect.

Throughout the entire New England States they were overcharged last year $93,000,000. All the taxes paid by all the private power companies in New England, including cash contributions and free services, amounted to only $26,000,000, leaving $67,000,000 wrung by these ruthless utilities, including these bloodsucking holding companies, from the overburdened power consumers throughout the New England States. There was an average of more than $10,000,000 a year wrung from those people of each one of the New England States. The gentleman from Massachusetts, instead of criticizing it, had better be urging the Securities and Exchange Commission to enforce the law and put a stop to that kind of racketeering. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the gentleman from Massachusetts very carefully and, as I understood his comment, he did not in any way, shape, or form take exception to the kind of policing of the operations and the transactions of security exchanges that have been referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi. If I understood his remarks properly, and I think I did, I believe the thing he was complaining about was that here is another type of regulation set up on the basis of rules that can be changed from one minute to the next; in other words, that legitimate business enterprise cannot go into the field of finance and know whether the rules they start out with are going to be rules in existence as the financing progresses. This condition has stifled business activity and increased unemployment. With that idea in mind he was advocating that there should be regulation, that wrongdoers should be punished, that there should be a limitation upon their activities, but that these limitations should be prescribed in terms of law, and therefore not subject to change in the middle of the game or the transaction. He is advocating a restriction, and regulation, and a police power in this field of activity on the basis of rules made by law and not regulations issued at the whim of men in some bureau—a government of laws rather than a government of men.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman realize that the rules of the Securities and Exchange Commission, under the three acts that have been passed, have not yet been published? For 5 years they have not been published.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes; I believe that is true. Not only that, but the net result of the last 10 or 12 decisions made by them seems to be the spread of a great deal of confusion in the business world.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think the gentleman has correctly stated my purpose. I criticized not the basic principle underlying the law but the nature of its enforcement and the kind of rules the enforcing body makes, because they create so much doubt and trouble. I pleaded that we might have laws which could be enforced, but not a police force to which you must always go or which can step in at any minute and dictate your business and bring about that feeling of terrorism that perhaps has been brought about. I tried to bring out the claims of a great deterrent to business that its administration has brought about.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if I properly interpreted his remarks?

Mr. GIFFORD. Indeed the gentleman did. The gentleman from Mississippi answered in no way the complaint that I made. I defend nothing of his description of misdeeds that took place in these holding companies, but I do worry about the operating companies at this moment because of the bankruptcy order. Can there not be some relief? Must our investors in local companies suffer by such bankruptcy? Can we do nothing to save their investment? I have taken the matter up with the Commission, and they tried to reassure me that the operating companies in the end will be put on a sounder basis. Let us hope.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. As I understand the gentleman's theory, it is that specific rules should be prescribed in terms of law and not left to the whims and changing minds of individuals from day to day.

Mr. GIFFORD. Let the parties aggrieved make the complaint before the Department of Justice rather than have a constant police force which can meddle at any time. We have had too much of it and are now witnessing the evils that flow from it, about which I have talked so many times to the House.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. And under that method of operation we advocate just as strongly as anyone else that the wrongdoers be thwarted and punished.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 63, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "rubber gloves."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment and call the attention of the Chair to the fact that on yesterday when the House adjourned the Clerk had entirely finished reading the item covering the Securities and Exchange Commission and had read the first two lines of the Smithsonian Institution paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The point of order is sustained, but on this ground: The Clerk had completed the reading of all of page 63, that part of it dealing with the Securities and Exchange Commission being a separate paragraph. The Clerk had also completed the reading of lines 1 and 2, on page 64, dealing with printing and binding. The only line that is now subject to amendment would be line 3, which gives the total appropriation for the Securities and Exchange Commission. As the gentleman has offered an amendment on page 63, it is clearly not in order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. After the Clerk had read lines 3 and 4 and was starting on line 5, how can it be in order to offer an amendment for any part of the Securities and Exchange paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hold that the Clerk would have been required to finish the reading of the entire paragraph on the Smithsonian Institution in order to preclude an amendment being offered to the preceding paragraph of the bill. As the Chair stated, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 64, at the end of line 3, insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended to purchase rubber gloves."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, after the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] in defense of this commission, I would think he would rise in his place and ask that this amendment be adopted so that this commission will not have rubber gloves, which I understand might be used, to gently handle the multimillionaire New Deal bucket-shop operators and stock speculators who are now headlines in the big New Deal show.

May I respectfully suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that Wall Street is in New York. The State of New York and the city of New York could and should have regulated Wall Street. It is indefensible for leading Democrats to denounce the former Republican national administration in Washington, D. C., as responsible for the robberies and other reprehensible conduct by the crooks, sharks, and wolves of Wall Street. For former officials of the State of New York, such as President Roosevelt, the former Governor of New York, who had jurisdiction with reference to regulating Wall Street under State laws, to denounce the Federal Government in Washington for the sins of Wall Street is as logical as the New York police department denouncing the police department of the District of Columbia because of a gangster murder committed on the sidewalks of New York.

I can well realize why all the stock-market debacle and swindle was permitted by Mr. Roosevelt, who was Governor of New York at the time. Barney Baruch, the multimillionaire ace New Dealer, was one of the biggest Wall Street bucket-shop operators of the country. Go into the debates had on the floor of the Congress and read the motion-picture industry speeches of the late Dr. Sirovich and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]; then get Moody's Industrials and observe the hook-up in connection with the R. K. O. swindle. You will find that Joseph Kennedy, the multimillionaire New Dealer, was the chief racketeer in that manipulation. The gentleman from Mississippi denounced Mr. Hopson. Are you going to try to throw Hopson in the Republican political bed? When congressional investigation committee subpoena servers were looking for Mr. Hopson and went to Mr. Hopson's Washington headquarters, who did they find there? Another multimillionaire New Deal official, Mr. Chip Roberts, who was in Mr. Hopson's lobby headquarters in the Nation's Capital. Who else? The President's own secretary, Mr. McIntyre, was also found enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Hopson's Washington headquarters. And yet by innuendo and indirection at least the New Deal leaders are continually blaming the Republican Party for all of Mr. Hopson's sins of omission and commission. Remember that birds of a feather flock together even in Mr. Hopson's Washington headquarters.

With reference to the Power Trust, I may say to my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that your present new New Deal Attorney General, Mr. Robert Jackson, was a big Power Trust attorney before he jumped into the New Deal tent and began to promise to perform miracles in connection with trusts and financial racketeers while denouncing Wall Street speculators, Power Trust, and other alleged "economic royalists" and special interests.

Mr. Chairman, in all sincerity, can any Member of this Congress or this committee rise in his place, and tell us why, in view of our stupendous national debt, our almost bankrupt taxpayers' Treasury should be called upon for funds to furnish rubber gloves for the Securities and Exchange Commission? I now yield for an answer as to how many gloves are going to be purchased and what are they going to be used for. I yield and pause for a reply.

Mr. Chairman, since no one seems to know why we should be called upon to appropriate funds for rubber gloves for the Securities and Exchange Commission I sincerely hope and expect that my amendment will be unanimously agreed to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—yeas 36, nays 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

For expenses of the general administrative office; for the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries; for continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii and the excavation and preservation of archeologic remains; for maintenance of the Astrophysical Observatory, including assistants, and making necessary observations in high altitudes; for cases, furniture, fixtures, and appliances required for the exhibition and safekeeping of collections; and for administration of the National Collection of Fine Arts; including personal services, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, traveling expenses, including not exceeding $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the institution when specifically authorized by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; uniforms for guards, supplies and equipment, preparation of manuscripts, drawings, and illustrations, supplying of heating, lighting, electrical, telegraphic, and telephone service, repairs and alterations of buildings, shops, sheds, and approaches, and other necessary expenses, $386,260.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to take only a minute to call the attention of the Committee to the hearings on page 421, where you will find what the rubber gloves referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] are for. I asked a question about the rubber gloves in the hearing and was advised that they were for the use of employees who handle the multilithographic and photographic work in their duplicating unit, where certain chemicals in the inks are very poisonous. This has resulted in many of the employees' having received skin infections from handling the inks. As a result, there has been sickness and a loss of time. Claims for employees' compensation could far exceed the $12 which is involved in the purchase of the rubber gloves. Consequently, the committee did not delete the $12 item.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933", approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved August 31, 1935, and by the act approved July 26, 1939 (16 U. S. C., ch. 12a), including the continued construction of Chickamauga Dam; Hiwassee Dam; Kentucky Dam at Gilbertsville, Ky.; Watts Bar Dam; and for construction of a dam near Lenoir City, Tenn., and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, $40,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation and any unexpended balance on June 30, 1940, in the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1940", and the receipts of the Tennessee Valley Authority from all sources during the fiscal year 1941 (subject to the provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended), shall be covered into and accounted for as one fund to be known as the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1941", to remain available until June 30, 1941, and to be available for the payment of obligations chargeable against the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1940."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that they may be read and considered as one, since they are closely related.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may we first have the amendments read for the information of the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report both amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 68, lines 21 and 22, strike out "and for construction of a dam near Lenoir City, Tenn." and on page 69, line 8, after the word "field", strike out "$40,000,000" and insert "$39,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the two amendments be considered together?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the two amendments on the desk is, first, to strike out the authority for proceeding on a new dam at or near Lenoir City, Tenn., which is commonly known as the proposed Coulter Shoals Dam, and, second, to reduce the over-all appropriation from $40,000,000 to $39,000,000, thus taking out the $1,000,000 which was presented to the committee as the estimated cost of construction for the fiscal year 1941.

Let me say to the Committee that in order to get a clear-cut and comprehensive picture of this whole Tennessee Valley project you must envision the Mississippi River running down through the center of the country from north to south, and then envision the Ohio River coming in from the east, pouring in somewhere near Paducah, Ky., and Cairo, Ill. Then get this picture of the Tennessee Valley and the Tennessee River. It starts at a point about 20 miles below Paducah and comes down in a southerly direction, makes the form of a great horseshoe, and then tails off into a lot of rivulets and creeks and streams and small rivers some 650 miles beyond the mouth.

On that river we now have 10 completed dams. The over-all cost of them as submitted to the committee is about $535,000,000. We have expended and appropriated to date for the Tennessee Valley Authority over $270,000,000.

The language in the bill which I propose to strike out and the $1,000,000 by which I propose to reduce the over-all appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority would eliminate beginning construction on the new Coulter Shoals Dam, which is way up in the direction of Knoxville. My proposal to strike it from the bill and to strike the $1,000,000 from the bill is based on the ground, first, that I feel it is not necessary, and, second, I feel that some investigation is necessary before we go too much further in connection with the authority now exercised by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

There will be only two generating units at Coulter Shoals Dam and they will generate only 43,000 kilowatts. This is the smallest of all the units on the Tennessee Valley project.

In the second place, it was represented to us in the committee that this project will not be completed until 1944. The purpose of the $1,000,000 is to build the access road and the construction camp and do those other preliminary things that are a necessary prelude to the construction of the dam. We have a little over $600,000 invested in exploratory work for the proposed Coulter Shoals Dam. If you add this $1,000,000 it will be too late to withdraw from the project, and then we will have obligated the Federal Government for $28,500,000. If I had felt this to be absolutely necessary I would have made no effort to strike this item from the bill. I recognize that the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Tennessee project must go on, but it must not go on indiscriminately.

Let me make it clear and emphatic that the elimination of this dam and the amount requested for it for the fiscal year 1941 is in no way an effort to emasculate the T. V. A. program; nor is it an effort to stop or to hamper existing construction. Work has not yet started on the so-called Coulter Shoals Dam. If proof is needed to document that statement, I need only quote the language of the T. V. A. as submitted to the Appropriations Committee in its justification for the fiscal year 1941. On page 25 of that report the T. V. A. states very specifically that it is "requesting funds for Coulter Shoals Dam and Reservoir to provide for beginning construction." That report also states that T. V. A. expects the preliminary investigations, surveys, and designs to be sufficiently complete by the end of 1940 to permit construction. Since the preliminary reports are not yet complete, and since no construction has been undertaken, this would be the proper time to eliminate the new dam and the funds requested for 1941 until Congress can better evaluate this whole program. There is no wisdom in baling money into this project until we can get a better look at it and probably have a more authoritative investigation than has been available to the committee within the space of limited time.

Now, let me tell you the rest of the story. Here comes the Tennessee River, starting at Paducah, going down from the Gilbertsville Dam, 184 miles to the next dam, Chickamauga or Guntersville, and then on to Wheeler Dam, to Wilson Dam, to Hales Bar Dam, to Watts Bar Dam, the Hiwassee Dam on one of the tributaries, the Norris Dam on the Clinch River, and then this other dam, known as Coulter Shoals, for which they are asking $1,000,000 on which to start construction.

However, this is not the whole story, and if you will look at the specifications of the Tennessee Valley you will see that they asked the committee for funds last year under the general subject matter "of other river-development projects" for only $223,000. This year they ask nothing for that item, but look at the total. The estimate to complete other river-development projects will be $40,500,000, and if we go ahead with Coulter Shoals, it will be the signal to go ahead with related activities and other developments on the Little Tennessee, the Holston River, the Powell River, the French Broad River, and all those little tributary streams, way up in the southeastern section, and then you will have obligated the Federal Government for another $40,000,000.

Now, some might say to me that that is not the case. If you want some interesting reading you should get House Document No. 91, the Chattanooga Flood Control Program, a message from the President of the United States, and then read the conclusions on page 2. There are lots of conclusions, the whole flood control, enlarged storage basin, enhanced improvements on the upper reaches of these tributary streams; and they say in this report that it must be suitably distributed on the main tributaries including the Holston, the French Broad, and the Little Tennessee. Then it contains this language:

Since the Tennessee Valley Authority is already equipped for, and is charged with, unified operations of these reservoirs, it is the most logical agency for the operation of the entire flood-control development of the valley.

And we are getting ready now to stop, not at $535,000,000, but probably to obligate the Federal Treasury for perhaps as much as $100,000,000 more, because they are going to find new projects, new improvements of all kinds in these upper reaches of the Tennessee Valley.

It occurs to me it is time for the Congress to take a look at this thing. To show you how inadequate our investigations really are, when they come before a subcommittee, they bring their comptroller, their auditor, they bring all the directors of T. V. A.; they bring the General Counsel; they bring the consulting engineer and the chief engineer; they bring expert accountants and bookkeepers; and we, as members of the committee, will sit on the other side of the table and by dint of cross-examination seek to elicit the whole story. You cannot begin to get the story of T. V. A. from those who come to testify, and more often than not you will find that the replies have been slightly evasive, and you will sometimes find that information that ought to go into the RECORD will not be there, and they continue and proceed under the broad authority of the organic act whereby it is going to cost the taxpayers of this country plenty of money.

Now, they say to me, you would not demolish this construction program, and you would not disrupt the organization, would you? If that argument holds good, we might just as well keep 14,000 men on the force on account of the T. V. A., finish these other river developments in the northeast and then go down on some of the reaches of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. We might add another $500,000,000 to what has already been expended.

I am not alarmed about disrupting the construction organization. I would much rather kiss goodbye to the $600,000 already invested in Coulter Shoals and give the Congress and the country a chance to investigate and explore to the full, rather than obligate the taxpayers and the Federal Treasury to untold sums before we get through.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Dr. Morgan testified before the House Military Affairs Committee that they had selected already more than 100 sites for dams in the Tennessee Valley and that the program would probably cover 100 years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely; and when they speak of other river developments, with an over-all cost of $40,500,000 in addition to $28,000,000 for Coulter Shoals, it will be a total of almost $69,000,000. We are going to plunge this country into further obligations and regret it afterward, unless adequate investigation has been made.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that every dam and every electrical project in the Tennessee Valley is a self-liquidating project and the money will get back to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; if it will only last a thousand years, it may be liquidated.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it the gentleman's considered opinion that it would take 1,000 years to pay that money back?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I suggest that the gentleman read the consolidated balance sheet and find out what the revenues and expenditures are and then seek to amortize this cost and see the number of years it will take. If they can amortize this in 100 years, I will eat a portion of the dam.

LXXXVI—32

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will not it be paying back money, when the money being expended in Illinois for relief will never be paid back?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman wants to put it on a 100-year basis of a 200-year basis, all right. We will not last that long. Let the Members of this House here who are interested in flood control realize that under the economy urge now in the country there will not be adequate funds for flood control in other sections of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Here is a proposal to dump a great quantity of money for storage and flood-control purposes in one single section of the country, and meanwhile those who have been interested in flood control in other sections of the country are wondering where, under the President's budgetary message they may be able to find some funds for very useful and necessary projects in their sections of the country. I suggest that we eliminate Coulter Shoals from this bill. I suggest that we wait a little while in view of the fact that the engineers say it will not be ready until 1944 anyway and I suggest that we diminish the amount by $1,000,000, which is the million dollars for which construction shall be undertaken on the eleventh dam known as the Coulter Shoals Dam. I believe it is in the interest of economy. I believe it is in the interest of common sense, and I believe it is in the interest of fair play to the people and to the Federal Treasury and to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. While the gentleman is asking for a reduction of $1,000,000, we are still paying the Tennessee Valley $39,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely. It will get $39,000,000 under this bill, but let us stop this one item for the present and take another look at it.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, as the successor of Congressman Taylor from the Second District of Tennessee, I desire to address myself to this effort to stop the well-nigh accomplished program of the Tennessee Valley Authority at this stage. It is now an accomplished fact. The foundations have been laid, the superstructure has been erected, the walls of the house are up, and it is now proposed that we refrain from putting a roof on the house.

For more than 30 years the Engineering Corps of the United States Army has recommended making the Tennessee River navigable from Knoxville to its mouth at the Ohio. This dam at Coulter Shoals takes the place of 7 low dams heretofore recommended by the Army engineers. Knoxville is a city of 130,000 people. In my congressional district there are 11 counties, every one of which except 1 has within its borders great industrial enterprises. Within 16 miles of the city of Knoxville at Alcoa is one of the largest aluminum plants in the world. There is shipped to that plant from St. Louis, where the ore is reduced, more than 800,000 tons of aluminum pig per year, and there is shipped out and is being shipped to the airplane factories in California aluminum from Alcoa that is going into the fighting planes being built for the armed forces of this Nation. Tennessee and the Tennessee Valley, and especially the great industrial region around Knoxville with its coal mines and varied interests, have been waiting for more than a hundred years for a navigable stream. This dam will give it to them. This dam will not only make the Tennessee River navigable from Knoxville to its mouth at the Ohio, but it will make available additional electrical energy for which there is a market today, and let it not be forgotten, in that connection, that should the United States become involved in war, the Government has a right to recapture the energy produced by the Tennessee Valley Authority and manufacture nitrates for use in explosives. This is a necessary dam, a dam not only necessary for navigation purposes, but necessary in order to complete the power program of this great governmental institution. You have it. It is not a question of whether or not we are to have the Tennessee Valley Authority. We already have it. It is ours. It belongs to the people; it has been financed with Government funds. Let us complete it. Let us make it a paying proposition. In addition to that, all this talk about further projects on the upper reaches of the Holstein is a mere smoke screen. I know that there is no occasion for anything like that, and if it were proposed here, I would oppose it. I am talking about something that is feasible and practical and necessary. Talk about economy! We have already spent $600,000 in making preliminary surveys for this dam, and with the organized personnel and equipment now in the hands of the Tennessee Valley Authority, it can go forward with the construction of this dam at a saving of $1,000,000 to the people of this country. Therefore I say to you that in justice to that great region, in an effort to complete this great project, as a measure not only of flood control but looking to the development of that river for navigation, this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In connection with the gentleman's statement as to the necessity for this Coulter Shoals Dam, it is true, is it not, that this Coulter Shoals Dam is one of the original links in the system of dams contemplated when the Tennessee project was laid out?

Mr. JENNINGS. That is true. It would be like severing a link in a chain to leave it out and fail to construct it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And without the building of this dam not only the flood-control possibilities of the Tennessee Valley would be seriously hampered, but it would absolutely destroy navigation possibilities?

Mr. JENNINGS. Absolutely; to the eternal detriment of one of the greatest sections of this country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. With relation to the other river development activities, I read from page 27—

Mr. JENNINGS. Well, let us not look a hundred years in the future. Let us deal with the facts now before us. I am talking about Coulter Shoals Dam and not about a dam up at the headwaters of the river.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But if the gentleman will yield, on page 27 of the justification submitted to the committee for 1941, "Other river development projects, estimated total cost, $41,500,000," the T. V. A.'s own language.

Mr. JENNINGS. Let us take one thing at a time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming we postpone this for a year or two, would it not be more expensive than to go on and complete it now?

Mr. JENNINGS. It would cost in excess of $1,000,000 more if its construction should be delayed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Because all of the equipment is close by at the present time and it would all have to be moved, and it would cost twice as much.

Mr. JENNINGS. That is true. The machinery is there. The personnel is there. They can go forward at a saving of $1,000,000. Not only that, let me say to you Representatives from the farm belt, the finger of ridicule has been pointed at the fertilizer enterprise down there. I personally know, being not only a lawyer but a farmer, that they are doing a great work in the development of fertilizers, a work that will be of inestimable value to the farmers all over the country. So I urgently urge you members of this committee to vote down this attempt to emasculate and sabotage this great enterprise at this late date. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes instead of 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can have some agreement on the Tennessee Valley item. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto conclude in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does that allow each Member standing 5 minutes?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in view of the number of requests, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour.

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, will that give each person standing 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to state that.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. That is exclusive of the 10 minutes that has already been given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 minutes reserved, if the Chair would permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS to the amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Strike out "$39,000,000" and substitute in lieu thereof "$20,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to cut the appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority in this appropriation bill to $20,000,000. Now, if we are going to have economy—and I believe we are all agreed upon that as a principle—let us have it uniformly throughout the entire Nation. Here we have an example of this pet child of the administration being granted $1,000,000 increase in its appropriation over the appropriation of 1 year ago, when practically every other department in connection with this bill has been cut. We have had a cut of almost $15,000,000 from the public buildings outside the District of Columbia. That is a cut which applies to the entire United States, a cut in which we are all interested, a cut in which every community represented on this floor is interested. We have also had a cut in Federal aid to highways—a cut of $25,000,000. That is a cut which is taken from the entire United States.

We have also had a cut in secondary highways of $10,000,000. This is a cut which applies to every rural community in the United States—to the little feeder roads to the highways, to the farm-to-market roads, to the roads and facilities that the common people throughout the entire United States use.

We have also had a cut of $15,000,000 applied to the elimination of grade crossings. All over this Nation we have dreamed of and worked for the day when we can make the families of every Member of this House, the families of every father and mother all over the United States, safe from the terrible hazard of being run over by a train at a grade crossing; yet that is cut, and cut in favor of this favorite child of the administration, the T. V. A.

We have had hospitalization for veterans cut, and I call this to the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. We have had almost $2,000,000 cut from hospitalization for veterans in the United States, but the T. V. A. appropriation has not been cut at all.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I am sorry I cannot yield right now. A little later I will if I have time.

Another thing I am sure this Committee must take into consideration in relation to appropriations for the Tennessee Valley Authority is the fact that in September in a press release their own press agent said that they had a net income of $1,237,000 a month. This makes a total of over $15,000,000 a year by their own report which they, by the way, very reluctantly rendered to the Congress because they are required to by the terms of the original act. They admit that they still have available $11,500,000 from the recent sale of bonds; and this money alone will much more than make up the cut which I propose they shall take under my amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

If we are going to economize, again I say to the membership of this Committee, in all fairness let us have it apply to all sections of the United States alike. Oh, of course, it is quite all right for the gentleman from Tennessee to get up here and defend this project in his own vicinity. It is all right for him to say that it is about completed, but those of us who have wrestled with this program for the number of years we have in this House know there is no satisfying these fanciful, fantastic men who are running the T. V. A. The operations of this outfit are so fantastic, so fanciful, so outrageous, so unreasonable that it is almost impossible for anyone to discuss it with any degree of common sense. If, as the gentleman from Tennessee says, we are cutting out a link, then I submit it is a link from one end of the chain or the other, not out of the middle.

Then the nonsensical statement was made that it would take $1,000,000 to get this machinery started again should we stop and then wish to start at some later date. I am sure it is the opinion of a large part of the Committee and of many of the Members of the House that we never start any more developments under this program. [Applause.] I am sure the members of this Committee would be glad to see a program of this kind extend all over the United States so we could all benefit in some way or other; but certainly in the name of common sense we should not let all of the appropriations be poured into this one favored spot in the United States. Let us have a little common sense, a little sense of fairness, a little sense of balance; and while we are cutting appropriations for other departments that affect every section of the country, let us in the name of fairness and common sense carry the pruning down into this one place where it is most badly needed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to make this observation before recognizing the gentleman from New Jersey:

Time has been fixed on this entire section which begins to run now for 1 hour. The Chair is informed that several gentlemen have amendments to offer. Two amendments are pending at the present time. Under the rules of the House, of course, only a stated number of amendments may be pending at one time. Some gentleman, therefore, who desires to offer an amendment later on may find himself precluded from speaking at least on his amendment unless pending amendments are disposed of as we go along during the course of the hour. The Chair merely makes this observation to protect all gentlemen.

Does the gentleman from New Jersey have any objection to the Committee's voting on the present amendment now? If not, the Chair will put the question.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

The question was taken; and, the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 56, noes 55.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. FADDIS.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 104, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If there is any misunderstanding about the pending amendment, I may say that it strikes out $1,000,000 for beginning the construction of Coulter Dam.

The report of the Tennessee Valley Authority to the committee is that the preliminary work on this dam will not be completed until 1940, which rebuts the testimony of the gentleman from Tennessee that this dam is under way. The preliminary work has not yet been completed, according to the T. V. A. report.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that the last amendment was defeated because there is room for economy, efficiency, and attention to detail in the Tennessee Valley Authority and the amount of the appropriation should be reduced. In the past I have had much to say about the Tennessee Valley Authority, but when anybody rises to protest or say anything about that agency the voice is one crying in the wilderness, so strongly does the authority seem to be entrenched and supported. It took 2 years for the President to realize there might be some truth in the charges being made here a few years ago; matters were so complicated he had to constitute himself an investigator, one of the few times in all my experience I have known the President of the United States to personally conduct such an investigation, to find out the truth of the family row going on between the men whom he had appointed to office, and that at least one of them could be guilty of contumacy. As I have frequently said, the entire Commission has been contumacious.

Mr. Chairman, the first engineer appointed by the Tennessee Valley Authority, as long ago as 1933, was Mr. Carl A. Bock, and up until the 25th of November of last year Mr. Bock was chief consulting engineer of the Authority. On the 25th of November he resigned his position, because, he said, of his belief that the T. V. A. could take greater steps to "insure economy and efficiency in the great projects which it is designing and building." The statement which Mr. Bock gave out at the time of his resignation quotes portions of a letter he had written to Dr. H. A. Morgan, Chairman of the Authority. It came to my attention in an Associated Press dispatch from Chattanooga, published in the New York Herald Tribune, and is in part, as follows:

Valuable opportunities for improved operating features can be overlooked or large sums needlessly spent unless such projects are subjected to independent searching analysis.

Experienced consultants are invaluable for critical checking and advisory review of designs and proposed constructions.

In my opinion, T. V. A. could advantageously make more intensive use of available consultation to insure economy and efficiency in the great projects which it is designing and building.

I believe I am warranted in leaving now, feeling that I have discharged any possible professional obligation to T. V. A., and that I have demonstrated my desire to cooperate toward its best interests.

As you will note, Mr. Bock intimated that his resignation had been in his mind for some time, but he felt an obligation to the T. V. A. However, the time had come when his obligation to the T. V. A. had been satisfied and he could take the step.

Mr. Bock should know the truth of what he is talking about. He was the chief consulting engineer and we have his statement that economy and efficiency are necessary and something can be done about it by the officials in charge of the T. V. A.

When I said a few years ago that the T. V. A. was going to cost $250,000,000 I was ridiculed and scoffed at. Today the report of the committee admits that the project has already cost upward of $310,000,000, and that the project, including navigation, flood control, and power, will finally cost $535,000,000. That is the total estimated cost. It will cost fabulously more. I extend an invitation to any Member of the House who is at all interested to sit down with me to quietly and conscientiously study this proposition. I will show anyone who cares to give the time how, up to now, this project has cost the United States Government at least $750,000,000; and with all its correlated activities and things which are being undertaken, I venture to say that we would find that the cost up to the present time is approaching a billion dollars more nearly than the $535,000,000 which the T. V. A. officials are willing to admit.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment before the House, as I understand it, is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], to strike from this bill the sum of $1,000,000. It does not sound like a very harmful amendment or one having very great effect, so far as this bill is concerned, but may I call attention to the fact that if the amendment is agreed to, it means that the construction of Coulter Shoals Dam will not get under way during this year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman has exactly stated the proposition. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] to reduce the total amount by $1,000,000 is agreed to, it would still not interfere with the Coulter Shoals Dam unless the other amendment is also agreed to. The gentleman from Illinois has two amendments.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is my understanding that the purpose is to consider the two together. That is what he stated. The purpose is to prevent the starting of the construction of Coulter Shoals Dam. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] in his remarks admitted that the T. V. A. was a great project already under way and that its program was eventually to be completed. In other words, he simply wanted to slow it up for 1 year. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS] has discussed very fully the cost to the Government and he has shown you that, as a matter of fact, instead of this being an economy move it would be highly uneconomical, not necessarily because of the loss of work on Coulter Shoals Dam, but due to the fact that the program of developing this project, when it was originally set up, was scheduled in such a way that when one dam was completed another one should commence. In this way the equipment and personnel might be moved from one dam to another. If you slow up the starting of Coulter Shoals Dam for 1 year you are going to lose 1 year's time on certain equipment that has been allotted to that particular project. This will also throw out of employment a great many of the personnel which later will have to be reemployed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this not the last important dam in that whole section?

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is the last dam. For years the Army Engineers have recommended that a 9-foot channel be developed all the way up the Tennessee River to Knoxville. In every report the necessity of a dam at Coulter Shoals has been emphasized. This is the last of the dams necessary to complete that channel to Knoxville, and without it the channel cannot be completed.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Is it not also true that one of the main purposes to be served by this dam is navigation? We hear much said about power, but the main purpose to be served by this dam is navigation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is absolutely true. The primary purpose is navigation, and flood control comes next. As far as this dam is concerned, power is wholly incidental and secondary.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman give the Committee the amount of commerce on the Tennessee River?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Offhand I cannot give it. I noticed in the report that during the last year there was 2,000,000 tons of water-borne commerce, if I recall correctly.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, one cannot give the amount of navigation along this stream because navigation is blocked at the present time. This amendment would cut this stream in two there and prevent navigation altogether.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Until the Gilbertsville Dam is completed the mouth of the stream is blocked. When the Gilbertsville Dam is completed, and the present dams under construction are completed we will have a 9-foot channel to Chattanooga and above. This dam will open the river all the way to Knoxville.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Admitting the accuracy of the gentleman's statement in regard to the importance of the Tennessee Valley project, the gentleman is willing to admit, I suppose, that there are many other power, flood control, and navigation projects in other parts of the United States which are also of importance?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly am.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman appreciate the fact that while the appropriation for the Tennessee Valley project has not been cut at all in this year's appropriation, the Budget estimates for all the other flood-control projects in the United States have been cut an average of approximately 50 percent; in other words, from the $133,000,000 appropriated last year to $70,000,000 this year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Budget also cut the Tennessee Valley Authority approximately $10,000,000 in the estimates submitted.

Mr. MOTT. That is not at all in line with the cuts on other projects.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 90, noes 94.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. STARNES of Alabama.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 109, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 69, line 18, before the period, insert:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be available unless and until Congress hereafter by law provides that moneys available for expenditure by the Tennessee Valley Authority shall be withdrawn from the Treasury only pursuant to accountable warrants for advances to the credit of an adequately bonded disbursing officer, as determined by the Comptroller General of the United States, or certificates of settlement issued by the General Accounting Office."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation, that it puts additional duties on the Comptroller General, and I refer to the last two lines, "as determined by the Comptroller General of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAY. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to section 1582, page 600, volume 7, of Cannon's Precedents, which reads as follows:

An amendment rendering an appropriation (included in a paragraph proposing legislation) inoperative until Congress should have made certain determinations, was held to be in the nature of a limitation.

Under this section the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was called upon to rule on a proviso to a similar provision relating to the disbursement of money from the Treasury to two certain Indian tribes. This proviso was introduced by Senator PAT HARRISON, of Mississippi, and reads as follows:

Provided, however, That the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this act with respect to the Choctaw tribe shall not be operative until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

After commenting generally upon the matter, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union concluded—

The Chair therefore does not think that the amendment changes existing law, nor does it propose new legislation. It is, in the opinion of the Chair, only a condition or limitation on the appropriation, the effect of which and the advisability of which the Committee and not the Chair must determine.

The Chair thinks the amendment in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I did not understand whether the gentleman was reading a statement from the ruling of a former Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on a point of order, to the effect that that particular amendment did not change existing law, or whether the gentleman was referring to his own amendment.

Mr. MAY. I was reading the ruling by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shown under this section.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky certainly changes existing law, does it not?

Mr. MAY. It certainly does not.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If it does not, why offer it? What good can it do if it does not change existing law?

Mr. MAY. It places a limitation on the expenditure of these funds, the very thing I have been trying to do for 5 or 6 years. I have been trying to get them under the Comptroller General and have been unable to do so.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The accounts of the Tennessee Valley Authority are now audited by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. MAY. An audit of the Tennessee Valley Authority, sent in by them without the vouchers, is all the Comptroller General gets. There is a shortage, if the chairman of the Appropriations Committee does not happen to know it, of $15,000,000 down there in the Comptroller General's office now, composed of illegal items.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But the gentleman seeks by this amendment to extend the authority and control of the General Accounting Office, which does change existing law. If it does not change existing law, the gentleman's amendment is entirely ineffective for any purpose.

Mr. MAY. Well, if it is ineffective and does not change existing law, the gentleman from Virginia should withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it does change existing law.

Mr. MAY. That is a matter for the Chair to rule upon, however.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit, it may be more nearly accurate to say that some of the accounts of the Tennessee Valley Authority have been audited by the General Accounting Office, not all of them, and in some cases only check audits are made. So the effect of the gentleman's amendment would be merely to give further expression to existing law, as I see it, whereby no moneys could be disbursed or whereby this procedure could not be carried on until all of them were audited by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. MAY. That is exactly it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. In the hearings, at page 1688, there is an item here of special payments made for consultants and one to the firm of Lybrand, Ross Brothers & Montgomery, for auditing, $73,459.90, and there are other smaller items for auditing in the same compilation.

Mr. MAY. I will say in answer to that statement, and to the Chair on the question of the propriety of his ruling, that is the very evil I am seeking to correct. The idea of releasing the warrants of this agency that does not care how much it spends or how it spends money and refuse to put them back under the Comptroller General, and I am frank to say this amendment would be ineffective unless Congress did something about it in the future. This Congress does not know and never will know the numerous activities in which it continually engages.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard briefly in support of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I feel confident it was readily apparent to the Chair that there is a very clear distinction between the precedent cited by the gentleman from Kentucky and the pending question. Of course, the precedent cited by the gentleman from Kentucky is not applicable to the pending question as it is now presented to the Chair.

I respectfully invite attention of the Chair to the fact that under the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky his only purpose in offering this amendment is to provide legislation and to change existing law. The gentleman very frankly stated in reply to a question presented to him by the gentleman from Virginia that he had been trying for years to get this done. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I submit what a man may have been trying for years to get done by legislation he cannot now get done under the guise of a limitation on an appropriation bill, and I submit the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. MAY. Will the Chair indulge me a little further so that I may read a little more of this decision, unless the Chair has read it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that he has read the decision the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. MAY. Then the Chair may rule.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair, as he has just stated, is conversant with the decision cited by the gentleman from Kentucky, made in the House on January 8, 1915. The Chair has looked over the amendment that is now pending and against which a point of order has been made, and it is erroneous for one to say that it would impose duties or extra duties upon the Comptroller General of the United States. The amendment does not seek to do that. It seeks to impose a duty and obligation upon the Congress itself to pass legislation, and the Chair has found a case that seems to the Chair is quite in point along that line.

On June 24, 1922, the House had agreed to a conference report on the War Department appropriation bill and Senate amendments remaining in disagreement were under consideration.

On motion of Mr. Daniel R. Anthony, Jr., of Kansas, the House voted to recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 225, inserting the following provision:

For the continuance of the work on dam No. 2 on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Ala., to be immediately available, $7,500,000.

Whereupon Mr. George Huddleston, of Alabama, moved to concur with the following amendment:

Strike out from said Senate amendment No. 225 the following: "To be immediately available", and add, after the figures $7,500,000, the following: "Provided, however, This appropriation shall not become available until such time as the Congress shall have taken final action on H. R. 11903, and not then if the subject matter of said bill is enacted into law in a manner as will result in the consummation of contracts for lease and sale of the Government Muscle Shoals property to Henry Ford: Provided further, That this provision shall not operate to postpone such availability later than January 1, 1923."

At that time there was in the House a very able Parliamentarian in the person of Mr. William H. Stafford, of Wisconsin, who made the point of order that the amendment proposed legislation on an appropriation bill. There was also in that same body a gentleman who is recognized as one of the greatest parliamentarians to ever sit in the House of Representatives, the late James R. Mann, of Illinois. Mr. Mann said:

This amendment provides, first, that the money shall not be available until H. R. 11903 has been enacted, and shall not be then available if a contract is authorized with Henry Ford, but still shall be available after the 1st of January. It contradicts itself in three or four places, but it is only a limitation.

Speaker Gillett said:

It seems to the Chair that this is purely a limitation on the appropriation. It does not make an appropriation available that the present law does not make available. It simply makes it contingent on a future event, and that seems to the Chair is merely a limitation. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is a proper limitation, and therefore overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentlemen on my right—to express it so that the country might understand it, the Democratic side of the House—may realize that the Appropriations Committee of this House, with such a capable, such an earnest, such a hard-working, diligent leader as the gentleman from Virginia, CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, is trying to save the taxpayers' pocketbook as much as it can, and I hope when they come to vote on this question, which I expect to prevail, that they will begin to think about the question of whether we ought to turn loose a bunch of gentlemen who have already evinced their desire, not only their desire but their determination, to spend all of the money that they can find in sight, and all that the Congress will give to them. They have already expended down in the Tennessee River, according to the Appropriations Committee report, or will have expended when this $40,000,000 they are to have in this bill has been expended, over $300,000,000. They plan to expend in excess of $200,000,000 more, and, as stated by me to one of the gentlemen while he was discussing this question on the floor of the House, it has been claimed by the Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority that their program would cover 100 years in point of time, that they had already located 106—what they call—appropriate sites for dams on the Tennessee River, and by the time they get them built it will be dammed, sure enough.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Certainly.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with any effort that could be made to cause a complete, careful, systematic audit of the transactions of the Tennessee Valley Authority, but I ask the gentleman to comment on this feature of his amendment—that no part of the appropriation herein made, that is, the whole appropriation of the Tennessee Valley—

Mr. MAY. That is correct.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Shall be available for expenditure until Congress passes the legislation the gentleman speaks of. Unless Congress by affirmative act passes some additional legislation relative to the Tennessee Valley Authority by July 1, they cannot obligate one penny of the appropriations herein made.

Mr. MAY. That is exactly the purpose and intent of this amendment—that they shall come back here during this session of Congress and ask the gentleman from Virginia and his able assistants to let them furnish some detailed, definite information as to what they intend to do with all of these millions of dollars that they are asking for.

Mr. FADDIS. And is it not a fact that at the present time the T. V. A. does not have to come to Congress and ask authority to build a dam? They do not have to have any authorization legislation.

Mr. MAY. They have not asked it. They have been building dams by coming and getting their nose under the tent and then asking for more money as it goes along. We have authorized them, in addition to all of these appropriations, to sell bonds to the extent of $61,000,000, or $61,500,000, to be exact, and they have already sold $50,000,000 of that bond issue. They have available in that fund unexpended $11,500,000 in cash. Someone said a while ago and someone was saying in answer to me, asking whether that bond money was not limited to specific purposes. What are they? To buy up additional utilities and properties to increase their revenue in the years to come, and they are boasting now that they are going to make a net income of about twelve to fifteen million dollars in the year 1940. I maintain as Democrats, as men who believe in curtailing the expenses of this Government, that is becoming top-heavy as rapidly as it can, that relief to the taxpayers demands that we use a little caution in these matters.

Mr. EDMISTON. And the T. V. A. is appearing before the gentleman's own committee next Tuesday asking for more money, for Federal funds to replace taxes.

Mr. MAY. Yes; they are coming in for tax legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. To support the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I should think that the House would give this amendment its most favorable consideration. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is trying to do for the T. V. A. what ought to be done. There is nobody who has opposed the T. V. A. any more assiduously than I have, but I have come to the place where every reasonable man must come and that is that we must recognize that we cannot throw to the winds all of these millions of dollars that have been expended in the Tennessee Valley. We cannot blow up these dams. We must go ahead with this work and finish the projects upon which millions have been spent. What we are asking to do today is something that was strikingly brought out in the hearings which the T. V. A. investigating committee held in 1938-39. You will remember that a year or so ago the Speaker of this House appointed a committee to investigate the T. V. A. I was honored with membership on that committee. We found a lot of irregularities, many of them. We found that the General Accounting Office auditors were 4 or 5 years behind and that twelve to fifteen million dollars of items had not been resolved. They have not all been resolved yet. Here is this gigantic organization marching on, spending millions and millions of dollars, and making no report to the Government except such reports as they prepare and audit themselves. It is the only agency in the Government that does not clear through the General Accounting Office. There is not a single other agency that does not do so. Why should not this agency come under the authority of the General Accounting Office? The Democrats cannot find fault with that Office now. They used to say, "Oh, McCarl! McCarl!" But Mr. McCarl, who was a most fearless and efficient man, has been displaced by a Democrat. A strong Democrat, a former Senator, is now head of that organization. I would be glad that he and his organization should audit this gigantic octopus that seems to ride roughshod over the whole country. It should be done. Those of you who are real friends of the T. V. A. should listen once in a while. We said months ago that you were going to have a tremendous job on your hands because of failure of taxation. You would not listen. Already the T. V. A. is before the Military Affairs Committee asking the Government to come to the rescue. Three or four States are at loggerheads over the question of taxation. A very significant thing about the T. V. A. is that it knows no bounds. State lines mean nothing to it. Every other agency that we know anything about pays some attention to State lines, but here is an agency that starts in North Carolina and marches through North Carolina.

It has to do with the politics of the State. It has to do with the municipal politics of the State, with the school politics of the State, and with the financial politics of the State. It marches down into Georgia, over into Alabama, all through Mississippi, and clear across the State of Tennessee. It moves with an omnipotent tread its purposes to perform. There are five States at loggerheads over this taxation proposition, because this thing marches over State lines and violates their laws, and nobody can control it. It has got beyond everybody. If you are a friend of T. V. A., you will vote that the finances of T. V. A. be put under the General Accounting Office. Who is the General Accounting Office? It is the General Accounting Office of this great United States of America. It has been dominated by Republicans and again by Democrats since it has been founded, and, as far as I know, there has never been any scandal against it. If you are going to vote thirty-nine or forty million dollars, why should you not say, "Let us handle this money like all the rest of the Government's money." I say you are wrong in refusing to do so. You had better stop, look, and listen if you want to do what should be done and before it is too late.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it not rather strange that the T. V. A. spent $25,000 and $40,000 for a private audit this year, and resisted the efforts of the General Auditing Office to audit their accounts?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. Do not get it into your minds that those who control the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority are angelic. They are the smartest bunch of operators that ever imposed themselves on a gullible public. They boast of their superior status. When it is advisable for them to be a Federal agency they assume that status. When it is advisable for them to deny that they are a Federal agency then they claim that they are an independent organization and are outside of Government regulations, such as those prescribed by the General Accounting Office. They are all things to all men. As proof of that, when we were investigating this hydra-headed octopus, we maintained from the very beginning that our investigation was 90 percent an auditor's investigation. We could not get the committee to take our view of it and compel an audit. But about 4 or 5 days from the time we closed our investigation, the T. V. A. authorities came in with a secret audit that they had procured during the time we were investigating them, and it cost them $40,000 of your money. They would not permit the General Accounting Office to audit them. They would not permit us to make an audit; yet they spent $40,000 for a secret audit. The sooner the Congress wakes up to these high-handed tactics, the better off the Government will be, and the better off the T. V. A. will be.

Further, in proof of the dishonest tactics of those who rule this monster money-spending experiment, let me cite you an instance of their practices. Our investigating committee engaged an attorney. I opposed his employment and stated that I felt he was unfit for the place. I had investigated him. The first thing he did when he went down there to make these investigations for our committee was to call those that he thought might be witnesses and tell each and every one of them that they must not talk or give testimony to anyone unless they first cleared themselves through the T. V. A. officials. All during our investigation we were confronted with this same partiality toward the outfit that we were supposed to investigate. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Those of you who have served in this House know that no amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky would ever facilitate or be helpful to the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority. He has been opposed to this program from its inception. He has been honest, open, and aboveboard about it, and has repeatedly told this House that he would kill the T. V. A. now if he could. Make no mistake about it. This amendment is the opening wedge for the slaying which he thinks has been long delayed.

From the debate thus far, you would think that the T. V. A. does not have its accounts audited.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot yield in the short time I have.

You would think the T. V. A. accounts are not audited by the Comptroller General. To the contrary, the law specifically provides in title XVI, chapter 12 (a), Tennessee Valley Authority Act, an act approved August 31, 1935:

The Comptroller General of the United States shall audit the transactions of the corporations at such time as he shall determine but not less frequently than once each governmental fiscal year, with personnel of his own selection.

It further provides that all papers and files of the Corporation shall be made available to them. Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, distinguished Member on the minority side, the ranking minority member on this subcommittee, asked Mr. Tulloss of the General Accounting Office when he appeared before the committee this year:

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. How are you getting along with the T. V. A.?

Mr. TULLOSS. We are getting along nicely.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Are they furnishing you all of the original documents that are necessary for auditing?

Then follows testimony to the effect that they were, and that hereafter, in order to save money, an audit would be made in the field, because it was more economical. He stated further that they had just completed the audit for 1939.

So an audit by the General Accounting Office has been made. It is satisfactory and it is up to date. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] said there was over $15,000,000 of stolen money—or words to that effect—money that had been illegally spent by this great corporation. I call attention to the fact that Mr. Kohler, the auditor, when he appeared before the subcommittee, said that with reference to the exceptions made to certain expenditures by the T. V. A., out of more than 20,306 exceptions which had been made from 1934 to 1938 the Authority had been notified of the release of 13,520. He further said replies to a majority of exceptions were probably satisfactory.

The sum total of all of it is that the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is not an amendment to provide for the auditing of the T. V. A., but in effect an effort to kill the entire program, after the Government has already expended more than a quarter of a billion dollars on this great project.

Make no mistake about it, you are voting to junk the entire program at this hour if you vote for this amendment.

If this amendment is adopted it would require the T. V. A. to come before his committee before the adjournment of this Congress and attempt to get legislation before they could spend one dime of the money provided for in this bill. That is the effect of his amendment. If you are against the T. V. A., if you wish to junk the $250,000,000 investment in the Valley, vote for the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit—

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Does it not even go a little further than that, that any change in the law carrying out what the gentleman's amendment calls for would have to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman himself is chairman, and if they were so disposed not to report out a bill, they could bring this whole T. V. A. project to a standstill?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Absolutely.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is not the logical policy to follow, if any fundamental legislation is required for T. V. A., that of having the Committee on Military Affairs report out such legislation? Is not this the logical thing to do, have the gentleman's committee, which has control of it, bring the legislation to the House and have the House pass upon it?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. MAY. What would the gentleman do if he were chairman of the committee and summoned the directors of the T. V. A. to appear before his committee and they refused to come? What would the gentleman do?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman from Kentucky has the power to bring them before his committee if he wants them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak on the pending amendment?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] to strike out the provision of this bill which would extend and expand the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority. This item, providing $1,000,000 to begin construction of the Coulter Shoals Dam, near Lenoir City, Tenn., would further cripple the coal and railroad industries in my district and throughout the country. That is the sole basis of my opposition and I yield to no man in this House in challenging the soundness of that position.

From one end of this country to the other, the cry today is jobs—give us jobs, give us work, let us earn our living. That refrain is chanted by a chorus of 10,000,000 voices of jobless persons. Men and women are crying for work and what do they find? I will tell you what they find in this bill. They find a provision that would further cripple the coal and railroad industries in my district and in every district throughout the country where coal miners and railroaders are employed. The adoption of this provision could mean only one thing. It would mean that more coal miners and railroaders would lose their jobs. This provision is just another method of chiseling coal miners and railroaders out of honest work at decent wages. It should be entitled, "Another provision to put good American citizens on relief."

Let me tell you why that is so: It is a well-established fact that a man-day's labor is lost in the bituminous coal mining and allied industries for every ton of coal displaced in the market by some substitute fuel. That may sound like statistics to you gentlemen of this House whose constituents are not dependent upon the coal mines and the railroads for a livelihood. I represent a district in which those two great industries are the economic backbone of the community. When the coal and railroad industries are in distress, the people of my district are in distress. I wish to see both of these great industries so they may contribute to the prosperity of the Nation.

As I have pointed out, the labor of one man per day is destroyed in the bituminous coal-mining industry and allied industries when some substitute fuel displaces the market for a ton of coal. What, may I ask, is this coal miner to do who has had his job taken away from him? Where is he to find work? He was reared from boyhood in the coal-mining business. He is adapted to that industry, that job. His job has been destroyed by such legislation as this. Must he starve or must he go on relief permanently? Would any of you gentlemen like to be in the position of a coal miner who has had his job destroyed, and taken away from him through no fault of his own?

I say to you gentlemen that any policy which destroys a man's job and fails to provide another job for him so that he can support himself and his family cannot be defended. Yet, that is exactly what is happening in my district and in many other districts throughout the country.

Yes, gentlemen, we are spending more than half a billion dollars to put men and women out of work in your districts and mine. Let us remember that there are 10,000,000 persons out of work now. There were 10,000,000 persons out of work when this administration came into power. There still are 10,000,000 persons out of work. Why is that so? I will tell you one reason why it is so. When industry hires a man, this administration and this Congress adopts such policies as the T. V. A. and another man is robbed of a job. He must either go on relief or charity. That sort of procedure does not make sense to me.

Incidentally, let me mention another policy of this administration which I regard as indefensible. It is a policy which is destroying the jobs of coal miners and railroaders. I refer to the agreement under which the United States Government allows 400,000 tons of Russian coal to come into this country annually. That agreement was renewed only last August. Instead of renewing the agreement, it should have been abrogated. Why this Government should extend any aid to the workmen of Russia is beyond my comprehension, especially when it injures good American citizens.

Do you gentlemen realize what the importation of 400,000 tons of Russian coal annually means to the American coal and railroad industries? It means that 400,000 coal miners in the United States will lose a day's work and a day's wages for every year that agreement is in effect. That means greater hardships for miner's wives and children.

It also means the loss of jobs and the loss of wages to the railroaders of this country. Do you realize that 400,000 tons of coal require 4,000 cars, or about 40 trains to transport it? It also requires about 2,000 railroaders to handle that freight. Do we wish to have coal mined by Russians displace our own coal and cause 400,000 American miners to lose a day's wages every year, and 2,000 railroaders lose their jobs? I think not.

Let me tell you gentlemen that nearly 40,000 persons in my district are dependent upon the coal and railroad industries for a livelihood. These people are entitled to jobs in American industries. They are entitled to protection from foreign competition in coal and from domestic competition in power, such as the T. V. A. They are entitled to be secure in their jobs. The time has come to call a halt to the spending of the taxpayers' money to destroy jobs for American citizens. One section of the country may benefit on the surface, but if the people of another section have their jobs destroyed, the entire country will suffer in the end. Let us take a realistic view of this matter. If we destroy a job by legislation, we must pass other legislation to care for the person whose job is destroyed. Let us keep the jobs for American citizens whose greatest desire is honest work at a wage that will support themselves and their families. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has been allotted 5 minutes under this debate which he has yielded to the gentleman from Alabama, the Speaker of the House, whom the Chair now recognizes for 5 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, as is well known to the membership of the House, since I have assumed the duties of the Speakership it has only been on very rare occasions that I have felt impelled to participate in the debate in the Committee of the Whole; and I have only made up my mind to make another exception to that rule in this case because of what I regard as the supreme importance of a correct decision by this Committee on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Chairman, this is no time and probably no place to go back into the old arguments as to whether the great Tennessee Valley program was ever justified, or whether it has justified its own operations up to date, or whether its future permanent benefits to the people of that great section of the country and the entire country will justify further action; but we are confronted here by the consideration of an annual appropriation bill, and in this paragraph which we are now considering provision is made for the entire operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority in all of its ramifications.

This Authority has recently made big contracts for the furnishing of power to the great State of Tennessee. It has other outstanding contracts. It has a large program ahead of it. It has committed itself, through proper authority, to great moral and legal obligations. Here we are confronted by a proposition in the amendment now pending before this House that this appropriation shall not become available unless and until a specific committee of this House, to wit, the Committee on Military Affairs of which my fine friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is the chairman, shall take action and favorably report a bill here to this House setting up the provisions that he incorporates in his amendment as a prerequisite for this appropriation's becoming effective. I ask you gentlemen on this side of the aisle on my left, whether you have agreed with all of the details of the operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority or not, whether it is a sound moral legislative proposition for this whole great enterprise and its operations for the next fiscal year to be jeopardized upon any such contingency as is proposed in this amendment?

Any bill must run a great many hazards. I do not know whether the gentleman's committee would report out a bill. There are a number of Members on that committee who are opposed to this Tennessee Valley program, as is the chairman of that committee opposed to it; and yet, if you adopt this amendment, unless a specific bill is reported out of a committee of which the chairman himself admittedly is adverse to the entire operation of the plant, the operations of this Authority must cease. Such a bill would have to run the gamut of a favorable report from that committee; it would have to secure recognition upon the floor of the House for its passage; it would have to run the hazard of a special rule, probably, for its consideration. In the meantime time may be running against the calendars of this House, and we may even reach adjournment without any action upon such contemplated legislation; and I assert that it is not fair to this great governmental enterprise—for that is what it is—to subject it to the very unfair hazard, as I see it, of making contingent its entire operation and the carrying out of all its contracts of every nature whatsoever contingent on the passage by the Congress of the United States of a bill setting up certain restrictions upon the auditing of its accounts.

I believe, gentlemen, for these broad reasons—they are not sectional; my State of Alabama is not interested in any of these additional appropriations, but we are interested in the continuation of the operation of the T. V. A.—if, forsooth, by any chance such legislation should not pass at this session of Congress before the 1st day of July, we do not want all of these great electrical transmission lines stopped down in that great area, these rural electrification lines, these contracts with Tennessee, the great fertilizer plant down there which is now just beginning in its experimental work to do something of real benefit to the farmers of this country. I do not think it is right or fair to hazard all of those operations upon the contingency of the passage of a specific bill by the Congress of the United States on a comparatively minor matter before the adjournment of Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I rise to speak on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I rise to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman because under the agreement to close debate 12 Members stood. The Chair called attention at that time to the fact that he would, of course, only recognize those 12 Members.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I inquire whether all of the allotted time has been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The allotted time has not been exhausted, but the time has been allotted.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understood the request and agreement was that debate be limited to 1 hour. That was entered into at about 2 minutes after 2 o'clock. There has been a lot of voting since that time, and 1 hour has not been consumed in debate. Now, if there is time that has not been consumed under the agreement, then any Member seeking the floor to debate is entitled to recognition and may use the rest of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has agreed to recognize five other Members, as there are 25 minutes left.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIRKSEN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I enlist myself in the case of the pending amendment with some trepidation and with the highest respect for our beloved Speaker. I feel, however, that the situation is not quite so despairing and so dismal as pointed out, for many reasons. In the first place, the appropriation made available in this bill for the Tennessee Valley Authority is for the fiscal year 1941 and is neither available nor subject to expenditure until after July 1, 1940. This is the 18th of January, and it is approximately five and a half months until any of the funds herein made available can be expended. In that five-and-a-half-month period the auditors, accountants, experts, and others of the Tennessee Valley Authority can easily present themselves to the appropriate committee of Congress and there permit an examination of their books. There they can submit themselves to cross-examination and to interrogatories that seek merely to elicit a full and complete picture of this whole audit situation; and in the event that nothing should happen, or in the event that some restriction be imposed, there is always the easy proposition of providing the necessary funds in a deficiency bill. We had three deficiencies in the last session of Congress, exclusive of an urgent deficiency. Let no one think for a moment that we shall come up to the end of this fiscal year, when moneys must be made available for T. V. A. for ordinary purposes, but what there will be a deficiency bill offered in the Appropriations Committee and duly reported to the Congress; so that no Member need cherish any apprehension or alarm that it will be out of operating funds.

Mr. Chairman, this thing is important. As I stated while interposing in the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], the T. V. A. spent $25,000 for a private audit last year and $40,000 this year. If you will examine the audit, you will find that in the certificate of the auditors it states that they do not pass upon the legality of the expenditures. Under those circumstances it is high time that the Congress go into this matter. What is the truth about the situation? Over $22,365,000 in items were presented to the General Accounting Office and only $16,000,000 thus far have been cleared. That is the testimony of Mr. Kohler, general accountant for the T. V. A., and his testimony will be found on page 1698 of the hearings. I admonish you, therefore, that in the case of any enterprise that has already received $270,000,000 in appropriations, for which the over-all estimate is now $535,000,000 and to which will be added countless other millions, we are not playing fair with the Treasury or the people's funds unless we cautiously investigate and get a full, clear, and comprehensive picture of the efficiency of the expenditures. I recommend to you the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Our beloved Speaker called attention to the fact there were contracts for the delivery of electricity to large corporations and municipalities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This does not impair contract obligations.

Mr. MAY. They have adequate money and adequate earnings to run it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe any member of this Committee can recall such a high-handed, ruthless attempt to annihilate a Government activity as is attempted by this amendment. Let me say that I am ready to join hands enthusiastically in any movement that will put the Tennessee Valley Authority under the strictest kind of scrutiny of an auditing and accounting system. The Committee on Military Affairs, of which my friend from Kentucky is the distinguished and energetic chairman, is the legislative committee that could report out and bring to the House such a bill. We know that our beloved friend is fundamentally and unalterably opposed to the Tennessee Valley Authority in every respect.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. If the Military Affairs Committee reports out a reasonable bill requiring the Tennessee Valley Authority to secure permission to build a dam that costs $40,000,000 before they build it, as the War Department is required to do, will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I will vote for it, and I believe the House will pass it.

Mr. MAY. I believe the gentleman will get a chance to do it, too.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We ought to do it that way, but what do we do? The gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about taking jobs away from people. There are thousands of people working on the Tennessee Valley project, which Congress has authorized and for which we have spent money and obligated money, thousands of them, and ultimately hundreds of thousands of people are dependent upon it; yet we say here that unless the Tennessee Valley Authority goes to a committee presided over by a chairman who is opposed to the entire project, and secures affirmative action, not by just the House but by the whole Congress, before July 1, every penny of its money will be impounded and it cannot proceed with any of its operations.

I want to submit to you that in all our zeal to put the brakes on these activities, or to put them under accounting systems or scrutiny, this is a most unfair and a most ruthless way to treat an activity. I do not remember of such a thing being ever seriously considered or attempted in the House.

What would happen? July 1 will be here pretty quickly. There are many things that will happen between now and July 1. The Committee on Military Affairs is very busy with the defense program. One has to be quite optimistic to be able to say with any degree of certainty that legislation could be reported out of a legislative committee and passed and become final law before July 1. The danger of it, however, is that you put it within the power of a small group of persons to stop the whole activity on July 1.

I submit to you, if we want to make any changes in this set-up, let us do it in the regular way. The House can take such action as it chooses. We have the power and the authority to pass organic, fundamental legislation causing them to account in any way we wish to see it done, and I am willing to join in such a movement, but I do not want to see it attempted in this way, and I hope very much the amendment will not be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MAY and Mr. STARNES of Alabama.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers announced that there were—ayes 132, yeas 153.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois in his remarks stated that the T. V. A. would go on and on and on. My chief concern is that it do not go on and on and on until it enters the State of Connecticut.

On the 7th of January of this year a gentleman by the name of Mr. Leonard Farmer came into the capital city of Connecticut, in my district, the city of Hartford, and over a radio station stated that he was up there directed by the gentleman from Mississippi, Congressman RANKIN, to act as his spokesman. I quote from this broadcast:

Congressman RANKIN, who is the coauthor of the Tennessee Valley Authority and sponsor of rural electric legislation, is unable to answer Mr. Ferguson personally. The Congressman, however, has directed me to be his spokesman in this matter at this time.

On reading the broadcast I would have recognized the handiwork of our good friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] if his name had not been mentioned, because the broadcast was chiefly devoted to a story not new to the residents of Connecticut—that of the alleged $18,000,000 overcharge by the public utilities in and around Hartford County.

There is no resident of Hartford County who would like more than I to see electric rates reduced and to have a smaller electric-light bill, but on the whole we are quite well pleased with the situation in the city of Hartford. The rates charged for electricity are under the control of a State commission, at the present time a commission appointed in major part by a Democratic Governor, a commission trying to arrive at a reasonable rate for electric current. This area is served by the Hartford Electric Light Co. It may interest the Committee to know that during a hearing before the Federal Power Commission—and no one will accuse the Federal Power Commission of being overfriendly to the utilities—the Hartford Electric Light Co. was held up as a good example of what a good public utility should be; but in spite of that the people of this area are being subjected to propaganda for the establishment of a little T. V. A. in the State of Connecticut.

In this broadcast reference was made to the alleged $18,000,000 overcharge, as I have said. We in Connecticut consider the often-mentioned $18,000,000 not as an overcharge but as an indication of the subsidy now going into T. V. A.

The essence of the matter is not whether T. V. A. rates are lower than those in Connecticut. It is admitted that they are; but the question is whether the difference is a measure of overcharge in Connecticut or a measure of the direct and indirect subsidies received by the T. V. A. at the expense of the Nation's taxpayers.

The accusation that the difference is an overcharge is disposed of by the fact that the State reports show that, if revenues should be reduced by the amounts stated as "overcharge," all earnings would be eliminated and, in addition to the elimination of all dividend and interest payments, pay rolls would have to be materially reduced in order to make ends meet; which shows the absurdity of the accusation.

In the closing paragraph of this broadcast Mr. Farmer urged his listeners to make known to their Representatives in Washington their desire for a little T. V. A. in Connecticut. Now, one of two things is certain: Either by the end of the broadcast there were no listeners or there was nobody listening who cared about having a T. V. A. in Connecticut, because from that day to this, from the 7th of January until now, 11 days have elapsed, and I have not received a single request for a little T. V. A. as a result of that appeal. This indicates to me that the people of that area want no part of T. V. A. in Connecticut. [Applause.]

While I did not get a communication supporting Mr. Farmer's position from a constituent, I did get a letter from a former resident of the State of Tennessee, who wrote as follows:

I just heard some man on the Hartford—WTIC—radio talking about T. V. A. Five counties in Tennessee are short of tax money and cannot complete their school terms since T. V. A. took over, due to loss of taxes formerly paid by private utilities.

Due to poor planning by T. V. A. and scaring off utility building, Tennessee is now faced with power shortage.

The writer names four companies that have had to lay off hundreds of men because of lack of power in T. V. A. facilities.

He enclosed a memorandum from a benefit association composed of former employees of T. E. P. stating that many of them were in need of relief due to the fact that these former T. E. P. employees were not hired by T. V. A. or by the cities and co-ops due to their age. It makes one heartsick to read the pitiful stories of men who have given their best years developing the Tennessee Power Co. to a successful concern and now unable to find employment in that area. If the Federal Power Commission really wants to make possible lower electric-light and power rates in my district, it can contribute by desisting in its present practice of having the Hartford Electric Light Co. go to great expense in sending men down to Washington for hearings of all kinds. Such a hearing was recently commenced by the Federal Power Commission in an attempt on the part of the Commission to bring the Hartford Electric Light Co. under its jurisdiction. Several sessions were held, and the hearing now stands in recess. The cost of this Government interference, in the final analysis, must be paid by the consumers on the Hartford Electric Light Co. lines. In view of the record made by T. V. A., I hope that some way will be found to stop the growth of this expensive monster before it reaches into the fair State of Connecticut. [Applause.]

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEFAUVER: Page 69, line 8, before the colon, insert a semicolon and the following: "and, in addition, $1,000,000 for the construction of a highway and bridge on the Chickamauga Dam."

Page 69, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "this appropriation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "these appropriations."

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, it may seem unusual, in view of the economy wave, that I would present this amendment; but I did want to state my case to you, because I feel I have a good one.

This amendment appropriates money for the building of a bridge across Chickamauga Dam; or, I might say, it is to be more of a roadway than a bridge, because it goes along over the top of the dam as a roadway until it comes to the lock, and then it is a bridge.

This is not a project merely for the benefit of the people of my district but it serves a national purpose in making accessible to the people all over the United States the scenic and recreational facilities of this region. May I add that in the first place this was the greatest dream and ambition of the distinguished statesman whom I have the honor of succeeding in this House. I refer, of course, to Judge Sam D. McReynolds. Many of you who knew him well have heard him speak of a bridge across this magnificent dam; and of all the projects that he wanted for his region, I think this came foremost.

Chickamauga Dam, as you will notice from this map, is 7 miles from the heart of Chattanooga, a metropolis of 140,000 people. Roads lead from the north side of the Tennessee River to the north end of the dam and from Chattanooga to the south end of the dam. Thousands of people go each day to either side of the dam, and yet there is no way of going across it. The State of Tennessee is building splendid recreational parks on the south side, and on the north side is a marine park and other parks. If this bridge is built, it will make possible the utilization of that great and beautiful lake there.

I also want to call your attention to the fact there is no bridge between Chattanooga and Loudon, which is 75 miles north.

United States Highway 27 is the main highway to Lexington, Ky., and to Cincinnati and on up to Chicago and points north.

It goes within 3½ miles of the north end of Chickamauga Dam. United States Highway 11 is the principal highway to Knoxville, Washington, and points northeast. It comes within 2 miles of the south end of Chickamauga Dam. The principal highway to Atlanta and to Florida, which is a good place to go at this time of the year, is United States Highway 41, which runs along parallel with United States Highway 11, and is within 7 miles of the south end of Chickamauga Dam. So you can readily see from this map that roads have already been built from the north end to United States Highway 27, and from the south end to United States Highway 11 and United States Highway 41; and the State of Tennessee, I have been reasonably assured, will build fine connecting roads if a roadway is put across this dam, so that traffic coming from the North, instead of having to go through the congestion of Chattanooga traffic, can go across the dam and proceed into this region here [indicating on map] or proceed south on the Atlanta road. This will save approximately 14 miles, in addition to avoiding the congestion of Chattanooga traffic.

We have two bridges in Chattanooga, one of which is old and antiquated. Something has got to be done to relieve that traffic congestion on Chattanooga. These bridges were constructed in Chattanooga at county and city expense. No part of it was built by the Federal Government.

I ask your support of this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has been very industrious and energetic in speaking to members of the committee and to Members of the House in regard to this desirable bridge improvement as embodied and called for in his proposed amendment.

The gentleman states a very persuasive case. The amendment, however, if adopted, would increase the amount of the Tennessee Valley appropriation by $1,000,000, and would include an item which has not been passed upon by the Budget or considered by the Appropriations Committee. Under the circumstances, I should not like to see the amendment adopted, but would hope that the gentleman would present the matter to the Budget prior to the time the next annual appropriation comes up for the Tennessee Valley Authority and let the matter have a hearing and consideration by the Budget and also a hearing before the Appropriations Committee.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]. The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 69, line 8, strike out "$40,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$36,000,000."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a moment. By reference to the report of the subcommittee, anyone can see that the item for Federal aid to roads is cut $25,000,000 from last year, which is a cut of 20 percent; that secondary or feeder roads are cut 40 percent. As already called to your attention this afternoon, the Budget recommendations for flood control are cut from $133,000,000 to $70,000,000, or a cut of 47 percent. Farm parity payments, we are told, have been entirely eliminated under the Budget recommendations, a cut of 100 percent. This amendment merely reduces the total over-all appropriation for the T. V. A. from $40,000,000 to $36,000,000, a flat cut of 10 percent. The T. V. A. has no permanent commitments such as the Veterans' Administration. This will not cripple their program or eliminate any essential activities. It simply gives them a 10-percent cut so that they may get the habit of economy along with the other agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CASE of South Dakota) there were—ayes 94, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition to the contract authorizations of $115,000,000 contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and $230,000,000 in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1940, the Commission is authorized to enter into contract for further carrying out the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, in an amount not to exceed $150,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. I refer to the paragraph beginning in line 22, page 71, and ending in line 3, page 72.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Virginia on the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that the language to which objection is made provides that in addition to the contract authorizations contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, the Commission is authorized to contract for further sums carrying out the provision of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, in an amount not to exceed $150,000,000. My contention is that that is not an authorization but purely a limitation; that if it is in effect at all, it is merely a declaration of the Congress of a desire that the Maritime Commission shall enter into contract, because the authorization for entering into the contract exists in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. This is not a limitation on any appropriation. It is merely that they shall not enter into contract beyond this sum, and expresses a hope that the contract should not be entered into. It is not a limitation on any funds that are being appropriated. The Merchant Marine Act itself of 1936, in section 207, expressly provides and gives authority to enter into these contracts. Section 207 provides that there is authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. Under section 207 the Commission may enter into such contracts on behalf of the United States and may make such disbursements as in its discretion may be necessary to carry on the activities authorized by the act.

In the same way, in section 210, it is made the duty of the Commission to study, procure, and adopt a long-range program for effacement and additions to the American merchant marine. Section 502a authorizes the Commission to enter into contracts for construction of proposed vessels and for the payment to the shipbuilders of the contract price of the vessels out of the construction fund of the Commission or out of other available funds. Section 702 authorizes the Commission to have constructed such new vessels as it shall determine may be required to carry out the object of the act.

Section 702 prescribes the conditions upon entering into contracts for the building of such vessels. There are a number of other limitations of the same kind.

The point I make is that if this language has any effect at all it is a limitation, or if not a limitation, merely a declaration on the part of the Congress of a hope that these contracts shall not be made, the authority existing in the original act, and this proving no limitation upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there is something to say on the point of order. Almost every one of the sections that has been read specifically says "out of available funds." The general situation is that these contracts cannot be entered into without specific authority, and those things are not provided for in the general legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN.) The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes the point of order that the paragraph now under consideration is legislation on an appropriation bill. Of course, it is well known that the United States Maritime Commission has authority under the law to enter into contracts. Assuming that to be true, what would be the purpose in that Commission having authority under an appropriation bill to enter into contracts, unless it was for some new purpose?

An almost similar proposition of this kind came up on the second deficiency bill on April 28, 1937, at which time the Committee of the Whole was presided over by Mr. Vinson of Kentucky, when an amendment was offered dealing with the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Chair, at that time, construed it to be legislation on an appropriation bill. The present occupant of the chair so construes it, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In June 1938 Congress set up in the Civil Aeronautics Act the first unified and comprehensive national policy ever adopted for civilian flying in the United States. On August 22 of that year the Civil Aeronautics Authority took office to administer that act. That is not quite 17 months ago. Many a new governmental agency in the past has excusably used up that much time in simply getting organized, and two or three times that period in making itself felt in the field of its activities.

But, evidently, the Civil Aeronautics Act, the American aviation industry, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority, together make a very exceptional and potent brew. Let us look at this civil aviation as it was the year before this act was passed and as it was in 1939. During the calendar year of 1937 the domestic air lines in this country carried 1,100,000 passengers. In 1939 they carried 1,900,000 passengers, an increase of 73 percent. The air-express business in 1939 was 28 percent better than in 1937. The domestic air lines handled 27 percent more air-mail traffic in 1939 than in 1937.

As a result of this increase in traffic, the air-line industry, which, in the spring of 1938, was facing bankruptcy, is today a financially sound asset in our national economy which employs 9,445 people within the limits of the United States, and some 4,870 more beyond our borders.

Beyond doubt, the largest contributing factor to this new acceptance of air transportation by the American public is the new level of safety which these carriers have achieved in their operations. In the last 368 days the 17 air lines in the United States have suffered only one fatal accident. During that period they have flown a total of over 82,000,000 miles. For the last 10 months of that period they have flown without a single passenger fatality, doing a job of passenger carrying equivalent to transporting a quarter of a million people from New York to San Francisco.

A large part of the credit for this safety record must go to the pilots, the mechanics, the dispatchers, the executives of the air lines. At least an equal share of the credit should go to the Congress, which framed the Civil Aeronautics Act, and to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which administers it. The Civil Aeronautics Authority has watched over air-line safety like a mother watches over the health of a new-born child. From the very week it took office it began a policy of encouraging the air lines to set up their own agreements, eliminating practices which had contributed to accidents in the past. It has, through its own technical experts and through the Air Safety Board, conducted a constant study of all air-line mishaps and issued numerous regulations designed to increase air-line safety, which its field inspectors have then enforced with a new thoroughness. It has, through the Administrator, substantially extended and greatly improved the efficiency of the Federal airways system of aids to aerial navigation—those radio course beams, those beacon lights, those emergency fields, those centers of traffic control—upon which the entire operation of the air lines has come to depend. Granted adequate funds, there is no reason why the efforts of the Authority to insure air-line safety will not continue to be effective. With continued safety, there is no reason why the swift growth of air-line traffic and service to the communities will not continue.

Progress has been equally spectacular in the field of non-scheduled aviation. At the end of 1937 there were 17,681 citizens of the United States holding civilian pilot certificates. At the end of 1939 this number had risen to 31,264. At the end of 1937 there were 9,152 certificated civilian aircraft. Two years later there were 12,829. The total number of air-planes produced for civilian use in this country during 1937 was 2,289. The total number produced during 1939 reached a total of 3,800. The safety of this nonscheduled flying during 1939—and once again the Civil Aeronautics Authority deserves a substantial share of the credit—has improved 20 percent over 1937.

What is interesting and vital here is that these increases represent a new participation by individual Americans in aviation. In 1940 this rate of growth should not only continue, but be vastly stimulated by the training of no less than 10,000 new pilots in the civilian-pilot training program. Units have been installed in some 437 colleges and universities located in all 48 States, in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. In addition units have been set up in 70 communities throughout the United States for training persons not enrolled in colleges. With adequate backing of this program, the Civil Aeronautics Authority estimates that by June 1941 there will be more than 70,000 holders of civilian-pilot certificates in this country, more than a threefold increase over the number in force when it took office.

There are a dozen other items of civil aviation progress that could be added to the list—things like the establishment of trans-Atlantic airplane service, the Authority's excellent record in deciding rate cases and cases involving certificates of public convenience and necessity, a new effectiveness in the coordination of civilian aviation with the activities of the Army, the Navy, and the State Department, general technical progress in a number of fields, all operating toward a general increase in safety—but the main facts are enough to establish the one outstanding conclusion that this act, this industry, this Authority, rates every consideration that we can give. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Veterans' Administration, $580,180,544: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes except for cooking purposes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 77, line 6, after the period, insert: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation can be used for hospitalization or examination of persons other than veterans, unless a reciprocal schedule of pay is in effect with the agency or department involved."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. During the general debate on this bill, I called to the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] the fact that the employees of several Federal agencies, including the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Works Progress Administration, the Post Office Department, the Civil Service Commission, and the Unemployment Compensation Commission, also beneficiaries of the Railroad Retirement Board, are being examined by the medical staffs of the Veterans' Administration facilities scattered throughout the country. In many cases the employees of these Federal agencies are hospitalized and spend many weeks in veterans' facilities. I further pointed out at that time that all of the agencies referred to reimburse the Veterans' Administration at the rate of $3.75 a day for each person receiving medical service, with the exception of the Post Office Department, the Civil Service Commission, and the Unemployment Compensation Commission. These three agencies enjoy a special privilege that is charged to the expenses chalked up for the veterans of our wars. Since that discussion of this subject on the floor of this House, I have made special inquiry into this entire matter and I find that the position I took at that time was sound and correct in every detail.

In order to bear out my statement, I read from the printed hearings before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation taken last spring when General Hines appeared before our committee. I quote:

Mr. VAN ZANDT. General, may I interrupt you a moment? Can you furnish us with figures of the number of C. C. C. boys as well as post-office employees and other employees of the Federal Government who are hospitalized in Veterans' Administrative facilities?

General HINES. Yes; I can give them to you right now. This report is dated January 31. Of the total load hospitalized by types out of 71,432 grand total, we had 321 that were nonveterans. They would be divided between the C. C. C. people put in by the Employment Compensation Commission generally to be studied and to determine whether they are to be compensated for injury in the Government service, and some retired, either enlisted men or officers of the Army or the Navy. Now, in all cases except the Compensation Commission they pay the Veterans' Administration for the treatment at a reciprocal rate of $3.75 a day, established by the Federal Board. In no circumstances would any of those be taken in except as an act of humanity where somebody would be sent to our hospital for immediate treatment, if the bed was needed for the veteran. Now, it is true, and I think that is probably what you have in mind, because I know your interest and activity in hospitalizing veterans, it is true that if a C. C. C. boy comes in with a bad fracture, most of them are fractures or emergency operations for appendicitis or something, but fractures are generally the type that take the bed. But they are only hospitalized by the Army when our facility is available and the Army has none. They take care of the C. C. C. in their own hospitals wherever possible.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. In connection with the post-office employee being examined at one of your facilities?

General HINES. That is provided for by the civil service.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. They pay for it?

General HINES. No; but after a number of recommendations on that score I was advised by the Director, or the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget that he agrees with me on the suggestion that all services rendered other Government agencies should be reimbursed to the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. At the present time it is not?

General HINES. It is not; except for the Army, the C. C. C.

The CHAIRMAN. General, that includes the Army and Navy?

General HINES. The Army and Navy do it now.

The CHAIRMAN. They do?

General HINES. They do it now. And the C. C. C. But the Compensation Commission and the Civil Service Commission do not pay us for examinations.

The CHAIRMAN. But I notice, at least I gather the impression when they begin to attack the Veterans' Administration about its expenditures, that they do not allocate the expenses the Administration incurs in taking care of the Army and Navy and these other people to whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania is referring.

General HINES. You can say in the matter of hospitalization it is a small matter. But in the matter of examinations it is becoming a very important factor, and in the question of examination for civil service it will become so. It was for that reason I made the recommendation that no matter what is done for another Government agency—we should do it, I think, wherever we can do it without denying the veterans relief—we should be reimbursed, for two good reasons: It is good business, and it is good budgetary practice, as they actually know the cost of the other agencies of the Government.

Now, in order that you may have some idea of the extent of these activities, most of them relate to what is known as outpatient, but let me give you the examinations, for instance, made for the Civil Service Commission. During the month of December 1938 there were 1,082 individuals examined. The Employees Compensation Commission, 59; 60 allied pensioners, that is principally for Canada and Great Britain, where their veterans are in the United States, we have a reciprocal agreement with them that they will hospitalize any of our veterans in Canada and we will hospitalize theirs, and we are reimbursed, which, I think, is a fair rule and very helpful.

Now, for the Civilian Conservation Corps we had 78. Works Progress Administration, 205. Railroad Retirement, 257, but they are paid for. The Railroad Retirement reimburses us for examinations. Now, the total number of individuals examined that month was 30,536. So the committee can well see that the agency that causes the greatest amount of work is that of the Civil Service Commission, and that is probably caused by the Post Office Department.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Have you any idea, General, how long it takes to examine one of these individuals?

General HINES. It depends entirely on the character of the examination. If they are to go through the clinic it will take a day.

The CHAIRMAN. How long will it take; a day?

General HINES. It will take a day. If they found any great involvement that will require any special tests, for instance, a gastrointestinal X-ray service, it will require 2 or 3 days. But the general examinations are those that are made within 2 or 3 hours.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Then I understand, General, with the exception of the Army, Navy, and C. C. C., and the Railroad Retirement Board, the other agencies of the Federal Government who send their employees to the Veterans' Administration pay nothing?

General HINES. For examination?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. For examination. And that is charged against the veterans?

General HINES. That is charged against the veterans, but it will not be any longer because the Director of the Bureau of the Budget has agreed that for any service rendered he will see that we are reimbursed.

Mrs. ROGERS. How much do they pay for care at a hospital?

General HINES. We have a reciprocal rate of $3.75 a day.

Mrs. ROGERS. The Army and Navy pay you?

General HINES. The Army and Navy pay us, and we pay them when they hospitalize, with one exception, in the tubercular Fitzsimons General Hospital at Denver we pay a $4 rate. Of course, hospitalization of tubercular patients is much more expensive.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. General, how long has this been going on?

General HINES. Well, it has been going on from the beginning. My argument on the question of reimbursement has been going on about 3 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Who pays for these W. P. A. patients?

General HINES. We have no W. P. A. in our hospitals, unless it would be taking a person in as an act of humanity who was brought there, as any hospital will take them in, if they are able to, as any private hospital will, and if our own are able to, and if they have to be hospitalized as an emergency, they reimburse the Veterans' Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand; but who reimburses for the W. P. A.?

General HINES. There is no reimbursement for the W. P. A. We will not take in the W. P. A. unless they are veterans in the W. P. A. Some are not eligible except under the emergency case where a man is brought to a hospital at a point where there is no other agency to take care of him.

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to say if we are not reimbursed there is a rather dangerous line of demarcation for us to be watchful of. By the way, let me ask about these 300; how many of these W. P. A. men did you say were examined?

General HINES. W. P. A. that were examined, Works Progress Administration, 258 during January. That was not necessarily hospitalization.

The CHAIRMAN. No; but they were examinations?

General HINES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That were made at the expense of the Veterans' Administration?

General HINES. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And yet every time anybody wants to jump on the veterans they jump on the expense of the Veterans' Administration, and we have to crawl through the eye of a needle, from a legislative standpoint, to get our bills through, and you can get one through just by saying "W. P. A." It looks like to me here is the point I am driving at—that the expenses ought not to be added to the Veterans' Administration, and, incidentally, to the veterans.

General HINES. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And if it is going to grow there is a probability of its shoving the Veterans' Administration out on the outside.

General HINES. That is the fear I had—that it would grow; that caused me to ask for reimbursement. There is one type of W. P. A. worker, Mr. Chairman, that might land in our hospitals. That would be in a case of accident, where the Compensation Commission would have them hospitalized. And I have no doubt Congressman VAN ZANDT's case of the post-office employee is probably a case of accident, which was put in our hospital by the Compensation Commission because it could include any Government agency.

In addition to the information furnished by General Hines, in the testimony just referred to, I am informed by the Veterans' Administration that during the month of December 1939, 1,323 employees of the Post Office Department, Civil Service Commission, and the Unemployment Compensation Commission were examined by the medical staffs of various veterans' hospitals. In order to make a complete medical check-up on these Federal employees, it was necessary for the doctors to conduct 3,812 separate examinations.

Now, mind you, as I read from the testimony of General Hines a moment ago, some of these Federal employees spend from 2 to 3 days in the veterans' hospitals if special examinations are required. I was further informed by the Veterans' Administration today that the departments and agencies enjoying this special privilege are opposed to reimbursing the Veterans' Administration for these services.

Now, in reference to the point of order made by my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] I insist that my amendment is not legislation but a limitation such as already exists in the pending bill.

I ask the Members of this House whether it is fair for the employees of the various departments of the Government to receive medical services at veterans' facilities and then have those services charged against the veterans? I do not believe that any Member of this House will disagree with me about the unfairness of such a practice. Gentlemen, I ask your support of my amendment which will give the veterans a fair deal in this matter. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make his point of order?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not know whether the Veterans' Bureau has been compensated or not. The gentleman knows of my interest in the veterans and that I would not do anything to harm them. I cannot believe that General Hines would do anything to injure the veterans of this country, for I feel that he is one of their greatest champions.

Not being familiar with the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I must insist on my point of order.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. My good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] finds himself in a very difficult position, as I know he is a real friend of the veterans. In the absence of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who is in charge of this bill, I know that the gentleman from New York is duty bound to oppose all amendments. That does not reflect his personal views on this matter, and when this point of order has been settled the gentleman from New York will be free to support the veterans, as he always has done since he has been a Member of this House.

I am aware that in the district represented by the gentleman from New York, in the Bronx Veterans' Administration Hospital, veterans are forced to wait in line while employees of Federal Government departments are being examined by the doctors at the hospital. Apparently the gentleman from New York is not aware of the fact that the cost of examining the employees of the Post Office Department and Civil Service Commission is charged to the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If that situation exists, I am opposed to it because I never have voted against any measure of merit that would benefit the veterans.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has made a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in the nature of a limitation, and therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be a proper one and that it should be adopted by the committee. [Applause.] There is no question but that the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is sound. My friend, the gentleman from New York, who we all know is strong in his championing of the cause of the veteran, frankly admits that he does not know anything about the situation, that otherwise he would support the amendment if such situation existed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I know that such situation does exist. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will support the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then I believe it is unnecessary to argue further. I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the author of the amendment if his amendment contains anything that would prevent the admission to a veterans' hospital of an accident case occurring outside of the hospital.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLER. That is covered?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the Committee also ought to know that there are certain people not veterans who are hospitalized in veterans' hospitals for whom no compensation is being paid to the Veterans' Administration. This ought to be taken into consideration at this time. The members ought to realize that certain civil-service employees are being hospitalized but that the departments to which they are attached do not pay a penny for their hospitalization.

I am delighted that the gentleman from New York has agreed to support the amendment.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. When a person is admitted to a Veterans' Administration facility from the Railroad Retirement Board, or the W. P. A., or from the Civilian Conservation Corps, these agencies reimburse the Veterans' Administration at the rate of $3.75 per day.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But not in every case.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Not in every case. Exceptions are made in some cases. My amendment would make it mandatory that the Veterans' Administration be reimbursed for every person not a veteran.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. This should not be charged up against the Administration as a cost on behalf of the veterans. It should be distributed through the different departments benefited instead of all being borne by the Veterans' Administration. The following is a table showing the number of veterans' hospitals, the veterans and nonveterans receiving domiciliary care, and so forth. January 4, 1940, there were 1,176 nonveterans hospitalized in veterans' facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief statement which I promised to make on behalf of the Maryland delegation in the House. The Hospitalization Board has considered and favorably passed upon several new construction projects for Veterans' Administration facilities, one of which is a new hospital for Maryland. So far, however, the Bureau of the Budget has not submitted to the Congress estimates for the construction of this facility or for several facilities that have been authorized.

The Maryland delegation in the House have individually and collectively been most diligent in the interest of trying to secure action upon this facility, but, as will be shown in the hearings, no funds are included in this bill for new hospital facilities. There are funds for added construction at existing facilities, but it seems not in accordance with the program of the Budget so far to include funds for new facilities. I am told that the Maryland institution stands high on the priority list if and when funds are made available for the construction of new facilities.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that General Hines stated to the Maryland delegation, through the very able dean of the delegation, the gentleman from Maryland, the Honorable WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr., who is absent from the city at this time on official business, acting as chairman of a special committee of the House of Representatives holding hearings in California on oil legislation, that he recommended that the money be appropriated for the hospital; however, the President did not send it up to the Budget Bureau, and is it not further true that the Maryland delegation has been told that in all probability this money will be available in July, and, if available at that time, the Maryland hospital will be the No. 1 project?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I have been told by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] that such assurance has been given him.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I see my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland, Congressman D'ALESSANDRO, on his feet seeking recognition to express his views on this matter.

I desire to pay tribute to him for the energetic manner in which he has demonstrated his friendship for the veterans. He has cooperated with other members of the delegation in this matter, expressing with me and others the great need for new hospital facilities in and around the city of Baltimore.

It is indeed a sorrowful sight to witness the many hundreds of our veterans, suffering from various ailments growing out of the World War, being required to wait for long periods of time before receiving the proper hospitalization.

I want to state, too, that the other members of the Maryland delegation have also cooperated in every possible way in order to bring this much-needed hospital to Maryland.

I feel sure that under the leadership of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], no effort will be spared in order to bring this matter to a successful conclusion.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And also I was told that Massachusetts would have a hospital this year for the Boston area, a general and surgical hospital, which we have been fighting for years to secure. Now we are told there is no money available. With the billions that have been spent by this administration, it is a tragedy that more hospitals have not been built.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. What I wanted to make clear is that there are no funds in here for new facilities, only for added construction.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in Continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States, or a person in the service of the United States on the date of the approval of this act who, being eligible for citizenship, has filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: On pages 78 and 79, at the end of the paragraph, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add: "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this bill, except those for the civil service, shall be used or expended for so-called information service in the nature of argument or for detective work."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, yesterday through parliamentary mischance it proved impossible to find out the judgment of the House in reference to the matter covered by my amendment. In order that such judgment may be obtained, I wish to present some considerations.

The purpose of this amendment is to put an end to the publicity action on the part of these independent offices for the advancement of their theories. One hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars is to be spent for this purpose if the bill is not changed—$152,000 for argument in favor of Government projects. This one case illustrates what is going on.

In my hand is a pamphlet of 88 pages issued by the United States Housing Authority, a picture book, intended to secure the votes of electors in the various cities and towns in behalf of these projects. No man can question the propriety of giving the public complete and exact information about the law. My amendment is so worded it does not preclude information, but it does preclude improper and oftentimes inexact arguments.

To illustrate, let me read from this pamphlet and from another two extracts. The first says of the original law:

The United States Housing Authority exists solely to rehouse the lowest income third—

And the other quotes the words of the law itself—families who are in the lowest income group.

The lowest income third are to be helped by this legislation. But throughout the book, however, we find that the text of this pamphlet and the other one I also hold in my hand does not jibe with the law. It says, for example:

The net construction cost of buildings for U. S. H. A. projects varies from a maximum in the Northeastern States of about $3,500 per dwelling unit to a minimum in the South and Southwest of about $2,300.

Here in their own pamphlet they tell you that the minimum is about $2,300. About half the people of this country have incomes of less than $1,000 a family. A $2,300 house ought to rent for about 20 percent of its cost, or $460. How under the sun can you house a family and make them pay $460, or by any subsidy now in effect bring it down to what half the people of this country are now paying or can afford to pay?

The project as it is being carried out according to these figures is inuring to the benefit of the lower middle class. The law says it is to be for persons of the lowest incomes, and yet no person of the lowest income can afford to live in one of these structures. Therefore, I trust my amendment may receive your favorable consideration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. Chairman, the objective of the gentleman if it is to curtail the excessive expenditures for these informational services is certainly commendable. I judge from the gentleman's remarks, however, that he is aiming the amendment directly at the United States Housing Authority.

I call his attention to the fact it was shown in the debate yesterday that the committee cut the amount which the United States Housing Authority might use for informational services from something over $300,000 which they are using this year to $152,000 which they may use next year. That is more than a 50-percent cut in the amount which they may use for that purpose. It may be that that is an excessive amount even for them to use. However, the effect of the gentleman's amendment is not confined to the United States Housing Authority. It would preclude any agency in this bill from spending any funds whatever for informational service except the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. The amendment specifies that it shall not be used for argument.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Who is going to say whether it is an argument or whether it is not an argument? Who is going to determine a question of that sort? The gentleman says this amendment is aimed at any informational service that is an argument. I feel confident that my distinguished and learned friend wanted to state his position here and that this is more or less a pro forma amendment. I cannot believe he intends it as a serious amendment.

This amendment will reach such agencies as the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is engaged in a big program which the Congress has approved and of which the country approves. In connection with giving necessary information to the public about their program, I do not know who is going to say that a particular pamphlet is argumentative or not argumentative. Maybe they are engaged in selling ideas to the public on the question of student-training programs or something of the kind. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and all such commissions of necessity have to maintain certain informational services with reference to the activities in which they engage. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I believe, would certainly create a great deal of confusion and work a great deal of havoc in connection with that service. I hope very much that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Would it not also curtail the activities of the Federal Housing Administration?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Undoubtedly so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Congress to one particular use to which the United States Housing Authority is putting some of the money that is being appropriated to it for propaganda purposes. In numerous places over the country referendums are being held by citizens to determine by vote whether they want these housing projects. I have had personal experience in several places where these referendums were held. The United States Housing Authority uses this money, which is raised from general taxes or borrowing, for propaganda to oppose the citizens themselves in their efforts to vote down the housing projects. I should like to know where there is any justice in a thing of this kind.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is a grave injustice to use the money of the taxpayers of the United States for a purpose of this kind. I would not want anything done to this bill, of course, to limit the proper use of funds for giving information in connection with legitimate services that are supposed to be rendered, but I am against the U. S. H. A. being given any funds for propaganda purposes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wonder if the gentleman has read that marvelous book gotten up by the Electric Home and Farm Authority? If the gentleman has not read it, certainly he ought to read it. It is a very ridiculous showing-up of the wonderful things that have been done under the Electric Home and Farm Authority. The Housing Administration is nothing compared with that.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. As far as that is concerned, it is exactly in line with what they are doing in Germany, what they are doing in Italy, and what they are doing in Russia. They have to sell their projects in that manner.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. The gentleman would not want to say that he would like to stop any Government agency from putting its case before the public?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. In answer to the question, let me say that if these projects cannot sell themselves on their merits without this propaganda they are not worth putting out. [Applause.]

Mr. SACKS. Does not the gentleman believe it is the duty of Government at least to educate its people with reference to progress, and so forth, in addition to putting forth an idea?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If this Government would begin to perform its first and primary duty, that of giving justice to the people, instead of sticking its nose into everything, it would do a whole lot better. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to inject myself into this discussion, but I cannot sit in my seat and listen to charges when I know from my own experience a contrary situation exists. I have a housing project in my district. I shall not discuss the merits or demerits of low-cost housing now because that question is not before the Committee. I am in favor of the low-cost-housing program. I know I have been threatened in the past because I supported such legislation. When the project was under consideration, rather extreme measures to try to have me oppose such legislation were used. There have been meetings in my district opposing projects, but I have seen no evidence of the Housing Authority spending any money. I believe it is perfectly all right for any association in opposition to a project to spend money for that purpose, and I have no objection to their spending the money that way. They certainly are powerful organizations, at least as far as my experience is concerned, in connection with the organizations up my way who are opposed to the low-cost-housing program. They have a perfect right to their views.

Mine has been a rather interesting experience, in view of the pressure that was attempted to be imposed on me, and interesting in that the evidences of expenditures came from the other angle and not from the United States Housing Authority. The gentleman who preceded me may have had a different experience. I am not in a position where I can take issue with the gentleman on that.

So far as I am personally concerned, my experience has been that strong agitation has come from those who are opposed to such projects. I have seen none from the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. By what method would the people of this country learn of the new things that the Government is compelled to do unless we did something of the character that is being discussed at the present moment?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to go into that. I am just impersonally stating that I have had considerable experience in my own district and what it has been on the aspect raised by the gentleman who preceded me. I have encountered the efforts of those who opposed, and they had the right to oppose, and I have encountered their pressure in their determination to try to have me change my views on the question. I have seen no evidence of the United States Housing Authority spending a penny in connection with any of the meetings that have been held in Boston in connection with any of the housing projects in any of the various sections of that city.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I would like to observe that the same thing the gentleman states has happened in our city, where the pressure has come not from the Housing Authority but from those opposed to it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. The total amount used for administrative promotions for officers and employees under any appropriation or other fund made available in this act shall not exceed the amount estimated to be available for such purpose on the basis of the Budget estimate for such appropriation or fund exclusive of new money in any such Budget estimate for such administrative promotions.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 79, line 3, after the word "used", insert the words "on an annual basis"; and in the same line, after the word "administrative", insert "within grade"; and on page 79, line 6, strike out the word "estimated" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "determined by the Bureau of the Budget."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very reluctant to impose myself on the House at this late hour, and I do so only for the purpose of bringing to your attention some figures that I intend to insert in the RECORD as of tomorrow.

Much has been said about the whole question of administrative promotions. The Budget has worked out a formula under which those over $3,200 might be promoted and those under $3,200 if they have not received promotions within a given period of time.

When one of the agencies was before one of our subcommittees recently, I said to the Director, "I wish you would insert in the record of the hearings"—which have not been published, by the way—"an estimate of the people who have been promoted, one, two, three, four, or five steps before July 1, 1939, for the purpose of defeating the so-called pay freeze in the reorganization bill." When the record finally came back it was most interesting. I shall not weary you with it now to indicate how many were promoted three steps and two steps, how many whose rating was only good, rather than very good or excellent, under the Classification Act, received as much as a three-step promotion in order to defeat the provisions of the reorganization bill effective July 1, 1939.

So if you are interested in this entire question of administrative promotions, if you want to see an example of some of the abuses that can be found in the departments, I suggest you examine these remarks.

One problem which has pressed itself upon the attention of the Committee on Appropriations ever since the membership of that committee assembled early in December to hold hearings on appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1941 has been the question of promotions for the personnel employed in the executive branch of the Government.

There is little doubt but what there are a considerable number of Federal employees who have worked at the same salary level for a great many years without receiving an administrative promotion or an increase in remuneration. This is probably especially true in respect to those who are employed in the lower salary grades. It would appear, therefore, that this matter requires attention by Congress.

In considering the whole matter there is good reason to believe that while injustices exist as a result of failure to provide funds for such promotions, there is also good reason to believe that flagrant abuses exist in respect to unwarranted promotions. If such abuses could be eliminated, it is entirely possible that a substantial portion of the funds necessary for deserving promotions might be found within the limit of the appropriation which Congress ordinarily makes for the various agencies and departments of Government for salary and administrative expenses.

I shall deal with the matter of abuses in more detail when the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture comes to the floor of the House. For the moment, let me submit a table which I prepared from the Budget figures which were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations under the title "Basis for administrative promotion allowances in estimates for fiscal year 1941." This table indicates that the percentages listed for the various departments and agencies show the percentage by which available appropriations are or have been adequate to bring below-average salaries to the average of grades as of June 30, 1939. This table does not purport to show all agencies, but only those where 500 or more employees are employed:

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, 1941, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SECCOMBE, for an indefinite period, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. CROWTHER, for the remainder of the week, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the bill just passed and to incorporate some statements from Government reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include Public Document No. 177.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, Monday is District of Columbia Day. I think, however, there will be a short program. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that after the business of that committee is concluded it may be in order to call the Calendar for private omnibus claims bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand this is not the same omnibus claims bill that we had the other day.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; this is not the alien omnibus bill. These are private claims.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Could the gentleman tell us at this time what the program is for the rest of the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations will on Tuesday report the Post Office-Treasury appropriation bill, and consideration of that bill will be begun on that day. On Wednesday it is the intention to begin the calling of the Calendar of Committees. Thursday and Friday will be devoted to the consideration of the Post Office-Treasury appropriation bill, and the members of that committee believe that will take 2 days. I might state further that if the Rules Committee on Monday reports a rule extending the life of the Dies committee, that rule will be taken up for consideration the first thing Tuesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that would come ahead of the appropriation bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; during the first hour on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas with reference to the calling of the private omnibus claims bills on Monday?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made this afternoon on the bill just under discussion by inserting therein a table from the Veterans' Administration showing the beneficiaries receiving hospital treatment and the beneficiaries receiving domiciliary care, and the nonveterans receiving hospitalization, and other information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include some brief excerpts from a dispatch in the New York Herald Tribune on November 25.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a one-page letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a brief article by Mr. R. Wallace Eugoh on the subject of free speech; and on another topic to revise and extend my remarks and include a statement by Mr. Eugene L. Orvis, railroad traffic attorney, on railroads and pipe lines.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, both requests are granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an address by Governor O'Connor of Maryland given at Indianapolis, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the business of the day and other special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENTS TO UNITED STATES MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point. I have a special order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the act of June 8, 1926, which this bill amends, increased the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy and number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy by 40 at each institution, and provided that appointments to fill the vacancies created by the act should be made by the President from among the sons of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, employed in the active service by the War Department or Navy Department who were killed in action or have died, or may hereafter die, of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or pre-existing injury or disease aggravated, in line of duty during the World War.

The appointments under this act correspond to those made by the President from among enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and National Guard. They in no way affect congressional appointments or those made upon recommendations of Senators and Representatives.

The youngest of the possible beneficiaries of the act of June 8, 1926, was born in December 1921 and has now passed his eighteenth birthday. After 1941 he will be too old to enter the Naval Academy and after 1943 too old to enter the Military Academy. This act, unless amended, will thus expire by its own limitation in 1943.

The purpose of the act of June 8, 1926, was to provide educational and professional opportunities for a limited number of sons of those who sacrificed their lives for the country in the World War. The increase in the authorized number of cadets and midshipmen was incidental to this primary purpose.

The limiting date, July 2, 1921, specified in the act is more or less arbitrary. The son of a veteran who has died since that date of a war-service-connected disability is just as much entitled to assistance as one of a veteran who died prior to that date and after his discharge from the military or naval service. This was realized at the time the act was passed, but it was felt that some limit should be placed upon the number made eligible for these comparatively few appointments. This was accomplished by confining the appointments to sons of those who were killed or died during the legal period of the World War.

The number of eligibles, originally more than 6,000, is now 1,536 for appointment to the Military Academy and 242 to the Naval Academy. Next year—1941—there will be only 594 eligible for appointment to the Military Academy and only 101 to the Naval Academy. In 1942 all will be too old to enter the Naval Academy, while the number still eligible for the Military Academy will be only 201.

This bill extends the provisions of the act of June 8, 1926, to include the sons of those who have died since July 2, 1921, or may hereafter die, of a World War service-connected disability, or, to use the language of the bill, "of wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted, or preexisting disease or injury aggravated, in line of duty during the world War."

The records of the Veterans' Administration show that there were on June 30, 1939, 15,760 sons of veterans who have died since the World War of service-connected disabilities. These boys range in age from infancy to 17, inclusive. For compensation purposes, they are divided by the Veterans' Administration into two groups, one consisting of 2,795 under 10 years of age, and the other of 12,965 from 10 to 17, inclusive. The Veterans' Administration has compiled no statistics for children after they have reached and passed their eighteenth birthday, but it is fair to assume that the number is comparatively small. The number of boys rendered eligible under this bill who will desire to take the examination in any one year for appointment at the Military or Naval Academy is, of course, problematic, but judging from the experience with the examinations under the original act it is believed that it will not be so great as to render the administration of the act impracticable or burdensome.

No one has given me greater assistance in this work than Gen. P. C. Harris, whose unselfish services to the American Legion are known wherever Legionnaires congregate. It was his interest that promoted a study of the situation in foreign countries. In 1923, for example, he talked with the commandant of the Royal Military Academy in Rome and learned how much the Italian Government was doing for the sons and daughters of the disabled. From that came his first formal steps to prepare for the act of June 8, 1926, which he wrote, when for the first time the sons of those killed in action before July 21, 1921, would be eligible for appointment to West Point or Annapolis.

THE SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE FARMERS' PART IN AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, the farmers of this country can make or break the Democratic Party; they can make or break the Republican Party. That fact has been demonstrated. In 18 States, the farm population of which is more than 33 percent of the total, farmers now hold the balance of political power, and the electoral vote of these States can decide the next national election. This can be done without the votes of such important industrial States as New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio.

No wonder, then, that the distinguished leader of the minority in this House is in such a frenzy of fear that the farm vote has been lost to the Republican Party; no wonder he is attempting through his committee of 46 Republican Congressmen to evolve some plan that again will bamboozle and befog the farmer and win him back to the support of the candidate of the G. O. P., whoever he may be. This committee is a purely political agency of the G. O. P. and not a committee of Congress. It replaces the G. O. P. "brain trust" of 1936 that died with Senator Dickinson's famous "dog food" speech.

My colleagues, I am "talking turkey" to you, and I am "talking turkey" to the farmers of America. They have it in their power to say whether we are to continue the New Deal with its Nation-wide farm program under the A. A. A., a program that has steadily and surely pulled agriculture out of the morass of low prices and low income, or whether we are to try some newfangled plan to be offered by that party which for more than half a century, under the guise of a protective tariff, has promised agricultural equality with other industry and has never fulfilled that promise.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party has never kept faith with the farmer, and it never will. The Republican Party cannot keep faith with the farmer at the same time that it takes orders from Wall Street, the Liberty League, and big business, whose chief interest in the farmer is as a source of tribute. For 50 years it was so little concerned with his welfare that it did not even mention him in its platforms, secure in the belief that a safe majority of farmers were traditionally Republican and would stay put, in spite of political neglect and exploitation of their interests. It was not until the aftermath of the World War had brought distress and disaster to agriculture that the Republican Party discovered there was a farm problem. In 1920, however, fearful of the loss of the farm vote, the G. O. P. National Convention said in its platform: "The Farmer is the backbone of the Nation."

But let us for a moment look back upon conditions that followed the World War. European nations were broke. They needed money to buy materials and supplies, and they turned to the United States. We bought back many of our securities that we had sold them when we needed money, and in addition loaned them huge sums of money. We had changed from a debtor to a creditor nation.

In 1921, European buying power, due to the depression, was low and exports of our food products declined. But by 1925 Europe had partially recovered, and with increased production there was increased competition in the international markets for farm products. By 1932 Europe had increased its acreage of important crops above the prewar level by nearly 100,000,000 acres, or 16 percent. Crop production outside the United States was about 40 percent above prewar level. This increase in foreign competition, and a trend toward autarchy and self-sufficiency abroad, brought about a persistent decline in our own exports of food products from 1921 on, long before the 1929 collapse. The decline in foreign demand for American exports was made greatly worse by our own stupid and disastrous tariff policies. The Republican Party, stubbornly adhering to its high protective tariff policy, raised our tariff walls in 1922 by the enactment of the Fordney-McCumber bill, and finally pushed them to an all-time high in 1930 with the passage of the iniquitous Smoot-Hawley bill. Meantime, we were in effect subsidizing part of our export market. Between 1925 and 1929, American loans abroad averaged more than a billion dollars a year. In all, about $6,000,000,000 were loaned to European countries during that period. So far as our foreign trade was concerned, these loans were one of the greatest subsidies of all time, for most of them were never repaid. We gave nearly $6,000,000,000 to our European customers and they gave it right back in exchange for some of our agricultural products.

We were thus able to keep a part of our foreign market despite a Republican policy which fundamentally tended to discourage international trade. Of course, such a situation could not continue. Speculation cut off the flow of funds abroad and in the years 1926-29 surpluses of our great export crops began piling up.

All this time the Republican Party, which in 1920 had declared the farmer to be "the backbone of the Nation" kept on promising, but in spite of the efforts of some of its more farseeing members it did nothing and offered nothing practical for the relief of agriculture, firm in its belief that it could still fool the farmer. It came back in 1924 with more promises, and a frank confession that "we recognize that agricultural activities are still struggling with adverse conditions that have brought deep distress," and then it continued, "we pledge the party to take whatever steps are necessary to bring back a balanced condition between agriculture, industry, and labor."

Mr. Speaker, "by their fruits ye shall know them." A Republican Congress, after long delay and almost endless discussion, finally passed the McNary-Haugen bill, authored by a distinguished member of the Republican Party at the other end of the Capitol, who now says, "After considerable thought, I have arrived at the conclusion that the Republican Party in 1940 can be successful if it demonstrates to the farm vote and those dependent on the farm vote that the party is interested, as formerly, in their welfare." Mark you, my friends, how "formerly" interested in the farmer's welfare the Republican Party was. It was so much interested in the farmer's welfare "formerly" that after a Republican Congress had passed the McNary-Haugen bill, a Republican President promptly vetoed it, and a Republican Congress could not muster enough votes to pass it over his veto. Again in 1928 a Republican Congress reenacted the McNary-Haugen bill, and again it was vetoed by a Republican President. These are the "steps" which the Republican Party in national convention promised to take in order to "bring back a balanced condition between agriculture, industry, and labor."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ZIMMERMAN). Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOOK. I do not yield for that purpose.

Another national election was at hand in 1928 and the Republican Party, still smug in its belief it could fool the farmer, made more promises, reiterating its policy of a protective tariff as vital to American agriculture, and continuing:

The agricultural problem is national in scope, and, as such, is recognized by the Republican Party, which pledges its strength and its energy to a solution of the same.

And so another 4 years of Republican control. A Republican Congress enacted the bill creating the Federal Farm Board. We all know what happened. Purchases of surplus commodities without control of production. The more the Farm Board bought, the greater the production—the more farm prices continued to fall, the greater the surpluses. And, finally, a loss to the taxpayers of nearly half a billion dollars. But the Republican mountain labored again and brought forth, not a mouse, but the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, which has been gnawing at the very vitals of our foreign trade ever since.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that the Republican Party never has kept faith with the farmers and never will.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is making a very interesting speech. He invited the Members to be here and I think we should have a full House to hear him. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, the gentleman should not set that kind of a precedent—taking a Member off the floor in that way.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order so that the half dozen present may continue to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. The American farmers will read this in the RECORD and the Republican Party will hear of it at the next election.

Up to date they have never shown by their votes in Congress that they have any real consideration for him. When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed in 1933, 90 percent of the Democrats voted for it and 63 percent of the Republicans voted against it. After the A. A. A. was invalidated by a decision of the Supreme Court and soil conservation legislation was up for consideration, 89 percent of the Democrats of House and Senate voted for it, and 78 percent of the Republicans voted against it. And in the case of the present Agricultural Adjustment Act, 81 percent of the Democrats voted for it, and 85 percent of the Republicans voted against it. In the last regular session of Congress almost the entire Republican membership of the House voted against appropriating money to give the farmers parity payments and also voted against the appropriation to provide funds so that loans could be made on their surplus crops.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that that last statement is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a point of order.

Mr. HOOK. Oh, yes; the Republican Party has been "formerly" interested in the farmers' welfare in the same way it is now interested in him—by making promises and befogging issues in an election year. Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase a great American's homely saying, "The Republicans can fool all the farmers part of the time, and part of the farmers all the time; but they can't fool all the farmers all the time."

Before leaving the Republican Party and its promises, however, I want to pay my respects to some of its members. Not all of them are wholly blinded by partisan prejudice. The distinguished gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the minority leader's committee, has supported by his votes and his speeches on this floor practically all of the farm legislation that has been recommended by the House Committee on Agriculture, and so has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST]. A few other Republicans have voted their convictions against the wishes of their party leaders.

The distinguished minority leader from Massachusetts, however, declares that "the administration's farm policy is now a demonstrated failure," and "it is imperative we work out an affirmative and constructive approach to the rescue of agriculture. It is an outstanding problem, and upon our efforts in behalf of the farmer will depend in a large measure the future prosperity of our country." Mark you, "our efforts."

When the Democratic Party took control of the National Government in 1933, after 12 years of Republican rule, and after all the promises Republicans had made—the same kind of promises they are making now—agriculture was worse off than it had ever been in its history. Farm prices had fallen to the lowest figures ever known. Although farmers represented 25 percent of the total population, the farmers' share of the national income was only 7 percent.

Someone has said, "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts." I say to the farmers of this country, "Beware of Republicans making promises." In the light of their record, in the light of their broken promises, how, in the name of common sense, can the farmers ever again trust the Republican Party?

Mr. Speaker, I have said that when this Democratic administration came into control of the National Government it found left on its doorstep by the Republican Party a prostrate agriculture. The problem of rescuing agriculture was a stupendous one. But under the inspiring leadership of Farmer Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the indefatigable efforts of the greatest Secretary of Agriculture this country has ever had, supported by the great farm organizations and tireless Democratic leaders in House and Senate, we have gone a long way toward placing agriculture on an equality with industry. We have not yet solved the whole problem, but we are certainly on our way. Are we now to turn back and permit the Republican Party to start all over again with something new and untried? I do not believe it.

I have faith that a great and constantly increasing majority of the farmers of America believe in the Democratic Party. That faith is founded on the greatly increased participation of the farmers in the A. A. A. farm program. It is said that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating," and if more than 85 percent of the farmers like it, how can there be any question that the program is working? Mind you, it is the farmers' program. It is, as Secretary Wallace has said, "Economic democracy in action."

Now let us see how this has been brought about. Let us start from the beginning.

My colleague from Massachusetts appointed a political committee of 46 House Republicans to make what he called a "study of the agricultural problem." In a statement quoted in the press announcing the appointment of this political committee, the Republican minority leader referred to the "depressed and unhealthy state of American agriculture," and to "its present unhealthy plight." He termed the administration's farm policy a "demonstrated failure" and sent the members of his committee out, not for the purpose of getting facts, but to make political capital out of the agricultural situation by attempting to mislead and fool the farmers and the public in regard to the remarkable betterment of the conditions of the people living on the land, and of the Nation as a whole since President Franklin D. Roosevelt took the helm in 1933.

The Roosevelt administration from the first has insisted that the farm problem is an economic one. It has kept it from being made a political football. The fact that 85 percent, or more than 6,000,000 farmers in America, are cooperating in the program is sufficient evidence, it seems to me, that the thinking people living on our farms consider the program a good one. At the very time my colleague from Massachusetts referred without qualification to the administration's farm policy as a "demonstrated failure," 90 percent of the commercial farmers of his own State were taking part in the program, cooperating with the administration in adjusting their rotations and improving their income and their soils.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman want to be fair?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thought he did. The gentleman mentioned my own district, my own State. I think the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows the farmers of Massachusetts have not shared 90 percent of the farm program.

Mr. HOOK. Ninety percent of the commercial farmers of Massachusetts have.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is a commercial farmer?

Mr. HOOK. Any farmer who raises a crop and sells it for cash.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What kind of crop?

Mr. HOOK. Any kind of crop, and 90 percent of them have been benefited.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many farmers sell their crops for cash?

Mr. HOOK. They all do when they can get it. They are getting cash for their crops now, but they did not sell their crops for cash under the Republican program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am afraid the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, at the very time my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts termed the farm policy a "demonstrated failure" thousands of farmers in his State and in adjoining States, where the great hurricane of 1938 caused unprecedented loss of lives and property, were being rehabilitated and placed in position to continue with profitable farm operations through the very agencies decried by the Congressman from Massachusetts. Sufferers of drought, flood, and tornado have been aided and put on their feet again through adjustments in the Federal farm program, and the special enactments of this Congress.

At the time when the President called Congress into extraordinary session to adjust our neutrality laws in order to meet the established fact of war in Europe my colleague from the Bay State devoted his own primary efforts toward the launching of this false political attack on the Nation's great foundational farm program basically essential in our program of national preparedness.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. HOOK. I cannot yield.

"Let us look at the record." The seriousness of the needs of agriculture and the effectiveness of the national farm program and other recovery measures are illustrated by the farm income record for the past 8 years. In 1932 the gross farm income fell to the unprecedented low of $5,000,000,000. By 1937 the gross farm income had risen to $10,000,000,000. It was more than nine billion in 1938 and approached $10,000,000,000 in 1939. The farmers look hopefully toward even greater income in 1940. The benefits of this increased farmer buying power were shared by city workers as well. Mail-order sales in 1938 increased to $463,000,000 from the low point of $231,000,000 in 1932. All records in mail-order sales were broken in 1939, and Christmas sales and the volume of mail in this Nation were reported to have been the largest on record during the last Christmas season. As compared to 1932, farm machinery sales increased more than 350 percent in 1938. Automobile sales were 100 percent higher in farm States and fertilizer sales 88 percent higher. In 1932 farmers were being forced from the land by foreclosures as never before in our history. The number of forced farm sales resulting from foreclosures and other causes declined 68 percent from March 1933 to March 1939, and farm bankruptcies declined 70 percent in the same period. With the farmer's business now on a sound foundation, the total value of all farm land and buildings increased $5,000,000,000 from March 1933, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt took over, to March 1939. As summarized in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1939:

Agriculture has provided an abundance of food supplies at low prices. Many persons unable to buy farm products have received high-quality foodstuffs in large volume through relief agencies. Persons with incomes have been able to satisfy their food wants with small expenditures and to devote a larger share of their incomes than usual to the purchase of other goods.

In referring to the depression that followed 1929, Secretary Wallace states in his 1939 report, that—

Farm-commodity prices were abysmally low; farm surpluses were of towering proportions. There was widespread farm distress. A comprehensive program of crop adjustment and farm relief was necessary. In the field of finance it was necessary not only to strengthen the existing farm-credit facilities but to provide additional facilities for farm rehabilitation and other special needs. There was need also for lower interest rates, for debt adjustments, for the extension of payment dates, and for stabilization loans on stored commodities. These operations required the Government to assume financial risks beyond those that private institutions could be expected to carry.

This great responsibility has been met by the Farm Credit Administration and the farmers of this Nation have been provided with long-term amortized loans for the protection and purchase of their farms, and with short-term production loans for livestock and crop management, at the lowest rates of interest ever offered.

This "demonstrated failure," as the sponsor of this G. O. P. farm committee terms the administration's farm policy, includes also the Rural Electrification program, which during the past 4 years has been the major agency in bringing light to more than 1,500,000 farm families, an increase from 10 percent of American farms that had central-station electricity in 1935, to more than 22 percent of the total by 1939.

Through the Farm Security Administration, more than 600,000 needy farm families have received help in planning and financing their farm enterprises, assistance never before available.

As a member of the Agricultural Committee of this Congress, I have been gratified by the constructive growth of our land-grant colleges, experiment stations, and the extension service under the stimulus of recovery and the Federal farm program. Research and education in agriculture, with few exceptions, are functioning as never before in this Nation, in their job of serving rural people.

The administration's farm policy, which the Republican minority leader terms a "demonstrated failure" has achieved the greatest awakening of public interest in the conservation of our soil, trees, water, and human resources depending on these basic natural resources, that has occurred in the history of this or any other civilized nation. The 6,000,000 farmers cooperating in the agricultural-conservation programs of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are best fitted to judge the soundness of the present program that encourages the balancing and diversification of crop rotations, the conservation of the soil, the use of lime and fertilizer, the planting of trees, and the construction of terraces, and many other things in which they are cooperating with the Federal program in improving the land upon which they depend for the proper maintenance of their families, and upon which the future prosperity of this Nation depends.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman have the courtesy to yield at that point?

Mr. HOOK. Since the gentleman puts it that way, I cannot decline.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Does the gentleman from Michigan realize that the statistics of the Department of Agriculture prove—and he may obtain this information from Bulletin 200, issued by the Statistical Division of the Department of Agriculture; and he may likewise obtain this same information from the Wisconsin Department of Dairying—does the gentleman realize that for the 6-year period prior to the present administration, from 1926 to 1932, the average price of butter that we received as farmers in Minnesota was 35 cents? Does the gentleman realize that during the first 6 years of the present administration we have received an average of 26 cents; in other words, one-third less than we received under the Republican administration that the gentleman is, with very poor taste, endeavoring to denounce at this time? [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Certainly, with a $6,000,000,000 subsidy. I do not know from what section of the State the gentleman comes, but I do know that the farmers of my district receive practically double their former price for cream.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. We have the figures to quote on that, too, if the gentleman wishes them in the Record.

Mr. HOOK. I cannot yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I am really sorry for some of my Republican friends who, under the spur of the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, went forth to search for the impossible—an issue that would persuade the farmers that the Republican Party is their only friend, their champion, their protector. What must have been their feeling when farmer after farmer in those traditionally Republican States of Iowa and Kansas got up in meeting and declared that the Republicans had better not try to mess up the triple A farm program. Let me quote just a few. In Des Moines, Earl Elijah, a livestock-association official, said:

It would be a mistake for any Republican to come into Iowa and try to upset all the things Henry Wallace has been trying to do.

Mr. Elijah confessed that he had voted for Hoover twice, but he has learned much since then.

Oscar Heline, of Marcus, president of the Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association, said:

Don't scuttle the present farm program.

William F. Yungclas, of Webster:

It would be folly for any thinking farmer to want to drop the present program.

A. C. Lewis, of Macedonia:

We should not scrap anything that's good, no matter what party started it.

Lyle Embrie, of Red Oak:

Unless Republicans adopt the A. A. A. program, they will be sinking the party ship just as effectively as the Nazis sunk the Graf Spee.

And in Kansas, the home of my very dear and able friend, the distinguished chairman of this Republican Committee of 46, L. A. Dubbs, of Ness County, a farmer-member of the Kansas Legislature, startled the members of that committee by saying:

I farm a little farm in Ness County that has been in the family for 60 years. We have seen them come and go. In the nineties nearly everyone left. My folks stayed because they were too poor to get away. The grasshoppers left and the rains came, and other folks came in. A lot of them left again in 1910. The rains came again and they came back. Way back in the seventies there had been another migration back to Indiana. But this time the folks, most of them, stayed. The A. A. A. made it possible. Without the A. A. A. few of us would be here. The last 6 years have been the worst in 60. The reasons why we folks in the high plains believe in the A. A. A. is because it gives us promise of a permanent agriculture. We don't have to pack up and leave every time there is a succession of drought years.

These quotations, my friends, are from the Republican newspaper, The Topeka Capital, owned and edited by a distinguished Senator from the Sunflower State.

Listen to what a big Republican wheat farmer has to say:

The Government farm policy has enabled farmers to make their first real profits in more than 10 years.

This western wheat grower further states:

I would have been forced to sell my wheat at 32 cents a bushel at harvest time had it not been possible for me to obtain a Government loan at 49 cents.

We get the benefit of the increased price that almost always comes along after harvest time, instead of speculators who formerly made more money out of the farmers' crops than the farmers themselves.

Such a policy means the difference between a fair profit and near bankruptcy. The Federal program is a safeguard for consumers as well as growers, because the Government will release its wheat holdings during years of short crops, at a fair price, rather than at gouging figures, as would be done by speculators.

And yet the distinguished leader of the minority says the farm program is "a demonstrated failure." In the light of the testimony given before this Republican Committee of 46, I wonder if my good friend from Kansas, the chairman of this committee, agrees with the gentleman from Massachusetts, or would he not be more inclined to believe that the farm program, as passed by this Congress, is the most effective soil-conservation and market-adjustment program ever placed in the hands of the farmers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will my genial and able friend yield at that point?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That in itself indicates the fairness of the Republican effort to obtain knowledge. We went out in a nonpartisan way to secure evidence from the farmers as to what they thought of the situation. The gentleman can, if he wants to, I am sure, stand up here and for an hour or more read quotations from people who were opposed to the program. Am I not right?

Mr. HOOK. I certainly could not. I do not know of any.
